PREFATORY NOTICE.

THE substance of this Dictionary was collected by Mr. T. W. Beale, formerly a Clerk in the office of the Board of Revenue, N.W.P., at a time when the Secretary was Henry Myers Elliot, afterwards well known as Sir H. M. Elliot, K.C.B. It is probable that, in preparing his extracts from the Muhammadan Histories of India, Elliot availed himself of the aid of Mr. Beale, of whose scholarship Prof. Dowson makes justly deserved mention in the eighth volume of his valuable edition of Elliot's work.* Mr. Beale died at Agra, at a very advanced age, in the summer of 1875; having before his death expressed a wish that I would see his MS. through the press, and reduce the transliteration into conformity with the system then recently adopted by the Government of India, and founded (as I need hardly observe) upon the system of Sir W. Jones.

Accordingly, on the 5th October of that year I laid the MS. before Sir John Strachey, the then Lieut.-Governor, in a letter from which the following is an extract:—

“This is no ordinary book. I have used it as a work of reference for years: and have lately had an opportunity of showing it to the eminent scholar Mr. E. B. Eastwick, C.B., who, I am authorised to say, concurs with me in thinking that the Dictionary will be of unique value to oriental students.”

Sir J. Strachey took up the subject with that enlightened energy which always actuated him in dealing with the past history of the country over whose administration he then presided. The MS. and copyright were acquired at the expense of Government; and it was ultimately resolved—in view of the importance of the work and my own official occupations—that the editing should be entrusted to the Asiatic Society of Bengal.

The Society confided the labour of seeing the Dictionary through the press to their Philological Secretary, Principal Blochmann, of whose qualifications it would be presumptuous to say more than that they have an œcumenical reputation. That distinguished man (of whom it has been observed by Count von Noer that he united the enthusiasm of an artist to the most patient accuracy of research*) undertook the task with his characteristic earnestness and ability. But unhappily for oriental scholarship Mr. Blochmann's lamented death occurred before he had completed the preparation of more than a few sheets; and the duty ultimately reverted to the present Editor. ∴

The substance, as already stated, is almost entirely Mr. Beale's; and I cannot close this notice more fitly than by giving the following extract from the preface originally drafted by himself:—

"In preparing a work of this nature, intended to be used as a work of reference on matters connected with Oriental History, it is proper to state that the greatest care has been taken to ensure accuracy in the narrative, as also in the dates of births, deaths, and other events recorded. . . . Various MSS. have been collated whenever discrepancy was observed. . . . To remove all doubt, chronograms indicating the dates with a certainty not to be found by any other method and written when the events were fresh in the minds of men, have been inserted, when available."

I may, however, add that it has been judged expedient to omit these chronograms, for the most part, in printing the book. In the chapter of Mr. Dowson's book already cited, will be found an account of this species of memoria technica. But it is chiefly interesting as machinery for producing a certain result; and when the result has been produced is not of much more use than the scaffolding of a building when the building is complete.

This notice may well terminate with a repetition of Mr. Beale's guarantee of accuracy: and with an appeal to scholars of larger leisure and opportunities for an indulgent treatment of a work originated by a man who had never been in Europe nor enjoyed the use of a complete Library. Mr. Beale had, however, drawn up a list of more than thirty books in various languages which had furnished him with materials. In addition I have from time to time referred to the translation of the Ain Akbari and its invaluable notes by the late Mr. Blochmann, of which the First Volume (never, alas, continued) was published in Calcutta some years ago; also to the works of Garcin de Tassy and the Baron McG. de Slane.

One word more as to the inexhaustible subject of transliteration. The English, as is well-known, have three methods; the Haphazard (which indeed is no method at all); the Gilchristian; and the popularised Jonesian introduced by the Government of India under the inspiration of Sir W. W. Hunter. None of these is quite satisfactory. The French adopt a system of their own, and so do the Germans. Mr. Beale had followed an orthography, compounded of the two first-named elements, which has been conformed to the third method in printing these pages. The principle is, mainly, to accentuate the long vowels and to express the other vowels by the English sounds in "ruminant" and "obey." G is always to be pronounced hard, as in "give." For the convenience of Continental European scholars the names have also been printed in the Persian character: and it is hoped that no practical difficulty will be experienced by those who may have occasion to use the Dictionary.

ADVERTISEMENT TO SECOND EDITION.

THIS work has been carefully revised and much amplified: and now appears, for the first time, as an English publication. The fresh additions to Mr. Beale's matter are chiefly taken from Ibn Khālikān and the works of Garcin de Tassy, with occasional references to Blochmann, von Noer, and some historical books by the Editor himself and other recent authors. It is still far from complete; but great pains have been taken to make it a trustworthy and useful work of reference to students of Eastern history. "The Imperial Gazetteer of India," 2nd edition, 1886, has been consulted throughout.

It must be understood that Anglo-Indian lives have been omitted: they will be found, in some instances from the pen of the present Editor, in the Dictionary of National Biography: to have included them here would have made the book too bulky. Similarly, Chinese matter is excluded; indeed, Sinology forms a distinct department of research.

A'azz-Uddin (اعز الدين), Prince, second son of Shāh 'Alam Bahādur Shāh. He was born on the 17th Zi-Qa'da 1074, and appears to have died early.

A'azz-Uddin (اعز الدين), son of Mu'izz-uddin Jahāndār Shāh, emperor of Delhi. He was blinded and imprisoned by Farrukh-siyāh in the end of A.H. 1124.

Aba Bakr (ابا بكر), Mirzā or Sultān, the son of Shāhrukh Mirzā, the son of Amīr Timur. He was murdered by order of his brother Mirzā Uluḡ Beg, A.D. 1448 (A.H. 852).

Aba Qaān or Abqa Khan or Abaqā Khan (ابا قان or ابقا خان), a king of Persia, of the tribe of Mughuls or Tatars, and descendant of (Timur) Khān, succeeded his father Hulakū Khān in February, A.D. 1265 (Rabī' us-Sanī, A.H. 663), and was crowned on Friday the 19th June following (3rd Rammān). He was a prince who added to the qualifications of courage and wisdom those of moderation, clemency, and justice. His ambassadors were introduced in 1274 to the ecclesiastical Synod at Lyons. He proved a somewhat formidable neighbour to the Christians who settled at Jerusalem. The intrigues of his court embittered the latter years of his reign; and his days were believed by many to have been shortened by poison given to him by his minister Khwāja Shams-uddin Muhammad, which occasioned his death on Wednesday the 1st April, A.D. 1282 (20th Zil-hijja, A.H. 680), after a reign of 17 years and some months. He had married the daughter of Michael Palaeologus, emperor of Constantinople, who had been betrothed to his father, but arrived at Marāgha in Tabriz, the seat of his government, after the death of that prince. Abū Khān was succeeded by his brother, Nekodār Khān (q.v.), who embraced Muhammadanism, and took the title of Ahmad.

'Abbas (عباس), the son of 'Abd-ul-Mutalib, and uncle of the prophet Muhammad. He at first opposed the ambitious views of his nephew, but when defeated in the battle of Badr, he was reconciled to him, warmly embraced his religion, and thanked heaven for the prosperity and the grace which he enjoyed as a Muslimān. He served the cause of Muhammad at the battle of Hunain by recalling his dismayed troops to the charge, and inciting them boldly to rally round their prophet, who was near expiring under the scimitars of the Sakaftes. He died on the 21st of February, A.D. 656 (17th Rajab, A.H. 32); and 100 lunar years after Abul-'Abbās, surnamed As Saffah, one of his descendants, laid the foundation of the 'Abbās or Abbaside family of the Caliphs in Baghdād, which continued for 324 lunar years. The tomb of 'Abbās is in Madīna.

'Abbasa (عباسة), a sister of Hārūn-ur-Rashīd, the Khulifā of Baghdād, who bestowed her hand on Ja'far Barmakī, his minister, on condition that she abstained from the marriage rights. The promise was forgotten, and the husband's life was sacrificed by the tyrant, and 'Abbāsa was reduced to poverty. This circumstance took place in A.D. 803 (A.H. 187). There are still extant some Arabic verses which beautifully celebrate her love and her misfortunes. [See Ja'far ul-Barmakī.]

'Abbas 'Alī (عباس علی), a physician, and one of the Persian magi, who followed the doctrines of Zoroaster. He wrote, A.D. 980, a book called Royal Work, at the request of the son of the reigning Khulifā of Baghdād, to whom it was dedicated. It was translated into Latin by Stephen of Antioch in A.D. 1127.

'Abbas 'Alī (عباس علی), Mirzā, whose poetical name was Betab, the son of Nawāb Sayadat 'Alī Khān, son of Ghulām Muhammad Khān, the son of Faiz-ullah Khān, Nawāb of Rāmpūr in the 18th century.

'Abbas Bin-'Alī Shirwani (عباس بن علی شروانی), author of a history, containing the narrative of Sher Shāh the Atghān, who drove Humāyūn from Hindūstān, A.D. 1539, and mounted the throne of Delhi. This work was dedicated to the emperor Akbar, and is called Tuhfa-i-Akbar-shāhi. The first part of this work was translated into Urdū by Mazhar 'Alī Khān in the time of Lord Cornwallis, and is entitled Tarikh-i-Sher Shāhi.

[Vide Dowson, Elliot's History of India, iv. p. 301.]

'Abbas Mirza (عباس مرزا), a Persian prince, son of Fath 'Alī Shāh, was born in 1783. He died in 1833. His death was a great loss to his country, although he could not prevent the encroachments of Russia. His eldest son, Muhammad Mirzā, mounted the throne in 1834, on the death of Fath 'Alī, under the united protection of England and Russia.

'Abbas Mirza (عباس مرزا), whose title was Nawāb Iqtidār-uddaula, was the author of a Maṣnawī in Urdū verse, containing a history of Christ. He was living in Lucknow in A.D. 1849, and was then about eighty years of age.

'Abbas (Shah) I. (عباس شاه), surnamed the Great, and seventh king of Persia of the Safawī family, was born on Monday the 29th of January, A.D. 1571 (1st Ramaṣān, A.H. 978). He was proclaimed king of Persia, in his sixteenth year, by the chiefs of Khurāsān, and took possession of the throne during the lifetime of his father, Sultān Sikaudar Shāh, surnamed Muhammad Khudābanda, A.D. 1588, (A.H. 996). He was the first who made Iṣfahān the capital of Persia. He was brave and active, and enlarged the boundaries of his dominions. He took, conjointly with the English forces, in A.D. 1622, the island of Ormuz, which had been in the possession of the Portuguese for 122 years. He reigned 44 lunar years, was contemporary with Akbar and Jahāngīr, and died on Thursday the 8th of January, A.D. 1629 (24th Jumāda I., A.H. 1038). His grandson succeeded him and took the title of Shāh Saḡī.

[He was a bigoted Shī'a. In later histories he is generally called مانی mānī; vide Blochmann's Ain Translation, i. pp. 445, 453.]

'Abbas (Shah) II. (عباس شاه ثانی), great grandson of Shāh 'Abbās I. succeeded his father Shāh Saḡī on the throne of Persia in the month of May, A.D. 1642 (Safar A.H. 1052), when he was scarcely ten years old. Qandahār, which was lost by his father, was recovered by this prince before he was sixteen years of age. Shāh Jahān made many efforts to recover this city, but with no success. He reigned 25 lunar years, and was cut off by the lues venerea in his 34th year, on the 26th August, A.D. 1666 (5th Rabi'-ul-awwal, A.H. 1077). He was succeeded by his son Saḡī Mirzā, who took the title of Shāh Sulaimān. According to Charḡn, he died on the 25th September which corresponds with the 5th Rabi'-uṣ-Ṣānī.

[Vide Orme's Historical Fragments of the Mogul Empire, p. 196.]

Abdal (ابدال), son of 'Alī Bāy, ruler of Little Tibet during the reign of Shāh Jahān. He was captured, and Adham Khān was appointed governor of Little Tibet.

[Vide Dowson, Elliot's History of India, vii. p. 63.]

Abdal Chak (ابدال چک), uncle of Yūsuf Khān Chak (last King of Kashmir, who succumbed to the emperor Akbar).

[Vide Ain Translation, i. p. 478.]

Abdali (ابدالي), vide Ahmad Shāh Abdālī.

Abdals, the Forty, hence called Chihil-tawān. After Muhammad's death, the Earth complained to God that she would henceforth be no longer honored by prophets walking on her surface. God promised that there should always be on earth forty (or, according to some, seventy-two) holy men, called Abdāls, for whose sake he would not destroy the earth. The chief of the Forty is called 'Ghaṣṣ.'

Abdar Begam (آبدار بیگم), one of the concubines of the emperor Akbar.

'Abdi (عبدی), his proper name is not known. He is the author of the work called Tarjama-i-Takmila, a translation of 'Iṣṣā'i's Legends of Qāḍirya saints into Persian verse, completed in A.D. 1641, A.H. 1051, under Shāh Jahān.

'Abdi of Tun (میدی), a poet who had a predilection for Maṣnawī, and is the author of the Gauhar-i-Shūh-wār, which is in the style of Nizāmī's Makhzan-ul-Awār. He came to celebrity in Khurāsān in A.D. 1545, A.H. 950.

[Vide Khwāja Zain-ul-'Abidin 'Alī 'Abdi, who appears to be the same person.]

'Abdi (عبدی), and Nāwedi (نویدی), vide Khwāja Zain-ul-'Abidin 'Alī 'Abdi.

Abdi (ابدی), author of a heroic poem called Anwar-nūma in praise of Nawāb Auwar-uddin Khān of the Karnāṭik, in which the exploits of Major Lawrence and the first contests between the English and French in India are recorded with tolerable accuracy.

[Vide Abjadī.]

'Abdul-'Alī (Maulana) (عبد العلی), entitled Bahrul-ulām (i.e. The Sea of Knowledge), the son of Mullā Nizām-uddin Sihālī. He is the author of the Arkān Arba' Paḡah and several other works. He died A.D. 1811, A.H. 1226.

'Abdul-'Azīz bin 'Umar (عبد العزيز بن عمر), son of 'Umar (Omar), the second Khālifa after Muhammad. He did not succeed his father in the khilāfat. The Muhammadans consider him a great lawyer.

'Abdul-'Aziz (عبد العزيز), author of the Tarikh-i-Ismā'īlī, containing the Life of the famous Sadr-uddin Muhammad Husaini Gesū-Dgrāg, whose tomb is held in the highest veneration at Kulbarga in the Deccan. This work was dedicated to Ahmad Shāh Bahmani in A.D. 1445.

'Abdul-'Aziz bin Ahmad Dairini (Shaikh) (ديريني), an Arabian author who died A.D. 1294.

'Abdul-'Aziz Khan, vide 'Aziz.

'Abdul-'Aziz (Maulana Shah), son of Shāh Waliullah, a learned Musalmān of Dehli. He is the author of a Persian commentary on the Qurān, entitled Tafsir Path-ul-'Aziz, and several other works. His death took place in June A.D. 1824 (7th Shawwal, A.H. 1239).

'Abdul-'Aziz, emperor of Turkey, son of Sultān Mahmūd, succeeded his brother Sultān 'Abdul-Majid on the 25th June, 1861, A.H. 1277, deposed in 1875.

'Abdul-'Aziz (Shaikh) (عبد العزيز شيخ), of Dehli, a learned man who died in the time of the emperor Akbar, A.D. 1567, A.H. 975. 'Abdul-Qādir of Bidāon found the chronogram of his death in the following words—"Quthi-Tariqat-numā."

'Abdul-'Aziz (Shaikh) (عبد العزيز شيخ).

His poetical name was 'Izzat. He held a manāsh of 700 in the reign of Aurangzib, and died in the year A.D. 1680, A.H. 1091. He is the author of a poem called Siqi-nūma.

[For a detailed biography vide the Majma'-un-Nafīs.]

'Abdul-Baqi (عبد الباقي), author of the Ma'naw-i-Rahīmī, or Memoirs of 'Abdur-Rahīm Khān, Khān-Khān, and of all the illustrious nobles, authors, and poets, who resided at the court of Akbar. He completed his work in A.D. 1616, A.H. 1025, and died about the year A.D. 1642, A.H. 1052, in the reign of Shāh Jahān.

'Abdul-Baqi (Maulana). He was a Sadr (or Judge) in the beginning of Akbar's reign.

'Abdul-Basit (Maulana) (عبد الباسط مولانا), the son of Rustam 'Ak. He wrote a commentary on the Qurān which he left incomplete. He also wrote a work called 'Ajīb-ul-Bayān fī 'ulum-ul-Qurān. He died in A.D. 1808, A.H. 1223.

'Abdul-Fattah (عبد الفتاح), author of the Persian work called Aurād-i-Ghaṣṣiyā on Sufism, and of one entitled Jawā-hir-ul-Kāfiyāt.

'Abdul-Ghaṣṣar (عبد الغفار), whose full title is Shaikh Najmuddin 'Abdul-Ghaṣṣar ush-Shāfi' Qazwini, is the author of the Hawā, Fiqah, Lubāb, and Sharh Lubāb. He died in the year A.D. 1265, A.H. 666.

'Abdul-Ghaṣṣar, of Lahor (عبد الغفور لاهوری), was an author and a pupil of 'Abdur-Rahmān Jāmi. He died in the year A.D. 1506, A.H. 912.

'Abdul-Ghaṣṣar (Shah) (عبد الغفور شاه), commonly called Bābā Kapūr, a saint whose tomb is at Gwāliar. He was a native of Kālpī, and a disciple of Shāh Madār. He died in the year A.D. 1571, A.H. 979. [Vide An Translation, i. p. 539.]

'Abdul-Ghaṣṣar (Shaikh), of Āzampūr in Sumbhal, a pupil of 'Abdul Quddūs. He died in A.H. 993.

'Abdul-Ghani (Mirza) (عبد الغني مرزا), a native of Kashmīr, wrote under the name of Qabūl. He died in the year A.D. 1726, A.H. 1139. [Vide Qabūl.]

'Abdul-Haqq (Shaikh) (عبد الحق), of Dehli, surnamed

"Muḥaddis," son of Saif-uddin, son of Sa'd-ullah Turk. He was a descendant of one of Amīr Tūmur's followers, who had remained at Dehli, after the return of the conqueror to his native land. He is the author of the Tarikh-i-Haggi, which is more frequently styled Turkh-i-'Abdul-Haqq, compiled in the 42nd year of the emperor Akbar's reign, A.D. 1596, A.H. 1005. He went on a pilgrimage to Mecca and Madīna, where he dwelt for a long time, and wrote works upon many subjects—Commentaries, Travels, Sūfi Doctrines, Religion and History, and his different treatises amount altogether to more than one hundred. The best known are the Madīna Sakīna, Malla-ul-Ashwār, Madarij-un-Ashwār, Jash-ul-qulūb, Akhbār-ul-Ashwār, a book on the saints. He was born in the month of January, A.D. 1551, Muḥarrum, A.H. 958. In the year A.D. 1637, although he was then nearly ninety years old, he is said to have been in possession of his faculties. He died in the year A.D. 1642, A.H. 1052, aged sixty-four lunar years; lies buried on the bank of the Hānū Shāmei in Dehli, and now holds a high rank among the saints of Hindūstān. His son Shāikh Nūr-ul-Haqq is the author of the Zubdat-ul-Tawārīkh.

'Abdul-Hakim of Siyalkot (عبد الحکیم) was a pupil of Maṭlānā of Kamāl-uddin of Kashmir. He wrote the Hāshiyā, or marginal commentary, on the Tafsīr Basūwī, and a Hāshiyā on the marginal notes of 'Abdu'l-Ghaffar. He died in the year A.D. 1656, A.H. 1066.

'Abdul-Halim bin-Muhammad (عبد الحليم), surnamed "Kanalizāda," an Arabian author, who died in the year A.D. 1589, A.H. 997.

'Abdul-Hamid, vide Ahmad IV, emperor of Turkey.

'Abdul-Hamid of Lahore was the author of the Pādshāh-nāma-i-Shāhjahān.

[Regarding this history, vide Dowson, Elliot's History of India, vii. p. 3.]

'Abdul-Hasan (Kazi), author of an Arabic work on Jurisprudence called Ahkām-us-Sulṭānī.

'Abdul-Hay (Mir) Sadr (عبد الحی صدر میر), a learned man who wrote a chronogram on the death of the emperor Humāyūn, and one on the accession of Akbar in A.D. 1556, A.H. 963.

[Vide Āin Translation i. p. 480.]

'Abdul-Jalil (Mir or Sayyid) (عبد الجلیل بلگرامی میر)

of Bilgrām in Audh. He was a great scholar and an elegant poet, and his poetical name was Wāsiṭ. In A.D. 1699, A.H. 1111, he visited the camp of Aurangzib at Bijāpūr; and being presented to that monarch by Mirzā 'Alī Beg, the royal intelligencer, obtained a manṣab and jāgīr, with the joint offices of Bakhshi (Paymaster) and News-writer of Gujrat; from which place he was removed to Bhakar in Sindh, with similar appointments. Through some intrigues at court, he was recalled from Bhakar in the reign of Farrukh-siyar in A.D. 1714, A.H. 1126, but upon circumstances being explained, he was restored in the most honourable manner, and was at length permitted to officiate by deputy, whilst he himself remained at Delhi until A.D. 1721, A.H. 1133, when he resigned in favour of his son, Mir Sayyid Muhammad. He was the son of Sayyid Ahmad of Bilgrām, was born on the 2nd June, A.D. 1661; 13th Shawwāl 1071, and died on Monday the 28th

December, A.D. 1724; 23rd Rabbī' I. 1137; aged 66 lunar years, and is buried at Bilgrām close to his father's tomb. He is the author of several works, one of which containing letters written in Persiap is called Adāb-ul-Murūṭīn.

[For a detailed biography, vide Azūd's Sarir-i-Azūd, and the Tabaqat-un-Nāzirin by 'Abdul-Jalil's son.]

'Abdul-Qadir (Sultan) was the descendant of a Marabout family of the race of Hāshim, who trace their pedigree to the Khalīfas of the lineage of Fātima. His father died in 1834. His public career began at the time of the conquest of Algiers by the French. In 1847, he was defeated and surrendered himself, but was afterwards permitted to reside in Constantinople. He died in 1873.

'Abdul-Qadir bin-Abil-Wafa al-Misri (عبد القادر بن ابی الوفا مصری شیعہ محی الدین), author of the Jawāhir-ul-Mazaya fi Tabaqāt-i-Hanāfiyya, a biographical dictionary giving an account of the Hanafī lawgivers, arranged in alphabetical order. He died in A.D. 1373, A.H. 776.

'Abdul-Qadir Bada'uni (Shaikh) (عبد القادر بدائونی شیعہ) was the son of Mulūk Shāh of Badaon and pupil of Shāikh Mubārak of Nāgor. He is the author of a work called Muntakhab-ut-Tawārīkh. He was a very learned man, and was frequently employed by the emperor Akbar to make translations into Persian from the Arabic and Sanskrit, as in the case of Mu'jam-ul-Buldan, Jāmi'-ul-Rashīdī, and the Rūmiyyan. He also composed a moral and religious work, entitled Najāt-ur-Rashīd, and translated two out of the eighteen Sections of the Mahābhārata, and made an abridgement of the History of Kashmir in A.D. 1591, A.H. 999. The year of his death is not known, but he was living in A.D. 1596, A.H. 1004, in which year he completed the Muntakhab-ut-Tawārīkh. His poetical name was Qādīrī.

[He died at Badaon, in 1604. For a detailed biography, vide Jour. As. So. Bengal, 1869, pt. i. p. 118; and Dowson, v. p. 477.]

'Abdul-Qadir Suhrawardi (عبد القادر سهروردی), author of the work called Adāb-ul-Murīd.

'Abdul-Qadir Bedil (Mirza) (القادر بیدل مرزا)

a celebrated poet, better known by his poetical name of Bedil or Mirzā Bedil. He was a Tartar of the tribe of Birlān; in his youth he was employed by prince A'zam Shāh, son of Aurangzib, but being one day ordered by the prince to write a panegyric in his praise, he resigned the service and never afterwards served any one. He is the author of several works, such as Muḥiṭ A’zam; Chir ‘Unṣur; Inshā-i-Bedil, also called Rug’-i-Bedil; and of a Diwān or book of Odes in Persian, containing 20,000 couplets. He died in the commencement of the reign of Muhammad Shāh, on the 24th November, o.s. 1720; 4th Šafar, a.h. 1133. He is also the author of a work called Nukūt-i-Bedil, containing the memoirs of Shaikh Jumāl, third in descent from the celebrated Shaikh Šafi, and grandfather of Shāh Ismā‘īl Šafavi, king of Persia.

‘Abdul-Qadir Gilani or Jilani or Jili

(Shaikh), also called Pir-i-Dastgīr and Ghauṣ-ḥi-A’zam Məhiy-ud-dīn, a saint, who is said to have performed a number of miracles during his lifetime. He was born in Gilān or Jilān in Persia, in the year A.D. 1078, a.h. 471, and was greatly revered for his learning, his piety, and the sanctity of his manners. He died on the 22nd February, A.D. 1166, 17th Rabi’ II 561, aged 91 lunar years, and is buried at Baghdād, where he held the place of guardian of Abū-Hanīfa’s tomb. The order of Dervishes, called after him the Qādiris acknowledge him as founder. His tomb is held in high veneration amongst the Muhammadans. He is said to have written many books on Mystical Theology, amongst which are the Futūḥ-ul-Ghaib, Malfuzāt-i-Qādir in Arabic, and a translation of the same in Persian, named Malfuzāt-i-Jilāni. Another work of his in Arabic on Jurisprudence is called Ghunnat-ul-Talibin, and another work on Sūfism is entitled Bahjat-ul-Arwā, and a book of Odes called Diwān-i-Ghauṣ-ḥi-A’zam.

[vide Muhammad Qāsim (Sayyid) and Abdāls.]

Some say that he was born at Jil, a village near Baghdād; hence he should be called Jili.

‘Abdul-Qadir (Maulana) (عبد القادر)

died at Constantinople about A.H. 1246, A.D. 1830. He is the author of a history of Afghānistān and Turkistān (A.D. 1740 to 1818), translated into French by C. Schefer, Paris, 1876.]

‘Abdul-Karim, Munshi, who died about thirty years ago. He is the author of the Tārīkh-i-Ahmad, a history of Ahmad Shāh Durrāni and his successors. The Persian text was lithographed in 1266, and an Urdū translation under the title of Wāqiat-i-Durrāni was issued at Kanhpūr in A.H. 1292 (A.D. 1875). ‘Abdul-Karim also wrote a larger work, entitled Muhāraba-i-Kābul o Qandahār (H. 1265), which contains the heroic deeds of Akbar Khān, son of Dost Muhammad Khān, and is chiefly based on the Akbar-nāma written in verse by Munshi Qāsim Jān; and the Tārīkh-i-Panjāb tukh-fatan lil-ahdāb (A.H. 1265) on the Sikh wars.

'Abdul-Quddus Gangohi (Shaikh)

(عبد القدوس گنگوہی شیعہ), a native of Gangoh, near Dehli, was a descendant of Abū-Hanīfa Kūfa, and a famous saint of India. He died on the 27th November, A.D. 1637, 23rd Jumāda II. A.H. 944, the chronogram of the year of his death being "Shaikh-i-ajall." His grandson Shaikh 'Abdun-Nabi held a high post in the reign of Akbar, but was subsequently imprisoned and murdered.

'Abdullah (عبدالله بن عبد المطلب), the father of Muhammad the Prophet, was a younger son of 'Abdul-Muttalib the son of Hashim. He was remarkable for his beauty, and though a driver of camels, he is said to have possessed such merits, that his hand was solicited in marriage by the fairest and the most virtuous of the women of his tribe. He was so universally admired, that on the night of his nuptials one hundred young females expired in despair. His wife Āmina, though long barren, at last became the mother of Muhammad. 'Abdullah died during the lifetime of his father, eight days (some say eight years) after the birth of his son, and left his widow and infant son in very mean circumstances, his whole substance consisting of only five camels and one female Ethiopian slave. 'Abdul-Muttalib, his father was therefore obliged to take care of his grandson Muhammad, which he did and at his death enjoined his eldest son Abū-Talib to provide for him for the future. 'Abdullah died about the year A.D. 571.

'Abdullah bin-'Alī al-Halabi was one of the first writers on Shī'a jurisprudence, as he was amongst the earliest compilers to the traditions of that sect. It does not appear that any of his legal compositions are extant.

'Abdullah (عبدالله بن راحه), son of Rawāḥa, was an Arabian poet, who signalized himself in arms as well as poetry. He became an associate of Muhammad and was sent with the army, of which Zaid was the chief, against the Greeks, and was killed at Mūta in Syria with Zaid and Ja'far the brother of 'Alī, in A.D. 629, A.H. 8.

'Abdullah, son of Zubair (عبدالله بن زبیر) was a Musalmān born at Madīna amongst those who were called "Muḥājirīn," that is to say, fugitives from Mecca. After the battle of Karbalā in A.D. 680, in which Husain the son of 'Alī was slain, the inhabitants of Mecca and Madīna, perceiving that Yazīd did all that lay in his power to suppress the house of 'Alī, made an insurrection against Yazīd, the second khalīfa of the house of Umayyā, and proclaimed 'Abdullah khalīfa in the city of Mecca. The Musalmāns of Syria also, after the death of Yazīd and Mu'āwīya the 2nd, acknowledged him for the space of 128 days, after which time Marwān the son of Hakam was proclaimed khalīfa in the city of Damascus. 'Abdullah still remaining in the city of Mecca, was besieged there in A.D. 691, A.H. 72, by Hajjaj, general of the khalīfa 'Abdul-Malik. The siege lasted 8 months and 17 days, after which 'Abdullah made a sally upon the enemy, destroyed a great number of them with his own hand, and was at length killed fighting valiantly in A.D. 692, A.H. 73. His head was cut off and sent to the khalīfa 'Abdul-Malik.

'Abdullah (عبدالله بن مسعود), son of Mas'ūd, companion of Muhammad. He died in A.D. 652, A.H. 32.

'Abdullah (عبدالله بن عباس), son of

'Abbās, the uncle of Muhammad, was distinguished as a teacher of the sacred book. Before he was ten years of age, he is said to have received inspiration from the angel Gabriel. He was born in A.D. 619, three years before the Hijra (622), and was considered the ablest interpreter of the Qurān then in existence. He was appointed governor of Basra, by the khalīfa 'Alī, and remained there for some time. He then returned to Hijaz, and died at Tāyif, a town lying 60 miles eastward of Mecca, in A.D. 687, A.H. 68, aged 70 years. His mother Umm-ul-Faḍl was the sister of Muḥimma, one of the wives of Muhammad.

'Abdullah (عبدالله بن عمر), son of 'Umar the second khalīfa after Muhammad, was one of the most learned Arabians amongst the contemporaries of Muhammad. He died in A.D. 692, A.H. 73. He is famous for his liberality.

'Abdullah (عبدالله بن یزید), son of Yazīd, was celebrated as a lawyer in the 7th century. He was the disciple of Abū-Huraira and Abū-'Abbas, companions of Muhammad, and lived till the hundredth year of the Hijra, or A.D. 718, A.H. 100.

'Abdullah (عبدالله بن علی), the son of

'Alī, son of 'Abdullah, son of 'Abbās, the uncle of Muhammad, was the uncle of the first two khalīfas of the Abbasides, viz., Abul-'Abbās al-Saffāh and Al-Manṣūr, under whom he served as general against the khalīfa Marwān, and having vanquished that prince, proclaimed his nephew Al-Saffāh. He was guilty of horrible cruelties on the family of the Ommayyads. When his eldest nephew died, his brother Al-Manṣūr took upon him the government, which displeased 'Abdullah so much, that he raised an army against him, but was defeated and afterwards perfidiously murdered in A.D. 754, A.H. 137.

'Abdullah (عبدالله بن راوند), the son of Rāwand, was the founder of an impious sect, who were called after him the Rāwandites, during the Khilāfat of Al-Manṣūr the Abbāsī, about the year A.D. 776.

He is called by some writers Abul-Husain Muslim bin-al-Hajjāj bin-Muslim al-Qushairi, and by others Muslim bin-Hajjāj Nishāpuri, which see.

'Abdullah Ahrar (عبدالله احرار), author of the Maḥfūzāt-i-Khwāja 'Abdullah, containing the doctrines of the Naqshbandis, and of the Anis-us-Sālikin.

'Abdullah Ansari (Khwaja) (عبدالله انصاري), surnamed Shaikh Abū Ismā'il, the son of Abū-Manṣūr, the son of Abū-Ayyūb. He was born at Hirāt in May, A.D. 1006, Shu'bān, A.H. 396, and is the founder of the sect called 'Ansāri in Hirāt and Khurāsān. He died on the 2nd July, A.D. 1088, 9th Rabi' I. A.H. 481, aged 84 lunar years, and is buried at Hirāt, in a place called Gūzurgūh. 'Abdullah was struck with stones by the boys when he was doing penance, and expired.

'Abdullah bin-'Alī bin-'Abu-Shu'ba al-Halabi (عبدالله بن علي بن ابو الحلبى). One of the earliest writers both on the Hadjī and Law of the Imāmiya sect. His grandfather, Abū-Shu'ba, is related to have collected traditions in the time of the Imāms Hasan and Husayn. 'Abdullah wrote down these traditions, and presented his work, when completed, to the Imām Ja'far Ṣādiq, by whom it is said to have been verified and corrected.

'Abdullah bin-'Alī, author of the work called Sirak-ul-Hind, which he paraphrased from the Persian into the Arabic, for it had been originally translated from Sanskrit into the Persian.

'Abdullah bin-Fazl-ullah, of Shirāz, author of the Turikh-i-Waqif.

[The first four volumes of this work, which may be looked upon as a continuation of the Jahān-kushā, go as far as Sha'hān, 690 (March, 1300). Subsequently, the author added a fifth volume which relates the events down to the year 728 (A.D. 1328); vide Elliot's History of India, iii. p. 24. 'AN DULLAH is also the name of the author of the Turikh-i-Dāūdī, an Afghan History, written during the reign of Jahāngir; vide Dowson, iv. p. 434.]

'Abdullah Khan Uzbek (عبدالله خان)

(أزبك) was a renowned officer in the time of Akbar. He was made governor of Mandū (Mālwa) in A.D. 1562, and afterwards rebelled against the king, but was defeated and compelled to leave the country.

'Abdullah Khan (عبدالله خان أزبك), chief of the Uzbaks, was the son of Sikandar Khān, the son of Jāni Beg Khān, a descendant of Jūji Khān, son of Chingiz Khan. After the death of his father (during whose life he had several battles with him), he ascended the throne of Samarqand and Bukhārā in A.D. 1582, A.H. 990, invaded Khurāsān, and took Hirāt after a siege of nine months in A.D. 1585, A.H. 993. Its governor, 'Alī Qulī Khān, with several other chiefs were put to death, and the city was plundered. He was contemporary with Shāh 'Abbas of Persia and Akbar Shāh, and died after a reign of 15 years, aged 66, on the 12th February, A.D. 1597, 5th Rajab A.H. 1005. The chronogram of the year of his death is "qiyāmat qāyim shud." He was succeeded by his son 'Abdul-Mūmin Khān.

Khawāja 'Abdullah Ahrār. He came to India in the latter end of the reign of the emperor Akbar, was raised to the rank of 6000 by the emperor Jahāngir, and died in the time of Shāh Jahān, A.D. 1644, 17th Shawwāl 1054, aged nearly 70 years.

'Abdullah Khan (Sayyid) (عبدالله)

(خان), styled Qutbul-Mulk, was governor of Allāhābād from the time of Bahādūr Shāh, emperor of Dehli, and his younger brother Sayyid Husain 'Alī Khān, that of Bihār. These brothers sprung from a numerous and respected family of the descendants of the prophet, who were settled in the town of Bārha, and in consequence of this origin, they are best known in India by the name of Sādāt, or Sayyids, of Bārha. Farrukh-siyar, who by the aid of these two brothers had ascended the throne of Dehli, on his accession in January, A.D. 1713, A.H. 1126, made the former his prime minister, with the title of Qutb-ul-Mulk, and appointed the latter Amir-ul-Umārā. Husain 'Alī Khān was assassinated by Mir Haidar Khān, at the instigation of the emperor Muhammad Shāh, on the 18th September, o.s. 1720, 27th Zil-qā'da 1132, and his brother, 'Abdullah Khān, who made some resistance, was defeated and taken prisoner on the 4th November following, 14th Muharram 1133, and died in confinement, after three years, on the 19th September, o.s. 1723, 30th Zil-bijja 1135. The remains of Husain 'Alī Khān were transferred to Ajmīr for burial. His brother 'Abdullah was buried at Dehli.

'Abdullah Qutb-Shah (عبدالله قطب)

(شاه), the sixth Sultān of the Qutb-Shāhi dynasty of Golkonda in Haidarābād, Deccan. He succeeded Muhammad Qutb-Shāh, and reigned many years under the protection of the emperor Shāh Jahān, to whom he acknowledged himself tributary, and paid an annual sum; but in the year A.D. 1656, A.H. 1066, he displeased that monarch, and brought upon himself much trouble. The emperor had commanded him to permit his prime minister, Mir Muhammad Sa'id, and his son Muhammad Amin, to repair with their effects to court. Qutb-Shah disobeyed the mandate, and confining Muhammad Amin, then at Haidarābād, seized part of his wealth. The prince Aurangzib, then governor of the imperial territories in the Deccan, enraged at this conduct, marched to Haidarābād, which he took and plundered. 'Abdullah was obliged to purchase pardon by a contribution of a crore of Rupees, and the gift of his daughter in marriage to the son of his enemy, the prince Sultān Muhammad. From this time 'Abdullah, during the remainder of his life, was, in fact, a vassal of the empire. 'Abdullah Qutb-Shāh died in June, A.D. 1674, Rabi l., A.H. 1086, and was succeeded by his son-in-law, Abul-Hasan.

‘Abdullah Tirmizī (مير عبدالله ترمذي) was an elegant poet and wrote an excellent Nasta‘liq hand, for which he received from the emperor Jahāngir the poetical name of Wasfī, or praise-worthy, and the title of Mushkīn-Qalam, that is to say, out of whose pen flowed musk. He is the author of several poems. His death happened in the year A.D. 1626, A.H. 1035. His tomb stands at a place in Agra, called Naglā Jawāhir.

‘Abdul-Latif (عبداللطيف), a celebrated physician born at Baghdād, A.D. 1261, A.H. 660. To the acquirement of medical knowledge, he applied himself with diligence; and it was chiefly with this view that, in his 28th year, he left Baghdād in order to visit other countries. Having spent a year in Maṣūl, he removed to Damascus in Syria and thence to Egypt, where the people of the highest rank continued to vie with each other in cultivating his friendship. He afterwards travelled to Aleppo, and resided several years in Greece. Of 150 treatises which he composed on various subjects, only one, entitled Historia Egypti Compendium, has survived the ravages of time. He died suddenly at Baghdād in his 65th year.

grandson of Amīr Tinūr. In October A.D. 1449, he defeated his father Mirzā Ulugh Beg in an action near Samargand, took him prisoner and put him to death. He did not long enjoy his success, for he had scarcely reigned six months, when he was murdered by his own soldiers on the 9th May, 1450, 28th Rabi I. A.H. 854. His head was separated from his body and sent to Hīrāt, where it was placed on the gate of the college built by his father.

'Abdul-Majid (Shaikh) عبد المجيد (شيخ), a learned man who flourished in the time of Shāh Jahān, and wrote a history of that emperor entitled Shāh Jahān-nāma.

[This seems to be a mistake for 'Abdul-Hamid.]

'Abdul-Malik (عبد الملك بن مروان), the son of Marwān I and the 5th Khalifa of the house of Umayyad (Ommeiads). He succeeded his father at Damascus, on the 13th April, A.D. 685 (3rd Rumaṣān, A.H. 65), surpassed his predecessors in military exploits, and extended his power as far as Spain in the west, and India in the east. He was so generous as not to take a church from the Christians, which they had refused to grant him when he requested it. He was called Abul-Zubair or 'father of flies' because his breath was so offensive that it killed the very flies that settled on his lips. He reigned upwards of 21 lunar years and died in October, A.D. 705, Shawwāl A.H. 86. He was succeeded by Walid I the eldest of his sixteen sons who greatly extended the Moslem dominions.

'Abdul-Malik (عبد الملك بن صالح),

the son of Subh, the son of 'Abdullah the son of 'Abbas, was related in blood to the prophet Muhammad. He was invited by Harun ur-Rashid the Khalifa of Baghdad with the government of Egypt, in which he continued till about the year A.D. 794 (A.H. 178), when Harun, suspecting that he was engaged in some cabals in order to obtain the empire, threw him into prison, where he remained till Harun's death. His son released him, and invested him with the government of Syria, A.D. 809, A.H. 193.

'Abdul-Malik (عبد الملك ابن طهر),

the son of Zuhr, an eminent Arabian physician, commonly called by Europeans Avicenna, a corruption of Ibn-Zuhr. His full name is Abū-Marwān 'Abdul-Malik ibn-Zuhr. He flourished about the end of the 11th or the beginning of the 12th century. He was of noble descent, and born at Sevilla, the capital of Andalusia, where he exercised his profession with great reputation. His grandfather and father were both physicians. It is said that he lived to the age of 135, that he began to practice at 40 or, as others say, at 20, and had the advantage of a longer experience than almost any one ever had, for he enjoyed perfect health to his last hour. He left a son, also known by the name of Ibn-Zuhr, who followed his father's profession, was in great favour with Al-Manṣūr, emperor of Morocco, and wrote several treatises on physic. Avenar wrote a book, entitled Tayyiqur fi-l-mudāwāt wa-l-tadwīr, which is much esteemed. This work was translated into Hebrew in A.D. 1280, and thence into Latin by Paravicinus, whose version has had several editions. The author added a supplement to it, under the title of Jāmi', or Collection. He also wrote a treatise Fil-adwiyat wal-aghziyat, i.e., of medicines and food, wherein he treats of their qualities. Ibn Zuhr was contemporary with Ibn Rashid (Averroes), who more than once gives him a very high and deserved encomium, calling him admirable, glorious, the treasure of all knowledge, and the most supreme in medicine from the time of Galen to his own.

'Abdul-Malik (عبد الملك), king of Fir and Morocco, was dethroned by his nephew Muhammad, but he afterwards defeated Sebastian, king of Portugal, who had landed in Africa to support the usurper. The two African monarchs and Sebastian fell on the field, A.D. 1575 (A.H. 980).

'Abdul-Malik Samani I (عبد الملك),

(ساماني), a king of the house of Samān and son of Amīr Nuh I whom he succeeded in A.D. 914 (A.H. 343). He reigned in Khurasan and Mawrān-nahr seven and a half years, and was killed by a fall from his horse while playing at ball in A.D. 961 (A.H. 350). He was succeeded by his brother Amīr Maṣṣuf I.

'Abdul-Malik Samani II (عبد الملك),

(ساماني), an Amīr of the house of Samān, was elevated to the throne of Khurasan after his brother Amīr Maṣṣuf II in A.D. 998 (A.H. 388). He was the last Amīr, or king, of the line of the Samanids. He reigned only a few months and was defeated in battle against Sulṭān Mahmūd of Ghazni in A.D. 999, who took possession of his country. 'Abdul-Malik was shortly after murdered.

'Abdul-Manaf (عبد المانف), or 'Abd-

Manaf, (i.e. slave of the idol Manaf) the great-great-grandfather of Muhammad, was the son of Quṣayy, who aggrandised the tribe of the Quraysh by purchasing the keys of the Ka'ba from Abū-Ḥassān, a weak and silly man, for a bottle of wine. Quṣayy was succeeded by his second son 'Abdul-Manaf, to whom the prophetic light, which is said to have manifested itself in his face, gave the right of primogeniture. After his death his son Hashim, the father of 'Abdul-Muṭṭahib, succeeded.

[Abd-Manaf is also the name of a son of the Prophet, who died in infancy.]

'Abdul-Mannan (Mir) (عبد المنان مير), son of Mir Nu'mān Khān, son of Khwāja 'Abdur-Rahīm Khān of Andijān. He served under the celebrated Nizām-ul-Mulk Asaf-Jāh in the Deccan for several years, was an excellent poet, and is known under the poetical name of 'Ibrāt.

'Abdul-Mumin (عبد المومن), a man of obscure origin and son of a potter, who seized the crown of Morocco, after destroying the royal family. He extended his dominions by the conquest of Tunis, Fez, and Tremezcūt. He meditated the invasion of Spain, when death stopped his career in A.D. 1156. His son Yūsuf who succeeded him, carried his ambitions into effect.

'Abdul-Mumin Khan (عبد المومن خان), the son of 'Abdullah Khān,

- chief of the Uzbaks, was raised to the throne after the death of his father at Samarkand in the year A.D. 1597, A.H. 1005. He took Mashud and put the inhabitants to the sword. He was soon after assassinated by his own officers in A.D. 1598, A.H. 1006, the chronogram of his death being contained in the words "Badbakht-i-sar-burida." After his death, Dīn Muḥammad Khān, the son of 'Abdullah Khān's sister, was placed on the throne; but he fell shortly after, in a battle fought at Hirāt, against Shah 'Abbās, king of Persia.

'Abdul-Muttalib (عبد المطلب), the grandfather of Muhammad, the son of Hāshim of the tribe of Quraish. He is said to have been extremely affable and easy of access, as well as just and generous. The well which God blessed Hagar the mother of Ishmael, in the wilderness, is said to have been miraculously discovered to 'Abdul-Muttalib, about five hundred years after it had been filled up by 'Amr, prince of the Jorhomites. The well is called Zamzam by the Arabs and is on the east side of the Ka'ba, covered with a small building and cupola. Its water is highly revered, being not only received with particular devotion by the pilgrims, but also sent in bottles as a great rarity to most parts of the Muhammadan dominions. 'Abdul-Muttalib had ten sons whose names are as follows: Abū-Tālib, the father of 'Alī; 'Abbās, the ancestor of the Abbasides who reigned at Baghdād; Hāma; Hāris; Abū-Jahab; Abdullah, the father of Muhammad; Al-Maqawwam; Zubair; Zīrār; Quṣam. His younger son 'Abdullah, the father of Muhammad, dying eight days after the birth of his son, 'Abdul-Muttalib was obliged to take care of his grandson Muhammad, which he not only did during his life, but at his death enjoined his eldest son Abū-Tālib to provide for him for the future. 'Abdul-Muttalib died about the year A.D. 579, at which time Muhammad was about eight years old.

'Abdul-Nabi (Shaikh) (عبد النبي), son of Shaikh Ahmad, and grandson of Shaikh 'Abdul-Quddūs of Gangoh. He was the tutor of the Emperor Akbar, and was honoured with the post of Sadr-us-Sadr (Chief Justice). No Sadr during any former reign had so much favour. The Emperor was for some time so intimate and unceremonious with him that he would rise to adjust the Shaikh's slippers when he took his leave. At last, through the enmity of Maulānā 'Abdullah Makhdūm-ul-Mulk (vide p. 6) and others, he fell in Akbar's estimation, and began to be treated very differently. He was banished to Mecca, and after his return was murdered in the year A.D. 1583 (A.H. 991).

[Vide 'Āin Translation, i. pp. 538, 546, and p. xiii (Abul-Fazl's Biography); and Proc. As. Soc. Bengal, January, 1876.]

[Vide Proc. As. Soc. Bengal, 1873, p. 12.]

'Abdul-Rahim bin-Ahmad Sur (عبد الرحيم بن احمد سور), author of the

[Vide Jour. As. Soc. Bengal, for 1868, p. 9.]

'Abdul-Rahim Khan (عبد الرحيم خان), Khān Khānān, commonly called Khān Mirzā, was the son of Barām Khān, the first prime-minister of the emperor Akbar. He was born on the 17th December, A.D. 1556 (14th Šafar A.H. 964) and was only four years old when his father was assassinated. When of age, he received a command in the force attached to the emperor's person. In 1584 he was one of the commanders of the army sent to Gujarāt, and on the conclusion of the campaign, was made head of the army. On Todar Mal's death (1589) he was made prime-minister. His daughter Jānī Begam was married to prince Dānyāl in the year A.D. 1599 (A.H. 1007). He translated the Wāq'āt-i-Bihārī (Memoirs of the emperor Bābar) from Turkī into Persian. After Akbar's death he served under Jahāngir for 21 years, and died a few months before that emperor, shortly after the suppression of Mahābat Khān's rebellion, in the year A.D. 1627 (A.H. 1036), aged 72 lunar years, and lies buried at Dehli near the Dargāh of Shaikh Nizām-uddīn Auliya, where his tomb is to be seen to this day. His poetical name was Rahīm.

'Abdul-Rahim (عبد الرحيم), one of the principal nobles who joined Prince Khusrāu in his rebellion against his father Jahāngir in A.D. 1606. He was taken prisoner with the prince and brought to the emperor at Lāhor; by whose order he was sewn up in the raw hide of an ass, kept constantly moist with water, in which miserable condition he remained twenty-four hours. He was afterwards pardoned.

[Vide Āin Translation, i. p. 455.]

'Abdul-Rahim Khan (Khawaja) (عبد الرحيم خان خواجه), the son of Abul-

Qāsim. He was a native of Andijān in Fārgāna, came to India in the reign of the emperor Shāh Jahān, and served under Aurangzib for several years. He died in A.D. 1692 (A.H. 1103.)

'Abdul-Rahman (عبد الرحمن ابن), the son of Muljim, the murderer of 'Alī, son-in-law of Muhammad. He was killed by Husayn, son of 'Alī, in January, A.D. 661 (Ramaḡān A.H. 40).

[No Shi'a would now-a-days call his son 'Abd-ul Raḡmān, just as no orthodox Muhammadan would call his son Yazid.]

'Abdul-Rahman (عبد الرحمن ابن), the son of Abū-Bakr, first Khalifa after Muhammad, and brother to 'Ā'ishā, the favourite wife of the prophet. He died in the same year that his sister died, i.e., in A.D. 678, A.H. 58.

'Abdul-Rahman (عبد الرحمن بن), the son of Muhammad

Hanif son of 'Alī. He raised a formidable power against Hajjāj, the governor of Arabia, defeated him in several battles, and at last, rather than fall into his hands, threw himself from a house and died, A.D. 701, A.H. 82.

'Abdul-Rahman, a popular Afghān

poet of Peshāwar. His verses are written with fiery energy, which has made them popular amongst a martial people, and yet with natural simplicity which is charming to the lover of poetry. Not far from the city is his grave, situated on the road to Hazār-khāna, the poet's native village.

'Abdul-Rahman (عبد الرحمن),

a Saracen general of the Khalifa Hishām (called by some of our authors Abderames) who penetrated into Aquitaine and Poitou, and was at last defeated and slain by Charles Martel near Poitiers, in A.D. 732, A.H. 114.

'Abdul-Rahman Mustafa (عبد الرحمن مصطفى), who in Watkin's Biographical Dictionary is called Babacauschi, was mufti of the city of Caffa, in Tauris. He wrote a book called The Friend of Princes. He died in A.D. 1381, A.H. 783.

'Abdul-Rahman (عبد الرحمن), also called by old writers Abderames, a descendant of the Khalifas of the house of Umāyya. He was invited to come to Spain, in A.D. 756, A.H. 139, by the Saracens who had revolted; and after he had conquered the whole kingdom, he assumed the title of king of Cordova. He was the founder of the Ummayyids of Spain, who reigned above two hundred and fifty years from the Atlantic to the Pyrenees. He died in A.D. 790, A.H. 174, after reigning 32 years.

'Abdul-Rahman Ichi (عبد الرحمن ايجي), or Iji, the father of 'Qāzī

'Aẓd-uddīn of Shīrāz, a learned man and native of Ich, a town situated 40 farsakhs from Shīrāz.

'Abdul-Rahman (عبد الرحمن), called by us Abderames, a petty prince in the kingdom of Morocco, who murdered 'Imād-uddīn, his predecessor and nephew, and was himself after a long reign assassinated by a chieftain whose death he meditated, A.D. 1503, A.H. 911.

'Abdul-Rahman, the Sultān of Fez and Morocco, born 1778, was rightful heir to the throne when his father died; but was supplanted by his uncle, after whose death he ascended the throne in 1823. His eldest son Sidi Muhammad (born 1803) is heir to the throne.

'Abdul-Rahmān Khan (عبد الرحمن خان), Nawāb of Jhajjar, who on account of his rebellion during the mutiny of the native troops in A.D. 1857, A.H. 1274, was found guilty and executed at Delhi before the Kotwālī on the 23rd December of the same year. He was a descendant of Najābat 'Alī Khān, to whom in 1806, when Sir G. Barlow was Governor-General of India, were granted the large territorial possessions held by the late Nawāb, yielding a yearly revenue of 12½ lacs, and consisting of Jhajjar, Badli, Kāraund with its fort, Nārnaul, etc. In addition to these, expressly for the purpose of keeping up 400 horsemen, the territory of Badwān and Dadri was granted. Up to May, 1857, he had always been looked upon as a staunch friend of the British Government; but when the rebellion burst forth, he forgot all his obligations to the British, and sided with the rebels.

'Abdul-Rahman Khan (الرحمن)

(خان), Šadr-us-Sūdūr of Kānpūr (Cawnpore), a rebel and a staunch supporter of Nanā Šahib, when that rebel commenced his career. He was hanged at Kānpūr, in June, 1858, A.H. 1274.

'Abdul-Rahman Sulami (Shaikh), author of the Tabaqāt Šifīya, a work on Sufism. He died in A.D. 1021, A.H. 412. He is also called Abū-'Abdur-rahmān.

'Abdul-Rahman, son of 'Abdul-'Azīz Naqshbandī, the father-in-law of Salaimān Shikoh, who married his daughter in A.H. 1062, the 26th year of Shāh Jahān.

'Abdul-Rahman Chishtī (عبد الرحمن), author of the Mir-āt-i-Chishtī, • Mas'ūdī, which contains the legendary history of Sultān Mas'ūd Ghāzī, buried at Bahraich in Audh. 'Abdur-rahmān died during the reign of Aurangzib in A.H. 1094.

[For extract translations vide Dowson, Elliot's History of India, ii. p. 513. An Urdu translation of the Mir-āt-i-Mas'ūdī was lithographed at Kānpūr A.H. 1287, under the title of Qizā-nama-i-Mas'ūdī.]

'Abdul-Rashid (عبد الرشيد), was the son of Sultān Mas'ūd, of Ghazni. He began to reign, after deposing and confining his brother 'Alī, in A.D. 1052, A.H. 443. He had reigned but one year, when Tughril, one of his nobles, assassinated him and mounted the throne of Ghazni. Tughril reigned only forty days, and was murdered on the Persian New Year's day in March A.D. 1053, A.H. 444, when Farūkhzād, a brother of 'Abdur-Rashid, succeeded him.

'Abdul-Rashid (Mir) (عبد الرشيد مير), son of 'Abdul-Ghafūr-ul-Musainī. He lived in the time of the emperor Shāh Jahān, and wrote chronograms on his accession to the throne of Dehli in A.D. 1628, A.H. 1037. He is the author of the Persian Dictionary called Farhang-i-Rashidī, also of the Muntakhab-ul-Lughāt, a very useful Arabic Dictionary, with Persian explanations, dedicated to the emperor Shāh Jahān. Another work of his is called Risāla-i-Mu'arrabāt.

The Farhang-i-Rashidī, which was written in 1064 (A.D. 1653), is the first critical dictionary of the Persian language, and has been printed by the Asiatic Society of Bengal.

(خان), son of Sultān Abū-Sa'īd Khān, king of Kāshghar. He was the contemporary of Humāyūn, the emperor of Dehli. Mirzā Haidar, author of the Turkh-i-Rashidī, dedicated his work to him.

[Vide Dowson, Elliot's History of India, v. p. 127; and Ain Translation, i. p. 460.]

'Abdul-Razzaq (عبد الرزاق), a chief of the Sarbadāls of Sabzwār. He was at first employed by Sultān Abū-Sa'īd Khān as a Yasawal, or mace-bearer, but after his death, when confusion took place, he possessed himself of Khurāsān in A.D. 1336, A.H. 737, and was slain, after one year and two months, by his brother, Wajih-uddin Mas'ūd, in September, 1337, Šalar A.H. 738. Mas'ūd reigned seven years, and was deposed by his brother Shams-uddin, who after a reign of four years and nine months was slain at Sabzwār by Haidar Qasāb. After him Amīr Yahya Qarāfi made himself master of Khurāsān, and gave the command of his troops to Haidar Qasāb. In the month of December A.D. 1353, A.H. 754, Yahya slew Tughān Timur, a descendant of the Mughul kings, in battle, and was himself slain by his nobles, after he had reigned four years and eight months. After him they raised Khwāja Lutf-ullah, the son of Khwāja Mas'ūd to the masnad. He was slain after a short time by Husayn Dāmghāni, who reigned four years and four months, when Khwāja 'Alī Mu'ayyad slew him, and reigned eighteen years in Khurāsān, after which he made over his country to Amīr Timur, who passed Khurāsān in A.D. 1380, A.H. 782. 'Alī Mu'ayyad was killed in a battle in the year 1386, A.H. 788, and with him terminated the power of the Sarbadāls.

'Abu-'Abdullah (أبو عبدالله حميدى), Hamidī, son of Abū-Naṣr, author of the work called Jam'batna-l-Ṣaḥīḥa, and the history of Andalusia, called Tarikh Undulus. The former comprehends the collections of al-Bukhārī and Muslim, and has a great reputation. He died in A.D. 1096 (A.H. 488).

Abu-'Abdullah Maghribi (أبو عبدالله مغربى), named Muhammad bin-Isma'īl, tutor of Ibrāhīm Khawās, Ibrāhīm Shaibān of Kirmānshāh, and of Abū-Bakr of Bikanā, and pupil of Abul-Husain Zarīn of Hurāt. Abū-'Abdullah died in the year A.D. 911 (A.H. 299), and was buried on Mount Sinai.

Abu-'Abdullah Muhammad (أبو عبدالله محمد), son of Sufyān, a native of Qairawān in Africa. He is the author of the work called Hādī. He died in A.D. 1024 (A.H. 415.)

Abu-'Abdullah Muhammad bin-'Alī ar-Rahibi (أبو عبدالله محمد), author of a short treatise, entitled the Digḥyat-ul-Bāḥiḥ consisting of memorial verses, which give an epitome of the law of inheritance according to the doctrine of Zaid bin-Ṣābit.

Abu-'Abdullah Muhammad Ha'kim Kabir (أبو عبدالله محمد حاكم كبير), author of the work called Musnadrik. He died in A.D. 1014, A.H. 405.

Abu-'Abdullah Muhammad bin-Muhammad al-Nu'manī, surnamed Shaikh Mufid and Ibn-Mu'allim, was a renowned Shī'a lawyer. Abk-J'adar ut-Tūsī describes him in the Fihrist as the greatest orator and lawyer of his time, the most ancient Mujtahid, the most subtle reasoner, and the chief of all those who delivered Fatwas. Ibn-Kasir-usb-Shāmī relates that, when he died, Ibn-Naqib, who was one of the most learned of the Sunni doctors, adorned his house, told his followers to congratulate him, and declared that, since he had lived to see the death of Shaikh Mufid, he should himself leave the world without regret. Shaikh Mufid is stated to have written 200 works, amongst which one, called the Irshād, is well-known. He also wrote many works on the law of inheritance. His death took place in A.D. 1022, A.H. 413, or as some say A.D. 1025, A.H. 416.

'Abu-'Abdullah Muhammad bin-'Umar al-Waqidi (أبو عبدالله محمد بن عمر الوائدي), an author who wrote in Arabic the work, called Tabaqāt Wāqidi, containing the history of the conquest of Syria by the generals of 'Umar during the years A.D. 688-9. He is said by some to have died in the year A.D. 821, A.H. 219, but as he makes mention of Al-Mu'tasim Billah, whose reign began in 833, he must have died about the year 834 and not A.D. 824, A.H. 209. [vide Wāqidi]

Abu-'Abdullah Muhammad bin-Husain al-Shaibani (أبو عبدالله محمد بن حسين الشيباني), commonly called Imām Muhammad, was born at Wāsiṭ in 'Irāq-Arab in A.D. 749, A.H. 132, and died at Rai, the capital of Khurāsān in A.D. 802, A.H. 187. He was a fellow pupil of Abū-Yūsuf, under Abū-Hanīfa, and on the death of the latter pursued his studies under the former. His chief works are six in number of which five are considered of the highest authority, and cited under the title of the Zāhir-ul-Riwayāt; they are Jāmi-ul-Kabir, Jāmi-us-Saghīr, the Mabsūt fī furū'-il-Hanaḥiya, the Zuyūdāt fī furū'-il-Hanaḥiya, the Suyar-ul-Kabir wal Saghīr; and the Nawādir, the sixth and last of the known compositions of Imām Muhammad, which, though not so highly esteemed as the others, is still greatly respected as an authority.

Abu-'Abdullah Salih, vide Abū-'Alī, Wazir of Mansūr I.

Abu-'Abdul-Rahman Ahmad bin-'Ali bin-Shu'aib al-Nasai (أبو عبد الرحمن أحمد نسائي), author of the works called Sunan Kubra and Sunan Sughra. The first is a large work on the traditions, but as Nasai himself acknowledged that many of the traditions which he had inserted, were of doubtful authority, he afterwards wrote an abridgement of his great work omitting all those of questionable authenticity, and this abridgement which he entitled Al-Muytaba and is also called Sunan Sughra takes rank as one of the six books of the Sunna. Al-Nasai was born at Nisā a city in Khurasan, in A.D. 830, A.H. 303, and died at Mikkī in A.D. 915.

Abu-Jaʿfar (أبو جعفر). Vide Al-Manṣūr.

Abu-Jaʿfar Ahmād bin-Muhammad

Tahawī (أبو جعفر أحمد بن محمد طحاوي), an inhabitant of Ṭahā, a village in Egypt. He was a follower of the Hanafīya sect, and is the author of the commentary on the Qurʾān, called Aḥkām-ul-Qurʾān, and other works, called Iḥtūtāf-ul-ʿulamā, Maʿānī-l-Aḡr, Nawāḥ and Manāḥ, all in Arabic. He died in the year A.D. 933, A.H. 321. He also wrote an abridgment of the Hanafī doctrines, called the Mukhtaṣir ul-Ṭahāwī.

Abu-Jaʿfar al-Haddād

(أبو جعفر الحداد),

Abu-Jaʿfar al-Saffār

(أبو جعفر الصفار),

two great teachers of the spiritual life; one was a locksmith, and the other a brazier. The latter is called "Al-Haffār," i.e., gravedigger, in Jāmiʿa Naḥḥat-ul-Uns.

Abu-Jaʿfar al-Tabari (أبو جعفر الطبري), son of Jaʿfir, author of the Tārīkh Ṭabaqī, a very authentic history in Arabic, which he wrote in the year A.D. 912. This work was translated and continued by Abū-Muhammad of Tabriz in Persian. Tabari was the founder of the seventh Sunni sect, which did not long survive the death of its author. He was born at Amul in Tabaristan in A.D. 838, A.H. 224, and died at Baghdad in A.D. 922, A.H. 310. He was also the author of a commentary to the Qurʾān. His son, Muḥammad Tabari, was also an author, and died about twenty years later.

Abu-Jaʿfar Muhammad bin-ʿAlī bin-

Babwaihi al-Kumi (أبو جعفر محمد بابوئي الكومي),

surnamed

As-Sadūq, one of the earliest of the many writers on the Qurʾān among the Shīʿas. He lived in the fourth century of the Hijra, and was a contemporary of Ruku-ud-daula Dailami. He was one of the greatest of the collectors of Shīʿa traditions, and the most celebrated of all the Imāmiyya lawyers of Qum in Persia. This writer composed a large and a small Taṣīr. There is considerable uncertainty as to the exact time when he lived. Shaikh Tūsī says in the Fihrist that Abū-Jaʿfar died at Rai in A.H. 331, A.D. 942, but this appears to be erroneous. Shaikh Najāshī, who died in A.D. 1014, states that Abū-Jaʿfar visited Baghdad whilst yet in the prime of life, in A.H. 355, A.D. 965, which might well have been the case, since Abul-Hasan ʿAlī bin-Bābwaihi, the father of Abū Jaʿfar, did not die until A.H. 329, A.D. 940. In addition to this, Nūr-ullah relates, on the authority of the Shaikh ad-Dūrystāfi (Dūrystā, a village near Rai, which is now called Durasht), that Abū-Ja'far lived in the time of Rukn-ud-daula Dailamī, and had repeated interviews with that prince, who, as is well-known, reigned from A.H. 338 to A.H. 336, A.D. 949—976. He is also the author of the Man lā yuhzarhu al-Faqih, which is the fourth of the four authentic books on Shi'a tradition, called "Kutab Arba." He is said to have written in all 172 works, and to have been specially skilled in Ijtihād (jurisprudence, q.v.).

Abu-Ja'far Muhammad bin-Hasan

al-Tusi Shaikh, who was one of the chief Mujtahids of the Imāmiya or Shi'a sect, is the author of the work entitled Fihristu-Kutub-ush-Shi'a wa Asmā-ul-Mu'aqqafin. It is a bibliographical dictionary of Shi'a works, together with the names of the authors. The greater part of this author's works were publicly burnt in Bagdad in the tumult that arose between the Sunnis and Shi'as in A.D. 1056, A.H. 448—460, Abū-Ja'far died in A.D. 1067. He is also the author of a very extensive commentary on the Qur'ān, in twenty volumes, which is generally called the Tafsīr-ul-Tūsī, though it was entitled by its author the Majma'-ul-Bayān li-tulū'ul-Qur'ān. Among the Four Books of Shi'a Hadis, called Kutab Arba', the two first in order were composed by him entitled Tahzīb-ul-Ahkām, and Istihkār. His chief works are the Mabsūt and Khāṭir, which are held in great estimation, as are also the Nihāya and the Muḥīṭ by the same author. The Risāla-i-Ja'fariya is likewise a legal treatise by at-Tūsī, which is frequently quoted.

Abu-Jahl (أبو جهل), the uncle of

'Umar ibn-ul-Khattāb ("Father of ignorance." Jahl means theological ignorance, or unbelief). He was one of the most inveterate enemies of Muhammad and his religion. Though his son 'Ikrima became a convert to the tenets of Muhammad, yet the father was for ever shut out from paradise; and so violent is the resentment of the Muslims against this first enemy of their prophet, that they call the colocynth, in contempt, the melon of Abū-Jahl. Abū-Jahl was slain in the battle of Badr, which he fought against Muhammad, together with Al-Ās, his brother, in the 70th year of his age, in the month of March, A.D. 624, Ramazān A.H. 2.

Abu-Lahab (أبو لهب), the uncle of Muhammad, also called 'Abdul-'Uzza, was the son of 'Abdul-Muttalib and one of the bitterest enemies of Muhammad and his doctrines. He died of grief within a week after the defeat of Abū-Sufyān in the battle of Badr, which took place about the beginning of the year A.D. 624, A.H. 2. He was a man of wealth, of proud spirit, and irritable temper. His son 'Utba was engaged, or according to some, married to, Muhammad's third daughter Ruqayya, but when Muhammad appeared as a prophet, the contract was dissolved, and Ruqayya married her lover 'Ugmān. Abū-Lahab was also allied to the rival line of Quraysh, having married 'Umm-Jamil, sister of Abū-Sufyān.

Abu-Lais Nasir Samarkandi, author of the work on jurisprudence in Arabic called Fiqh Abu-Lais, and the Ghunyat-ul-Mubtadi.

Abul-'Abbas, surnamed Al-Saffāh, which see.

Abul-'Abbas Ahmad bin-Muhammad, commonly called Ibn-'Uqda, was one of the greatest masters of the science of traditions, and was renowned for his diligence in collecting them, and the long and frequent journeys which he undertook for the purpose of obtaining information on the subject. Al-Dārquṭnī, the Sunnī traditionist, is reported to have said that Ibn-'Uqda knew 300,000 traditions of the Ahl-i-Bait and the Banū-Hāshim. He died in A.D. 944, A.H. 333.

Abul-'Abbas bin-Muhammad (أبو العباس بن محمد) author of the Arabic work Ma'rifat-us-Sahāba, and other books. He died in A.D. 1041, A.H. 432.

Abul-'Abbas Fazl, bin-Ahmad, of Isfarān, was minister to Muḥmūd of Ghazni.

Abul-'Aina (أبو العينا), a Musalmān lawyer, celebrated for his wit. When Mūsā, son of the Khulifa 'Abdul Malik, put to death one of Abul-'Aina's friends, and afterwards spread a report that he had escaped, Abul-'Aina said in the words of the Lawgiver of the Hebrews, "Moses smote him and he died." The sentence was reported to the prince, and Abul-'Aina was summoned to appear. Instead of dreading the threats of the tyrant, he boldly replied in the words of the following verse in Exodus, "Wilt thou kill me to-day as thou killedst the other man yesterday?" The ingenuity of the expression disarmed the anger of Mūsā, who loaded him with presents.

Abul-'Ala (أبو العلاء), entitled Malik-

ush-Shu'arā, or royal poet, of Gassā, flourished in the time of Manūchīhr, ruler of Shīrwān. The poets Fulakī and Khāṣṣai were his pupils, and to the latter he gave his daughter in marriage.

Abul-'Ala Ahmad bin-'Abdullah al-

Ma'arri (أبو العلاء أحمد بن عبد الله)

المعري), a celebrated Arabian philosopher, free-thinker and poet, born at Ma'arra in Syria on Friday the 26th December, A.D. 973, 1st Rabi' I. A.H. 363. Though he lost his sight in the third year of his age by the small-pox, his poetry is animated and his descriptions are beautiful and striking. He died on Friday the 9th of May, A.D. 1057, 1st Rabi' I. A.H. 449. He was the panegyrist of Al-qāyim Billah, the khalifa of Baghdad, and has left a Diwān in Arabic.

[Vide Zeitschrift, D.M.G. xxix. p. 304.]

Abul-'Ala Mir (میر ابو العلاء میرادی),

(Mir), son of Mir Abul-Wafā Hasani, of Āgra, was born in the year A.D. 1582, A.H. 990. His grandfather Mir 'Abd-us-Salām came to India from Samarqand, and went on a pilgrimage to Mecca, and died after some years. His father Mir Abul-Wafā died at Fathpūr Sikri, from which place his remains were conveyed to Delhi and buried close to the college situated near the Lal Darwāza. When Rāja Mān Singh was appointed governor of Bengal, Mir Abul-'Alā accompanied him, and was honored with the rank of 3000, but he soon left him and proceeded to Ajmir, and thence to Āgra, where he passed the remainder of his life, and is said to have performed many miracles. He died on Friday the 21st January, A.D. 1651, 9th Šafar, A.H. 1061, aged 71 lunar years, and lies buried at Āgra, at a place near the kurbāla, where every year on the anniversary of his death a great number of people assemble together and worship his tomb.

He was a Naqshbandī and a descendant of Khwāja Ahrār.

Abul-Barakat 'Abdullah bin-Ahmad

(ابو البركات عبدالله بن احمد), vide Nasafi.

Abul-Barakat Nishapuri (ابو البركات نیشاپوری), author of the work called Dastūr-ul-Kitūbat.

Abul-Barakat, Shaikh, brother of Abul-Faḡl, born A.D. 1552.

[Vide Blockmann's Āin Translation, p. xxxiii.]

Abul Farah, of Wāsīt, the ancestor of the Sayyid families of Bārha, Bilgrām, Khairābād, Fathpūr, Hānswa, and other places.

Abul-Faraj (ابو الفرج), who in some of our Biographical Dictionaries is called Abulfaragius (George), was the son of Aaron, a Christian physician, born at Malatia in Armenia, near the source of the Euphrates in A.D. 1226. He followed his father's profession, but afterwards studied the Eastern languages and divinity, and was ordained bishop of Guba in his 20th year, from whence he was translated to Lacabena and Aleppo. He wrote a work on history, called Mukhtaṣir-ud-Dawal, divided into dynasties, which is an epitome of universal history from the creation to his own time. The most excellent part of the work is that which relates to the Saracens, Mughuls, and the conquests of Chingiz Khān. Dr. Pococke, Professor of Hebrew and Arabic at Oxford, published this work in 1663, in the original Arabic, with a Latin version to it. Abul-Faraj died in A.D. 1286, A.H. 685.

(حسین), the son of Husain bin-

Muhammad Quraishī Iṣṭahānī, was born in the year A.D. 897? A.H. 284, and was brought up at Baghdad. He is the author of a famous work called Āṣṭab-ul-Aghānī, or Book of Songs, an important biographical dictionary, notwithstanding its title, treating of grammar, history, and science, as well as of poetry. The basis is a collection of one hundred Arabian songs, which he presented to Saif-ud-daula, prince of the race of Hamdan, who ordered him a thousand dinārs. The minister of that prince, thinking this sum too small for the merit of the work, on which the author had laboured fifty years, doubled it. The author of this celebrated work died in A.D. 967, A.H. 356, having lost his reason previous to his death.

Abul-Faraj al-Khalidi

(ابو الفرج الخالدي),

two great poets, who lived at the court of the Sultān Saif-ud-daula of the house of Hamdan, who was a protector of men of letters, on whom he bestowed large pensions.

Abul-Faraj ibn-Jauzi (ابو الفرج ابن)

(جوزی), surnamed Shams-uddīn, was the most learned man, the ablest traditionalist, and the first preacher of his time. He compiled works on a variety of subjects, and was the tutor of the celebrated Shaikh Sa'dī of Shirāz. He died on the 16th June, A.D. 1201, 12th Ramazān, A.H. 597, and is buried at Baghdad. His father's name was 'Alī, and that of his grandfather Jauzī. One of his works is called Talbis Iblīs, The Temptation of Satan.

Abul-Faraj Runi (ابو الفرج رونی), of Rūn, said to be near Lāhore. He is the author of a Diwān, and was the panegyrist of Sultān Ibrāhīm (the grandson of Sultān Mahmūd of Ghazni) who reigned from A.D.

1069 to 1088, A.H. 451 to 481. Anwari imitated his style.

[Vide Sprenger, Oudh MSS., p. 308. He is often wrongly called Abul-Faraj Ruwaini; vide Dowson iv. p. 205.]

Abul-Faraj Sanjari (ابو الفرج ساجرى),

a Persian poet who lived in the time of the great irruption of the Tartars under Chingiz Khān.

Abul-Fath, author of a Persian work called Chahār Bāgh or The Four Gardens, containing forms of letters on different subjects.

Abul-Fath, Muhammad bin-Abū-Bakr al-Marghināwī al-Samarqandī, author of the Fuṣūl-ul-‘Imādīya, which comprises forty sections containing decisions respecting mercantile matters, and being left incomplete at the author's death, which took place in A.D. 1253, A.H. 651, was finished by Jamāl-uddīn bin-‘Imād-uddīn.

Abul-Fath Bilgrami Qazi (ابو الفتح بيلگرامى), commonly called Shaikh Kamāl. It is mentioned in the work called Sharāif-i-‘Uṣmānī, that he was born in the year A.D. 1511, A.H. 917, and that in the reign of the emperor Akbar he held the situation of Qāzī of Bilgram, and died in the year A.D. 1592, A.H. 1001. Mullā Firūz ‘Uṣmānī found the chronogram of the year of his death in the letters of his name, viz.: Shaikh Kamāl.

Abul-Fath Busti Shaikh (ابو الفتح بىستى), a learned Musalmān of Bust, who lived in the time of Sulṭān Mahmūd of Ghaznī, wrote excellent poetry on divinity, and died in July, A.D. 1039, Shawwāl, A.H. 430. He is the author of a Diwān in Arabic.

Abul-Fath Gilanī (ابو الفتح گيلانى), surnamed Masīh-uddīn, the son of ‘Abdur-Razzāq, a nobleman of Gilān, was a physician in the service of the emperor Akbar. In the year A.D. 1589 he proceeded to Kashmir with that monarch, and during the emperor's progress from Kashmir to Kābul, he died at a place called Dhanṭūr, on the 20th June of the same year, 16th Shu‘bān, A.H. 997, and was buried at Bābā Hasan Abdāl. He had come to India with his two brothers Hākīm Humām and Hākīm Nūr-uddīn Qarārī about the year A.D. 1567, A.H. 974.

Abul-Fath Lodi, chief of Multān.

Sulṭān Mahmūd of Ghaznī took Multān in A.D. 1010, and carried away Abul-Fath as prisoner to Ghaznī.

Abul-Fath Muhammad al-Shahrīstānī (ابو الفتح محمد الشهرستانى), author of the Arabic work called Kitāb ul-Mīl wan-Nihāl, or the Book of Religious and Philosophical Sects. This book, which gives a full account of the various Sunnī sects, was translated into Latin and published by Dr. Haarbrücker, in A.D. 1850, and into English by the Rev. Dr. Cureton. Shahrīstānī died in A.D. 1153, A.H. 548.

Abul-Fath Nasir bin-Abul-Makarim

Mutarrizi (ابو الفتح ناصر بن ابو المكارم مطرزى), author of the Arabic

Dictionary called Mughrib. He died in A.D. 1213, A.H. 610 in Khwārazm. He was a Mutazilite and invited people to that faith. He is also the author of the Sharḥ Muqāmāt Harīrī, and of another work called Kitāb Azharī. The inhabitants of Khwārazm used to call him the master of Zamaqsharī, and on his death the poets wrote more than seven hundred elogies in his praise.

Abul-Fath Nasir bin - Muhammad

(ابو الفتح ناصر), author of the Jāmi‘-ul-Ma‘ārif.

Abul-Fath Rukn-uddīn bin-Husam

Nagori (ابو الفتح ركن الدين), author of a work on jurisprudence, entitled the Fatwa Hummūdīya, which he composed and dedicated to his tutor, Hammād-uddīn Ahmad, chief-qāzī of Naharwāla (Patan) in Gujrat. This work was lithographed in the original Arabic at Calcutta in A.D. 1825.

Abul-Fath ‘Usman (ابو الفتح عثمان), surnamed Malik ul-‘Azīz ‘Imād-uddīn, second king of Egypt of the Ayyūbite dynasty. He acted as viceroy of Egypt during the absence of his father, Sulṭān Salāh-uddīn Yūsuf ibn-Ayyūb, in Syria. On the demise of his father at Damascus in A.D. 1193, he took possession of the supreme power with the unanimous consent of the great military officers of the empire. He was born at Cairo on the 7th of January, A.D. 1172, 8th Jumāda I., A.H. 567, reigned about five years, and died at Cairo on the 23rd November, A.D. 1198, 21st Muḥarrar, A.H. 595.

Abul-Fazl (Shaikh) (ابو الفضل شيخ),

Akbar's favorite Secretary and Wazir. His poetical name was 'Allāmi. He was the second son of Shaikh Mubārak of Nāgor, and brother of Shaikh Faizī. He was born in the year A.D. 1551, A.H. 958, and was introduced to the emperor in the 19th year of his reign. His writings prove him to have been the most learned and elegant writer then in the East. He is celebrated as the author of the Akbar-nāma and the Āin-Akbari, and for his letters, called Maktūbāt-i-'Allāmi, which are considered in India models of public correspondence. The history of the Mughul emperors he carried on to the 47th year of Akbar's reign, in which year he was murdered. He was deputed with prince Sultān Murād in A.D. 1597, A.H. 1006, as Commander-in-Chief of the army of the Deccan, and on his being recalled five years after, he was advancing towards Narwar with a small escort, when he fell into an ambuscade laid for him by Birsingh Deo Bundelā, rājā of Urcā in Bundelkhand, at the instigation of Prince Salim (afterwards Jahāngir) on suspicion of being the occasion of a misunderstanding between him and the emperor his father; and although Abul-Fazl defended himself with great gallantry, he was cut off with most of his attendants, and his head was sent to the prince, who was then at Allāhābād. This event took place on Friday the 13th of August, A.D. 1602, 4th Rabi' I. A.H. 1011. Akbar was deeply afflicted by the intelligence of this event: he shed abundance of tears, and passed two days and two nights without food or sleep. Abul-Fazl is also the author of the 'Āyūr-Dinush, which is a translation of Pilpay's Fables in Persian.

[For a detailed biography, vide Āin Translation, i. pp. 1 to 36.]

Abul-Fazl Tahir bin-Muhammad (ابو الفضل تاهر بن محمد), a Persian poet. Vide Zahfr.

Abul-Fida Ismail Hamawi (ابو الفدا اسماعيل حموي), whose full name is

Malik Mu'ayyad Ismā'il Abul-Fidā, son of

Malik-ul-Afzal, a learned and celebrated prince, who succeeded his brother Ahmad as king of Hamāt, in Syria, in the year A.D. 1342, A.H. 743. When a private man, he published in Arabic an account of the regions beyond the Oxus called Taqwīm-ul-Bulḍān, which was first edited by Grævius, with a Latin translation, London, 1650, and by Hudson, Oxford, 1712. Abul-Fidā died in 1345, aged 72, at Hamāt. The principal of Abul-Fidā's other works is his abridgment of Universal History down to his time, called Tārīkh Mukhtaṣir. He is very exact, and his style is elegant, on which account his works are very much esteemed.

Abul-Faiz (ابو الفايض). Vide Faizī.

Abul-Faiz Muhammad bin-Husain bin-Ahmad, surnamed Al Kātib, or the Writer, is better known by the name of bin-Ahmad. He was a wazir of Sultān Rukn-ul-daula, of the Iloiydes. He was a great orator and a poet, and brought Arabian calligraphy to perfection. He died in A.D. 961, A.H. 360.

Abul-Futuh Razi Makki (ابو الفتح رازی مکی), author of the Arabic work called Risāla, or Kutūb Hasaniyya, which has a great reputation amongst the Shī'as, particularly in Persia. It consists of an imaginary disputation between a Shī'a slave-girl and a learned Sunnī lawyer, on the merits of their respective doctrines, in which, as a matter of course, the girl utterly discomfited her opponent. The argument is very ingeniously managed, and the treatise, taken altogether, furnishes a good and concise exposition of the tenets of the Shī'as, and the texts on which their belief is founded. This work was translated from Arabic into Persian by Ibrāhīm Astarābādī, in A.D. 1551.

Abul-Ghazi Bahadur (ابو الغازی بهادر),

Khān of the Tartars, was descended from the great Chingiz Khān. He came to the sovereignty of Khwāfāz on the death of his brother; and after 20 years, during which he was respected at home and abroad, he resigned the sovereignty to his son, Anūsha Muhammad, and retired to devote himself to literature. He wrote a valuable genealogical history of the Tartars, the only Tartar history known in Europe, but did not live to finish it. He died A.D. 1663, A.H. 1074, and on his death-bed charged his son and successor to complete his history, which he performed in two years after his father's death. This valuable work was translated in to German by Count Strahlenberg, and a French translation appeared at Leyden in 1726.

Abul-Ghazi Bahadur. Vide Sultān Husain Mirzā.

Abul-Hasan (Shah) (أبو الحسن شاه), son of the famous Shāh Tāhir, of Ahmad-nagar, in the Deccan, and minister of 'Alī 'Adil Shāh I., about the year A.D. 1672, A.H. 980.

Abul-Hasan, the son of I'timād-ud-daula, prime minister of the emperor Jahāngir, had three daughters, viz. Arjmand Banū, also called Mumtāz-Mahall, married to the emperor Shāh Jahān; Sultān Zamānia, the second daughter, was married to Sultān Parwiz; and the third, Badr-uzzamānia, to Shāh 'Abdul-Latif, the spiritual guide of the emperor 'Alamgir. Vide Aṣaf Khān.

Abul-Hasan 'Abdullah (Imam) (أبو الحسن عبد الله بن مقنع), son of Muqanna'. He translated Pilpay's Fables from the Pahlawī language into Arabic by order of Abū-Ja'far Maṣṣūr, the second Khālifa of the house of 'Abbās, who reigned at Baghdad from A.D. 754 to 775. The book is called Katīla Damma.

Abul-Hasan 'Ali (أبو الحسن علي), author of the works called Sunan and Ital. He died A.D. 990, A.H. 380.

Abul-Hasan 'Ali bin-al-Husain al-Kumi (أبو الحسن بن حسين القمي) (بابويه), commonly called Bābwaihi, who is said to have died in A.D. 940, A.H. 329, was the author of several works of note, one of which is called Kitāb-ush-Sharī'a. This writer is looked upon as a considerable authority, although his fame has been almost eclipsed by his more celebrated son, Abū-Ja'far Muhammad Ibn-Bābwaihi (p. 14). When these two writers are quoted together, they are called the two Ṣadūqs. He is also the author of the Kitāb-ul-Mawāriṭ, a treatise on the law of inheritance.

Abul-Hasan 'Ali (أبو الحسن علي بن), (سلطان مسعود), the son of Sultān Maṣ'ūd I., ascended the throne at Ghazni, on Friday 29th December, A.D. 1049, 1st Sha'bān, A.H. 441, reigned little more than two years, and was deposed by his brother, 'Abdur-Rashid, in A.D. 1052, A.H. 443.

Abul-Hasan Ash'ari (أبو الحسن الأشعري), son of Ismā'īl. He was a Mu'tazilite, but afterwards became a Sunnī. He is the author of nearly 400 works. He died in the year A.D. 936, A.H. 324.

Abul-Hasan Jurjani (أبو الحسن جرجاني), a celebrated lawyer, a native of Jurjān or Georgia. Vide Jurjānī.

Abul-Hasan Qhan (Mirza) (أبو الحسن) (خان مرزا), Persian ambassador to the British Court in 1809 and 1819. He is the author of a work called Hairat-nāma, or book of wonders, which title was given to it by Fath 'Alī Shāh, king of Persia. It contains a long account of the Khān's travels in India, Turkey, Russia, England, etc.

Abul-Hasan Qutb-Shah (أبو الحسن) (قطب شاه), whose litocary name was Tānā Shāh, was the son-in-law of 'Abdullah Qutb-Shāh, after whose demise, about the year A.D. 1672, A.H. 1083, he succeeded to the throne of Golkonda in Haidarābād, Deccan. This place was conquered by 'Alamgir, after a siege of seven months, on the 22nd September, A.D. 1687, 21th Zil-qā'da, A.H. 1098, and Abul-Hasan was taken prisoner and confined for life in the citadel of Daulatābād. Golkonda was then reduced to a province of the empire of Hindūstān. Abul-Hasan died in confinement about the year A.D. 1704. He was the last Sultān of the Qutb-shāhī dynasty, and a famous poet in the Dakini, or dialect of the Deccan.

Abul-Hasan Razin bin-Mu'awiya al-'Abdari (أبو الحسن رزين بن معاوية) (العبدري), author of a collection of traditions bearing the same title as the one written by Baghawī, namely Jāmi' baini-l-Sahihain. It comprises the works of Al-Bukhārī and Muslim, the Mawattā of Mālik ibn-Aus, the Jāmi'-ut-Tirmizī, and the Sunans of Abū-Dāūd, and Al-Nusāi. He died in A.D. 1126, A.H. 520.

Abul-Khair Maulana of Khwarazm (أبو الخير خوارزمي مولانا), a physician and poet, whose poetical name was 'Ashiq. From his native country he went to Hirāt in the latter part of the reign of Sultān Hussain Mirzā, and was there till Muhammad Shaibānī, commonly called Shāhī Beg Khān Uzbek, conquered that province, and took him to Māwarān-nahr, or Transoxiana, where he died in A.D. 1550, A.H. 957. The chronogram of the year of his death is "Faut-i-'Ashiq," the death of 'Ashiq.

Abul-Ma'ali, whose proper name is Muhammad Ṣadr-uddīn, is claimed by the Turks as the first of their poets, though his labours were not confined to their language alone, for he wrote in Arabic also, and was in Persian the rival and opponent of Nāṣir-uddīn. He was contemporary with Jalāl-uddīn Rūmī and his son Walad, and died about the year A.D. 1270. He is not, however, according to Baron von Hammer, to be strictly considered a Turkish poet by his countrymen; but the mystic tone which he adopted from Persian literature, and which he was undoubtedly the first to impress upon the national mind, gives him an unquestionable right to the place assigned him. The names of his works, such as the Seal of Perfection, and the Key of Mysteries, indicate the peculiarity of his taste and genius; but amidst all the confusion of style and thought some passages of great beauty and even simplicity are found in his works. He is lost, however, in the fame of his successor 'Ashik.

Abul-Ma'ali (ابوالمعالی بن عبد المجید), the son of 'Abdul-Majīd, the most eloquent of the Persians, who flourished in the time of Sultān Bahrām Shāh Ghaznawī, by whose order, in the year A.D. 1118, A.H. 512, he wrote in prose his Kalīla Damna (or Pulpay's Fables) from a work which Rūdakī, the celebrated poet, had formerly used for poetry. This version continued in vogue till the time of Sultān Husain Mirzā, fourth in descent from 'Umar Shaikh, the second son of Amīr Timur, when his prime minister Amīr Shaikh Ahmad Suhaili got Husain Wā'iz to modernize it, in A.D. 1505, A.H. 910, under the name of Amīr Suhaili, or the Rays of Canopus. Abul-Fazl, the able prime minister of Akbar, compressed this work, and gave it the name of Amīr-Dānish, or the Touch-stone of Knowledge. He is called by Daulat Shāh, Hamid-uddīn Naṣr-ullah. Ido Naṣr-ullah, the son of 'Abdul Hamid.

Abul-Ma'ali (Shāh) (ابو المعالی شاد), a chief in the service of the emperor Akbar, who having revolted was compelled to seek safety in Kābul, where Mirzā Muhammad Hākīm, the brother of Akbar, gave him his sister, named Mihr-un-Nisā Begam, in marriage, and raised him to the first office in that kingdom. The ungrateful refugee, however, had not been many months in office, before he aspired to the kingdom of Kābul, and in March A.D. 1564, Sha'bān, A.H. 971, basely assassinated Mirzā Muhammad Hākīm's mother, his own mother-in-law, who was a woman of uncommon abilities, and might with truth be said to have ruled that kingdom. He then pretended to act as regent to the young prince, who was still in his minority, with a view to get rid of him as soon as he could conciliate the Umarās. In the meantime Mirzā Sulaimān, prince of Badakhshān, attacked him, and slew him in a battle on the 18th May, A.D. 1564, 1st Shawwāl, A.H. 971, and took possession of that country, which he held for two years. Abul-Ma'ali was an elegant poet, and his poetical name was Shāhbadi.

Abul-Ma'ali (Shaikh) (ابو المعالی), (الله آبادی شیخ), of Allāhābād, author of the work called Tuḥfat-ul-Qādirīya, or the life of Shaikh 'Abdul-Qādir Gīlānī. He resided in Lahore, and died there on the 8th April, A.D. 1615, 16th Rabi' 1., A.H. 1024.

Abul-Mafakhir Razi (ابو المفاخر رازی), a poet who flourished in the reign of Sultān Muhammad Saljūqī.

Abul-Mahasin (ابو المحاسن), author of the work called Manḥal-i-Sāfi.

Abul-Makarim bin-'Abdullah. There are three comments on the Niqāya of 'Ubaidulla bin-Mas'ūd, which are much esteemed; they were written respectively by Abul-Makarim in A.D. 1501, A.H. 907; 'Abū-'Alī bin-Muhammad al-Birjīndī in A.D. 1528, A.H. 935; and Shams-uddīn Muhammad al-Khurāsānī in A.D. 1534, A.H. 941.

Abul-Ma'shar (ابو المعشر), who is called by some older authors Albumassar and Albunazar, was a learned Arabian astronomer, who flourished in the ninth century in the reign of the Khalifa 'Al-Mamūn of Baghdād, and wrote a treatise on the revolutions of the years. His full name is Ja'far bin-Muhammad bin-'Umar Abul-Ma'shar. He is called the prince of the Arabian astrologers. He was born in Balkh. In his famous work, called Uḥf or Kitāb-ul-Uḥf, which he wrote from a Sanskrit work on astronomy, he asserts that, when the world was created, the seven planets were together in the first point of the sign of Aries, and that it will end when the same planets shall meet again in the last point of Pisces in their exaltation or Dragon's head. He died in A.D. 885, A.H. 272. His works were printed in Latin at Venice in 1586, 8vo.

Abul-Najib al-Bukhari (ابو النجیب البخاری), poetically called also 'Am'aq, was a Persian poet who flourished in the fifth century of the Hijra at the court of the Sultān Qadr Khān, king or Khāqān of Turkistān, who made him president of the academy of poets which he had established. His poem of the loves of Yūsuf and Zalikha, which can be read in two different metres, is much admired. He was particularly famous for his elegies. He lived nearly 100 years. Daulat Shāh says, he lived in the time of Sultān Sanjar, who requested him to write an elegy on the death of his daughter Malik Khātūn, which he did, although he was then blind on account of old age. He appears to have died some years before or after A.D. 1145, A.H. 540.

Abul-Sa'adat Muḥarak Ibn - Asir

(ابو السعادت مبارك ابن اثير الجزري), al-Jazari, author of an Arabic Dictionary called Al-Nihāya fī ghārib-ul-Ḥadīth. He died in A.D. 1209, A.H. 606. Vide Ibn-Aṣīr.

Abul-Wafa (Khwaja), one of the great saints of Khwārazm, and author of several works on Sufism. He died A.D. 1432, A.H. 835.

Abu-Maaz Muslim (ابو معاذ مسلم), an Arabian grammarian, who died in A.D. 803, A.H. 187.

Abu-Mansur, surnamed al-Ḥakim biamr-illah, succeeded his father Al-Aziz to the throne of Egypt in A.D. 990, A.H. 381, when only 11 years of age. In the latter part of his reign he fancied himself a god, and found no fewer than 16,000 persons who owned him as such. These were mostly the Darārians, a new sect sprung up about this time, who were so called from their chief, Muhammad Ibn-Isma'īl, surnamed Darāri. He is supposed to have inspired the mad khalifa with this impious notion; and as Darāri set up for a second Moses, he did not scruple to assert that Abū-Manṣūr was the great creator of the universe. He was assassinated in the year A.D. 1020. His son Tāhir succeeded him.

Abu-Mansur (ابو منصور), author of the Kitāb-ut-Tauḥīd, and several other works.

Abu-Mansur 'Abdul-Kahir al-Bagh-dadi, author of a treatise on the law of inheritance according to Shāfi'i. He died A.D. 1037, A.H. 429.

Abu - Mas'ud, surnamed Shaikh-ul-

Islām, a native of Constantinople, and author of the valuable commentary on the Qurān, entitled Irshād-ul-aḡl, flourished in the reign of Sulṭān Salīm Khān, emperor of Constantinople, and died in A.D. 1516, A.H. 922.

Abu-Muhammad (ابو محمد مكي), of Mecca, son of Abū-Fālih, author of a commentary on the Qurān, and several other works. He died in A.D. 1045, A.H. 437.

Abu-Muhammad, son of 'Abbās, the son of a sister of Abū-Ja'far bin-Muhammad bin-Jarir al-Ṭabarī. It is said that he had by heart 100,000 verses of different authors. He died in A.D. 993, A.H. 383, and was a contemporary of the author of the Tiyyār.

Abu-Muhammad Husain bin-Mas'ud

Farra al-Baghāwī (ابو محمد حسين)

(ابن مسعود فرا البغوي), author of a collection of traditions called the Maṣābiḥ, in Arabic; also of the Maṣālim-ut-Tanzīl, and Sharḥ-us-Sunnat. He died in A.D. 1122, A.H. 516. He was a vendor of furs, consequently he was called Farrā. Baghāwī also wrote a Jāmi' baina-l-Ṣaḥīḥain.

Abu - Muhammad Hisham bin - al-

Ḥakim al - Kindi al - Shabani, who lived in the time of the Khalifa Hārūn-ur-Rashīd, and died in A.D. 795, A.H. 179, is famed as one of the first compilers of Shī'a traditions.

Abu-Muhammad Nasih (ابو محمد)

(ناسحي), was a man of eminent learning in the time of Sulṭān Mas'ūd I., of Ghaznī. He wrote a book entitled Mas'ūdi, in support of the doctrine of Abū-Hunayn, which he presented to the king. He flourished about the year A.D. 1035.

Abu - Muhammad Rozbihan Bakali

Shirazi (ابو محمد روزبهان بقلی)

(شیرازی), author of the Safwat-ul-

Mashārib. He died in July, A.D. 1209, Muḥarram, A.H. 606. Vide Rozbihān (Shaikh).

Abu-Muhammad Shatibi (ابو محمد)

(شاطبي), a very learned Musalmān and author of the Qasida Shatibiya. He died in A.D. 1194, A.H. 590. His proper name was Qāsim; he was born at Shātībīya, in Andalusia, from which he derived his title of Shātībī. He is also the author of several other works.

Abu - Muhammad Tabrizi, author of the Persian history called Tārīkh-i-Ṭabarī. The original of this book was written in Arabic by Abū-Ja'far bin-Jarir Ṭabarī, in A.D. 912, A.H. 300, and was afterwards translated into Persian and continued by Abū-Muhammad, and dedicated to Abū-Sūlīm bin-Nūḥ, about the year A.D. 1118, A.H. 512.

Abu - Musa Ja'far al - Sufi, whose poetical name is Jabar, was the founder of the Arabian school of chemistry, flourished towards the end of the eighth, or the commencement of the ninth century. According to the majority of authorities, he was born at Tūs, in Khurāsān. He wrote an immense number of treatises on alchemy, also a work on astronomy. An edition of his works in Latin was published at Dantzic, in 1662, and another in English by Russel, in 1678.

Abu-Musa al-Ash'ari (أبو موسى)

(الاشعري), one of the arbitrators between 'Alī and Mu'āwīya I., by whose decision 'Alī was deposed in the year A.D. 658, A.H. 37. Eight months after the battle of Siffin between 'Alī and Mu'āwīya, the two arbitrators, Abū-Mūsā and 'Amr, the son of 'As, met at a place between Mecca and Kūfa, where a tribunal was erected. Abū-Mūsā first ascending it, pronounced these words with a loud voice: "I depose 'Alī and Mu'āwīya from the Khilāfat (or government) to which they pretend, after the same manner as I take this ring from my finger," and immediately came down. 'Amr then went up and said: "You have heard how Abū-Mūsā has on his part deposed 'Alī; as for my part I depose him too, and I give the Khilāfat to Mu'āwīya, and invest him with it after the same manner as I put this ring upon my finger; and this I do with so much the more justice, because he is 'Usmān's heir and avenger, and the worthiest of all men to succeed him."

Abu-Muslīm, a great general, to whom the Abbasides entirely owed their elevation to the Khilāfat, for which he is commonly called Sāhib-ud-Dawlat, or author of the vocation of the Abbasides. For his good conduct and bravery, he occupied the first posts in the service of the Umayyads. He was governor of Khurāsān, A.D. 746, when he proclaimed the Abbasides the lawful heirs of the Khilāfat, and in A.D. 749 transferred the dignity of Khalifa from the family of 'Umayya to that of the Abbasides. This revolution occasioned the death of above 600,000 men; and when Abū-Ja'far Al-Manṣūr, the second Khalifa of the race of 'Abbas, was opposed on his accession by his uncle 'Abdullah, son of 'Alī, 'Abū-Muslīm was despatched against him. This general having harassed him for five months together, at last brought him to a general action, and having entirely defeated him, forced him to fly to Basra. Notwithstanding all his services, however, Abū-Muslīm was soon after, on Thursday the 13th February, A.D. 755, 24th Sha'bān, A.H. 137, ungratefully and barbarously murdered by Al-Manṣūr, and his body was thrown into the Tigris. Abū-Muslīm took his origin (as Istahānī, a Persian historian relates) from Hamza, who pretended to descend from Gaudarz, one of the ancient kings of Persia.

Abu-Na'im (أبو نعيم بن عبدالله), son of 'Abdullah, author of the works Uṭlūḡ and Dalā'il-i-Nubuwwat. He died in the year A.D. 1012, A.H. 403.

Abu-Nasr Farabi (أبو نصر فارابی). Vide Fārābī.

Abu-Nasr, author of a Persian work on Sufism, called Anis-ul-Tālibin.

Abu-Nasr Fārahī (أبو نصر فراهی) flourished about the year A.D. 1220, in the time of Balrām Shāh, son of Tāj-uddīn, ruler of Sīstān (also called Nimrūz), who began to reign in the year A.D. 1215. He is the author of a vocabulary in verse, called Nisāb-us-Sibyan. His real name is Muhammad Badr-uddīn, and he belongs to Fārāh, a town in Sijistān.

[Vide Āin Translation, i. note 41.]

Abu-Nasr-Isma'il bin-Hammad al-Jauhari (أبو نصر اسمعيل بن حماد الجوهري) is the author of the Dictionary called Sihāh-ul-Lughāt. He was born at Fārāb, and died about the year A.D. 1003, A.H. 394.

Abu-Nasr Khan (Nawab) (أبو نصر خان نواب)

an amīr of the reign of the emperor 'Alamgīr. The mosque of Jājnagar, in Orīsa, was built by him in the year A.D. 1687, A.H. 1098.

Abu-Nasr Maskati (أبو نصر مسكطي)

a native of Maskat, and author of the book called Maqāmāt.

Abu-Nasr Sabur (Shapur), son of Arslher.

He built in the year A.D. 954, an edifice at Baghdād, dedicated to scientific and literary exercises, and collected a large quantity of books, designed for the use of Muslims; there were, it is said, upwards of 10,400 volumes of all kinds, including a hundred Qurāns, copied by the celebrated calligrapher Ibn-Muqla.

Abu-Nawas (أبو نواس), al-Hasan bin-Hānī

a celebrated Arabian poet, born in the city of Basra. His merit was acknowledged at the court of Hārūn-ur-Rashīd. His principal works have been collected by several persons, on which account there is a great difference between the copies of his works. His proper name is Abū-'Alī. He died A.D. 810, A.H. 195.

Abu-Raihan al-Biruni (أبو ريحان البيروني) or Abū-Raiḥān Muhammad bin-Ahmad al-Birūnī, was born about the year A.D. 971, in the town of Birūn, said to be situated in the province of Khwārazm. He was astronomer, geometrician, historian, scholar, and logician. Besides metaphysics and dialectics, he studied, and appears to have drawn his chief lustre from, attainments in the magical art. Of this the following instance is related. One day Sulṭān Mahmūd ordered him to deposit with a third person a statement of the precise manner in which the monarch would quit the hall where he then was sitting. The paper being lodged, the king, instead of going out by one of the numerous doors, caused a breach to be made in the wall, by which he effected his exit; but how was he amazed, when, on the paper being examined, there, was found in it a minute specification of the precise spot through which he penetrated! Herupon the prince with horror denounced this learned man as a sorcerer, and commanded him to be instantly thrown out of the window. The barbarous sentence was presently executed; but care had been taken to prepare beneath a soft cushion, into which the body of the sage sank without sustaining any injury. Abū-Raiḥān was then called before the monarch, and was required to say whether by his boasted art he had been able to foresee these events, and the treatment through which he had that day passed. The learned man immediately desired his tablets to be sent for, in which were found regularly predicted the whole of these singular transactions. He travelled into different countries, and to and from India for the space of 40 years. He wrote many works, and is said to have executed several translations from the Greek, and epitomized the Almagest of Ptolemy. His works are said to have exceeded a camel load. The most valuable of all his works is the Tārīkh-ul-Hind. Another of his works is the Qānūn Mas'ūdī, dedicated to Sultān Mas'ūd of Ghazni, for which he received an elephant-load of silver coins. He lived in the time of Sultāns Mahmūd and Mas'ūd Ghaznawī, and died in the year A.D. 1039, A.H. 430.

Abu-Sa'id (أبو سعيد بن عبدالله),

the son of 'Abdullah, an Arabian poet who flourished in the court of Salāḥ-ud-dīn, (Saladin), and was his prime minister. He died in the year A.D. 1201, A.H. 597.

Abu-Sa'id (أبو سعيد بن كليب شاشي), the son of Kulaib Shāshi, author of the book called Masnad Kabir. He died in A.D. 946, A.H. 335.

Abu-Sa'id 'Abdul-Malik bin-Quraib

(أبو سعيد عبد الملك بن قريب), commonly called Aṣma'i, celebrated for his grammatical knowledge and eloquence. He was born in the year A.D. 740, A.H. 122, and flourished in the time of Al-Manṣūr, Khalifa of Baghdād (who reigned from A.D. 754 to 775), and died at Bagra during the reign of Harūn-ur-Rashid, or, as some authors say, in A.H. 216 (A.D. 832).

Abu-Sa'id 'Abdur-Rahman bin-

Mamun al-Mutawalli, author of the Furūz Mutawalli, a treatise on the law of inheritance according to Shāfi'i's doctrine. He died A.D. 1085, A.H. 478.

Abu-Sa'id Baizawi (أبو سعيد بيزاوي), or Qāzī Abū-Sa'id 'Abdullah Baizawī, author of the work called Nizām-ut-Tawārīkh, an epitome of Oriental History from Adam to the overthrow of the Khilāfat by the Tartars under Hulākū Khān, A.D. 1258, A.H. 674, written about the year 1275. Vide Baizawī.

Abu-Sa'id Fazl-ullah (أبو سعيد فضل)

(أله), son of Abul-Khair, a great

Sūfi, of Mahna. His spiritual guide was Abul-Fazl Luqmān of Sarakhs. He devoted himself to ascetic exercises, and spent fourteen years in the wilderness. He is the author of the Quatrains, called Rubā'iyyāt-i-Abū-Sa'id Abul-Khair. He died at the age 44 in the year A.D. 1068, A.H. 440.

Abu-Sa'id Khan Bahadur (أبو سعيد خان بهادر بن الجايغر), a Sultān of the family of Hulākū Khān, was the son of Oljaitū, commonly called Muhammad Khudā-banda, whom he succeeded to the throne of Persia in December, A.D. 1316, Shawwāl, A.H. 716, when he was only twelve years of age. In his time Rashid-ud-dīn, the author of the Jāmi'-ut-Tawārīkh, was put to death. This monarch may be termed the last of the dynasty of Hulākū Khān who enjoyed any power. The few princes of that sovereign's family who were raised to the throne after Abū-Sa'id were mere pageants, whom the nobles of the court elevated or cast down as it suited the purposes of their ambition. Abū-Sa'id reigned 19 lunar years, and died of fever on the 30th November, A.D. 1335, 13th Rabi' II., A.H. 736. The following is a list of the princes of the family of Chingiz Khān, who were raised to nominal power after the death of Abū-Sa'id Khān:

Arpā Khān (Mu'izz-uddīn) was crowned in 1335, reigned five months, and was killed in battle in A.D. 1336.

Mūsa Khān was elevated in 1336, reigned two years, and was murdered in A.D. 1338.

Sāki, sister of Abū-Sa'id Khān, was elevated to the throne in 1338. She was married to Juhān Timur, who got the kingdom as her dowry, but was deposed the same year. After him

Sulaimān Khān was declared king; he left the kingdom and went to Diyār-bakr in 1344.

Nausherwān was elevated in 1334.

Abu-Sa'id Mirza (Sultan) (أبو سعيد

ميرزا سلطان), the son of Sultān

Muhammad Mirzā, son of Mirānshāh, son of Amir Timur (Tamerlane). He was born in A.D. 1427. After the death of his father in 1441, he continued to live with Mirzā Ulugh Beg, son of Mirzā Shāhrukh, at Samargand, and served in his army when he was at war with his son Mirzā 'Abdul-Laṭif; but when that prince was murdered by his unnatural son, in October, A.D. 1449, Ramazān, A.H. 853, and he in his turn was slain after six or seven months by his own soldiers, and Samargand was taken possession of by Mirzā 'Abdullah, son of Mirzā Ibrāhīm, and grandson of Mirzā Shāhrukh, Abū-Sa'id, with the assistance of Abū-Khair Uzbak, having defeated and taken 'Abdullah prisoner in a battle, put him to death and ascended the throne of Samargand in A.D. 1451, A.H. 855. He also took possession of Khurāsān after the death of Bābar Sultān, son of Bāya-sanghar Mirzā, in A.D. 1457, A.H. 861, and greatly extended his dominions, but was at last taken prisoner in an ambuscade, and put to death on the 8th February, A.D. 1469, 25th Rajab, A.H. 873, after he had reigned 18 years. After his death, Sultān Husain Bāiqrā, surnamed Abul-Ghāzī, a descendant of Amīr Timur, made himself master of the empire. Abū-Sa'id at his death left eleven sons, viz.: Mirzā Sultān Ahmad, Mirzā Sultān Mahmūd, Mirzā Sultān Muhammad, Mirzā Shāhrukh, Mirzā Ulugh Beg, Mirzā Umar Shāikh, Mirzā Abū-Bakr, Mirzā Sultān Murād, Mirzā Sultān Khalīl, Mirzā Sultān Walīd, and Mirzā Sultān Umar; of whom four arrived to the dignity of kings, viz.: Mirzā Ulugh Beg to the throne of Kabul; Mirzā Sultān Ahmad to the kingdom of Samargand; Mirzā Umar Shāikh to the united thrones of Andijān and Farghāna; and Mirzā Sultān Mahmūd to those of Kunduz and Badakhshān. Abū-Sa'id Mirzā, says Bābar Shāh, though brought up in the city, was illiterate and unrefined.

Abu-Sina Muhammad, author of the Arabic work called Daqāiq-ul-Huqūq, containing a collection of traditions.

Abu-Sina (ابو سینا), or Abū-'Alī Sīnā, whom we call Avicenna, was a famous Muhammadan physician and philosopher, who early applied himself to literature, botany, and mathematics. At the age of eighteen he began to practise, and with such success that he became physician to the court at Baghdād. He was born in the city of Bukhārā, in A.D. 983, A.H. 373, and died at Hamadān in July, A.D. 1037, A.H. 427, aged 54 lunar years, with the character of a learned man, but too much addicted to wine and effeminating pleasures. His books on Medicine, etc., were in number 100, now nearly all lost. He is also called Ibn-Sīnā. The following are the titles of his works: Of the Utility and Advantages of Sciences, 20 books; of Innocence and Criminality, 2 books; of Health and Remedies, 18 books; on the means of Preserving Health, 3 books; Canons on Physic, 14 books; on Astronomical Observations, 1 book; on Mathematical Sciences; of Theorems, or Mathematical and Theological Demonstrations, 1 book; on the Arabic Language, 10 books; on the Last Judgment; on the Origin of the Soul, and the Resurrection of Bodies; of the end we should propose to ourselves in Harangues and Philosophical Arguments; Demonstrations of the collateral lines in the sphere; abridgment of Euclid; on Finiteness and Infinity; on Physics and Metaphysics; on Animals and Vegetables, etc.; Encyclopedia, 20 volumes. Avicenna is also credited with an Arabic redaction of some of the works of Aristotle, and with some Persian quatrains in the style afterwards popularized by Umar Khayyām (q.v.).

Abu-Sufyan (ابو سفیان بن حرب), the son of Harb, the grandson of Umayya, and great-grandson of 'Abdul-Shams. He was an able and ambitious man, of great wealth and influence, and one of the most persevering and powerful opponents of Muhammad. He was the father of Murāwiya, the first khalifa of the house of Umayya, and one of the heads of the tribe of Quraysh, to which Muhammad also belonged. When Muhammad took up arms for the propagation of his faith, Abū-Sufyan was made generalissimo of his enemies against him; and after the battle of Badr, he stood very fair for the headship of that tribe. But he was at last convinced (as it seems, by a signal victory gained by Muhammad over his enemies) of the truth of the prophet's pretensions, and was converted in the 8th year of the Hijra, A.D. 629.

Abu-Sulaiman Daud (ابو سليمان داود), bin-Abul-Fazl bin-Muhammad Fakhr Binākiti, so called from having been born at Binākit, or Finākit, a town in Transoxiana, afterwards called Shāhrukhīya. He is the author of the Tārīkh-i-Binākiti. Its correct name in full length is Kawātū āli-l-albāb fi Tawārīq al-Akābir wal-Ansāb, i.e. the garden of the learned in the histories of great men and genealogies. It is chiefly an abridgment of the Jāmi'-ur-Rashīdi, and was compiled by the author only seven years after that work, in A.D. 1317, A.H. 707, and is dedicated to Sultān Abū-Sa'id, the ninth Mughul king of Persia. The author was a poet as well as an historian, and was appointed by Sultān Ghāzān Khān, poet laureate of his court. He died in or about the year A.D. 1330, A.H. 731.

Abu-Tahir (ابو طاهر), of Tortosa, in Spain, author of the Darab-nāma, an abridgment of Oriental Biography, containing the Lives of Zuhāk, of Darius, of Philip, of Mucedon, and of Alexander the Great; also Memoirs of Galen and other Greek Philosophers, etc.

Abu-Tahir Khatuni (ابو طاهر خاتونی), a poet who flourished in the twelfth or thirteenth centuries of our era. He is the author of the History of the Saljūq kings, entitled Tārīkh-ul-Saljūqi, and of another work, called Manāqib-ush-Shu'arā.

Abu-Talib (أبو طالب) was the father of 'Alī, and the uncle of Muhammad the prophet. He died three days before K̲l̲udija, the first wife of Muhammad, in August, A.D. 619, aged 80 years.

Abu-Talib Husaini, author of the Tuzuk-i-Timūri. This work contains an account of the first forty-seven years of the life of Tamerlane, written by himself in Chaghtāi Turki, and translated into Persian by Abū-Talib, who dedicated it to Shāh Jahān. It has been translated into English by Major Charles Stewart.

Abu-Talib Kalim (أبو طالب كلیم) (همدانی), whose poetical name was Kalīm, was a great poet of Hamadān in Persia, and came to India, the first time in the reign of the emperor Jahāngīr, and returned home in A.D. 1619, A.H. 1028. After some years he again visited India in time of Shāh Jahān, who employed him, and conferred on him the title of "Malik-ush-Shu'arā," or Poet Laureate. He was twice weighed against gold and silver, and the amount was given to him as a reward for his poetical talents. He died at Lahore on the 19th November, A.D. 1651, 15th Zil-hijja, A.H. 1061. He is the author of a poem called Zafar-nāma-i-Shāh Jahān, or the conquests of Shāh Jahān, and of a Diwān in Persian.

Abu-Talib Khan (Mirza) (أبو طالب خان مرزا), the son of Hājī Muhammad Beg Khān, by descent a Turk, was born at Lucknow in the year A.D. 1752, A.H. 1165. He was appointed by Mukhtār-ud-daula, the prime minister of Nawāb Asaf-ud-daula of Lucknow, in A.D. 1775, 'Amaldar of Itāwa and several other districts situated between the rivers Jamunā and Ganges. In this situation he continued for two years; but, after the death of his patron, and the appointment of Haidar Beg Khān to his office, he was superseded, and repaired to Lucknow, and was allowed by the Nawāb 60,000 rupees per annum for his support. After the expiration of one year, Colonel Alexander Hannay, having been appointed Collector of Gorakhpūr, requested the Nawāb's leave to take him as an assistant, in which situation he continued for three years. He was afterwards employed by Mr. Middleton, the Resident of Lucknow, in reducing the rebel Rājā Balbhaddar Singh, whom, during two years, he frequently defeated and pursued. At length, the Rājā, being surprised in his camp, was killed in endeavouring to make his escape. Abū-Talib, after this falling into distress for some years, embarked for Europe with Captain David Richardson, a British officer, and left Calcutta in February, 1799, Ramazān A.H. 1213. He visited England and other parts of Europe, and was well known in London under the title of the Persian Prince. During his travels he wrote a Journal in which he daily inserted every event, and committed to writing such reflections as occurred to him at the moment. On his return to Calcutta in 1803, A.H. 1218, having revised and abridged his notes, he published them under the title of Maḡir-ut-Talibi fi Bilād-i-Ifrāji. This work was translated by Charles Stewart, and published in London in the year 1814. Abū-Talib died about the year A.D. 1806, A.H. 1221. He is also the author of the Khulīqat-ul-Afkār.

Abu-Talib Mirza. Vide Shāista Khān.

Abu-Talib (Shaikh) (أبو طالب شیع), the father of Shaikh Muḥammad 'Alī Ḥazīn. He died at Isfahān, in A.D. 1715, A.H. 1127, and was interred in the cemetery, called Mazār-Bābā Rukn-uddīn, close to the tomb of the learned Maulānā Ḥasan, Shaikh-ul-Islām of Gilān.

Abu-Tammam Habīb ibn-Aus al-Tāi

(أبو تمام حبیب ابن أوس الطائي),

an Arabian poet. Having arrived in the city of Hamadān, he was received with great distinction by Abul-Wafā bin-Salama. When about to depart, a heavy fall of snow made the roads for a long time impassable. Abul-Wafā conducted the poet to his library, and placed it entirely at his disposal. Surrounded with these literary treasures, Abū-Tammam forgot his journey, read the precious volumes with avidity, and devoted his time to the composition of several works. The poetical collection entitled Khamaa was the principal fruit of these researches, and attests the indefatigable attention with which the learned writer had ransacked this rich library. Amongst the other works that he wrote, one is called Fuḡl-ush-Shu'arā. He was born in A.D. 804, A.H. 188, at Jāsim, near Damascus, and died in A.D. 845, A.H. 231.

Abu-Tayyib al-Mutanabbi (أبو طیب المتنبی). Vide Mutanabbi.

Abu-Turab (Mīr) (أبو تراب میر), a Salāmi Sayyid of Shirāz, who served, with his son Mīr Gadāi, in Gujrāt, and then under Akbar. He died in A.H. 1006, and lies buried in Ahmādābād.

[Vide Ain Translation, i. p. 506.]

Abu-'Ubaida (أبو عبيدة), a friend and associate of Muhammad, who had the command of the Moslem army in the time of Abū-Bakr, the first Khālifa, but being defeated in a battle against the troops of the Greek emperor, he was deprived of the command, which was given to Khālīd. 'Umar, on his accession to the khilāfat, replaced 'Abū-'Ubaida in the command of the army in Syria, being greatly displeased with the cruel and blood-thirsty disposition of Khalid. 'Abū-'Ubaida extended his conquests over Palestine and Syria, and drove the Greeks out of the whole country extending from the Mediterranean to the Euphrates. This conquest was completed in A.D. 639, A.H. 18, in which year Syria was visited by a dreadful plague, in which the Moslems lost 25,000 men, among whom were 'Abū-'Ubaida himself, Yazīd ibn Abū-Sufyān, and many other men of distinction.

Abu-'Ubaida ibn-Mas'ud (أبو عبيدة), a general in the time of the khaliifa 'Umar. He was defeated and killed in battle by Farrukh-zād, who commanded the army of Tūrān-Dukhā, queen of Persia, about the year A.D. 639.

Abu-'Ubaida Kam bin-Salam, author of a work on Qarrāt.

Abu-'Ubaida Ma'mar bin-Al-musanni (أبو عبيدة معمر بن المثنى), a famous Arabian grammarian, born in Basra, who lived in the time of Hārūn-ur-Rashīd, and died A.D. 824, A.H. 209, aged 99 lunar years.

Abu-'Umar Minhāj al-Jurjani (أبو عمر منهاج الجرجاني), author of the Tabaqāt-i-Nāsirī, a celebrated history, written in A.D. 1252, A.H. 650, and dedicated to Sultān-Nāsir-uddīn Mahmūd of Delhi. Vide Minhāj-i-Sirāj.

Abu-Yahya bin-Sanjar (أبو يحيى ابن سانجر), author of a Diwān in Arabic. He died in A.D. 1234, A.H. 632.

Abu-Yahyā Ahmad bin-Daud al-Farazi al-Jurjani (أبو يحيى أحمد بن داود الجرجاني), who was originally a Sunnī, but became a convert to the Imāmiya or Shī'a faith, is the author of a biographical work, entitled Kutāb fī ma'rifa'ti al-Kijāl, containing the lives of eminent Shī'as.

Abu-Ya'qub al-Warraaq (أبو يعقوب الوراق). Vide Muhammad bin-Is-hāq an-Nadīm.

Abu-Yazid (Maktabdar) (أبو يزيد مكتدار), secretary of state in Egypt, who rebelled against Qāim, the second khaliifa of the race of the Fātimites. He was not punished for his rebellion till Imām'il al-Manṣūr defeated him, and confined him in an iron cage, where he ended his days.

Abu-Yusuf (Imam) (أبو يوسف امام)

bin-Habīb al-Kūfi, a celebrated Qāzi of Baghdad, and one of the first pupils of Abū-Hanīfa, dignified with the title of Qāzi-l-Quzāl, or supreme judge, in the reigns of Hādī and Hārūn-ur-Rashīd, khaliifas of Baghdad. He supported the tenets of Abū-Hanīfa, and maintained the dignity of his office by impartiality. When one day reproached for his ignorance of one of the causes brought before him, for the decision of which he received an ample allowance, he jokingly replied, that he received in proportion as he knew; but, said he, "If I were paid for all I do not know, the riches of the khilāfat itself would not be sufficient to answer my demands." He was born A.D. 731, A.H. 113, and died on the 13th September, A.D. 798, 27th Rajab, A.H. 182, at the age of 69 years, at Baghdad. The only work known to have been written by him, treats of the duties of a Magistrate, and is entitled Adīb-ul-Qāzi. The reputation of this work has been eclipsed by that of another, having a similar title, by al-Khaṣṣāf.

Abu-Yusuf Ya'kub bin-Sulaiman Isfaraini (أبو يوسف يعقوب بن سليمان), author of the Shurūf-ul-Khulāfat. He died in A.D. 1095, A.H. 488.

Abu-Zakariya Yahya al-Nawawi. Vide Nawawi.

Abu-Zarr (أبو ذر قرمطی), the father of the Karamatians in Arabia, who not only opposed the religion of Muhammad, but plundered and insulted the temple of Mecca, and carried away the black stone which was believed to have fallen from heaven. He died A.D. 953, A.H. 342. Vide Qarmat.

Abu-Zarr Yaqut Mausili (أبو ذر ياقوت الموصلی), a celebrated calligrapher.

Abu-Zubaid (أبو زيد), an author who has written on the lion and all its names in the Arabic language.

Aohanak Begam, one of the concubines of the emperor Akbar. She had built a garden on the banks of the Jamunā, at Agra, called Achānak Bāgh. Some traces of it are yet to be seen.

Achohhe (اچھے), the poetical name of prince Baland-Akhtar, a brother of the emperor Muhammad Shāh of Dehli. He was familiarly called Achehhe Shāhib, and therefore chose Achehhe for his "takhallus." He is the author of a beautiful poem, called Nāhid-o-Akhtar, i.e. Venus and the Star, containing 355 verses, which he completed in the year A.D. 1726, A.H. 1139.

Adam, the first man. The Muhammadans place Adam's Paradise in heaven; hence after the fall Adam and Hawwā (Eve) were hurled down to earth. As this event happened about 7,000 years before the Hijra, Adam is often called haft-hazūri.

Adam Khan Gakkhar (آدم خان گکھر), chief of the Gakkhars, who defied the power of the emperor Akbar. In 970, at the instigation of Kamāl Khān Gakkhar, Adam was attacked, and defeated and captured at Hilān, south of Chilianwālā, near Dāngali, Adam's stronghold.

[Vide Ain Translation, i. p. 457.]

Adham (ادھم), the poetical name of Mirzā Ibrāhīm, a Sayyid of the Safawī race. He came to India in the time of the emperor Shāh Jahān. He died, or was put to death in prison, in the year A.D. 1650, A.H. 1060. He is the author of a Diwān, and also of a Maghawī, called Rafiq-us-Sālikin, and a Sāqī-nāma.

Adham Artamani (ادھم ارتمانى), author of a Diwān in Persian.

Adham (ادھم). Vide Ibrāhīm-i-Adham.

Adham Khan (ادھم خان), the son of Māhum Anaga. He appears to have been an illegitimate son of the emperor Humāyūn. His mother Māhum was one of Akbar's nurses (anaga), who attended on Akbar "from the cradle till after his accession." She played a considerable part in bringing about Bairām's fall. Adham Khān (i.e. the Black Khān) was a commander of 5,000, and distinguished himself in keeping the rebellious Bhadauriya clan, near Hatkānāth, south-east of Agra, in order. In A.H. 968, he defeated Bāz Bahādūr of Mālwa, whose female favourite was the poetess Rupmatī (q.v.). In the following year, A.D. 1562, he stabbed at court his enemy Aghā Khān, Akbar's foster-father, and was killed by the emperor's order. Māhum Anaga died forty days after from grief, and was buried with her son in Dehli, in a Mausoleum erected by Akbar. Adham's brother Bāqī Khān, or Khān Bāqī Khān, died in the 30th year of Akbar's reign, as Governor of Garha-Katanga (Central Provinces).

Vide Keene's History of Hindustan.

Adhan (Shaikh) (ادھن), a Chishtī saint, who died at Jaunpūr in A.H. 970.

'Adil Khān II, Fārūqī (عادل خان فاروقی ثانی), entitled A'zam Humā-rūn, son of Hasan, and grandson of Nuṣīr Khān Fārūqī by the daughter of Mahmūd Shāh, of Gujrāt. He succeeded to the throne of Khandesh after the death of Dāūd Khān Fārūqī, in August, A.D. 1510, Jumādā I., A.H. 916, and removed from Tālnar to Barhānpūr, which place he made the seat of his government, and died there, after a reign of nine or ten years, in A.D. 1520, A.H. 926, and was succeeded by Mirān Muhammad, his eldest son by the sister of Bahādūr Shāh of Gujrāt.

'Adil Khan (عادل خان), the eldest brother of Sulṭān Islām Shāh, king of Dehli. He fled to Patna after his defeat in a battle against his brother, but he soon disappeared, and was never heard of afterwards.

Adina Beg Khan (آدینه بیگ خان), son of Channū, an Arāin by caste, was born at Sarakpūr, near Lahore. He was brought up in a Mughul family, became a soldier, but devoted himself to accounts. He was Governor of Sulṭānpūr when Nādir Shāh invaded India. Subsequently, he became Governor of the Panjāb. In 1758 he defeated the Afghans near Lahore. Soon after this he died, without heirs, at Khānpūr, near Hoshiyārpūr, where a fine tomb was erected over his remains.

‘Adli (عدلی), the nickname of Muhammad ‘Adil Shāh, king of Dehli. His name was Mubārīz Khān, son of Nizām Khān. He succeeded Islam Shāh in the very end of A.H. 960, defeated with the help of his general Hīmū, in 962, Muhammad Shāh of Bengal at Chhaparghatta, east of Kālpi, and was at last, in 964, one year after Akbar’s accession, defeated and killed in the battle of Sūrājgarh, near Muuger, by Bahādur Shāh, Sultān of Bengal. His nickname ‘Adli was often further corrupted to “Andhli,” the blind woman.

‘Adnan (عدنان), one of the descendants of Ismā‘il, the son of Abraham, with whom the genealogies of the Arabians, and also that of Muhammad, terminate. For reckoning up from ‘Adnān to Ismā‘il, the descents are very uncertain, and the best historians confess that there is nothing certain beyond ‘Adnān.

Afi (آفی), poetical name of Ahmad Yār Khān, author of a small poem in Persian called Magnus Gulzār-i-Khayāl, containing the story of Shahzāda and Gadā, written in 1818.

‘Afi. Vide Shams Sirāj ‘Afi.

Afrasyab (افراسياب), an ancient, if not mythic, king of Tūrān, the son of Pushang. He overcame Nauzar, king of Persia of the Peshdadian dynasty, and having killed him, ruled over Persia for twelve years. He was subsequently defeated in a battle against Kai-khusraw, king of Persia, of the second or Kāianian dynasty.

Afrasyab Khan, adopted son of Mirza Najaf Khān (q.v.), became Amīr-ul-Umra on the death of his master, A.D. 1782. Intriguing with Madhujī Sindhiā, he was over-reached, and was assassinated near Āgra, October, 1783.

Afrin (آفرین), the poetical name of Shāh Faqīr-ullah, of Lahore. He was a Gujar, embraced Muhammadanism, and is the author of a Diwān, and of an epic, called Hir-wa-Rānjhā. Some say that he died in A.D. 1730, and others in 1741, A.H. 1143, or 1154.

Afsah (افصح), Shāh Faqīh, a pupil of Mirzā Bedil, died at Lucknow in A.H. 1192, and left a Diwān.

Afsari (افسری), the poetical name of a poet.

Afshin (افشین), the surname of Haidar ibn-Kāūs, a general of the Khalifa al-Mu‘ta‘im Billah, of Baghdād. He was a Turk by origin, and had been brought up a slave at the Khalifa’s court, and having been employed in disciplining the Turkish militia, had acquired the reputation of a great captain. He was, however, executed about the year A.D. 840, by the Khalifa, being accused of holding correspondence with the Khalifa’s enemies.

Afsos (افسوس), the poetical name of Mir ‘Alī, son of S. Muzafar Alī Khān, claiming descent from Imām Jāfar (q.v.), born at Delhi, where his grandfather had been in the imperial service; author of the Ardash, a sort of Urdu Gazetteer, admired for its style. He was first in the service of Nawāb Is-hāq Khān, the uncle of Asaf-ud-daula, of Jaeknow, and subsequently of Mirzā Jawān-Bakht, and was finally recommended to Lord Wellesley, and appointed a Munshi of the College of Fort William. He is the author of the Ardash-i-Mahfil, in Urdu, and of the Gulistān, translated by him into the same language. He died in Calcutta in A.D. 1806, A.H. 1221.

Aftab (آفتاب), the Takhallus, or poetical name of Shāh ‘Ālam, king of Dehli, who died in the year A.D. 1806. The following couplet is a sample of his Majesty’s poetry:

“The forenoon with the wine-cup, the evening with the wife;

The rest is known to God alone; meantime I live my life.”

(Shāh ‘Ālam.)

Afzal, the poetical name of. Shāh Ghulām ‘Azam, which see.

Ahli Khurasani (اهلى خراسانى), a poet who died at Tabriz in the year A.D. 1527, A.H. 934. He must not be confounded with Ahli-i-Tūrānī, a Chaghtāi nobleman of profligate character who lived at the court of Sultān Husuīn Mirzā, and died in A.D. 1497, A.H. 902.

Ahli Shirazi (Maulana) (اهلى شيرزاي), of Shirāz, an elegant poet in the service of Shāh Isma'īl Sūfawī I. He is the author of several poems, amongst which are the Sihr-e-Hakīl, Sham' wa Parwāna, Risāla-i-Naghz, Sāqīnāma, and Fawā'id-ul-Fawā'id. He died in the year A.D. 1535, A.H. 942, and is buried at Shirāz, close to the tomb of Hāfiz.

Ahli Bai, the wife of Madhu Rāo

Peshwā, built a ghāt at Āgra, in the time of Shāh 'Alam, called Bismān Ghāt, or a bathing-place for all men, on the banks of the river Jamnā. It extended from the trench of the fort to the house of Dārā Shikoh, and was in good preservation in the year A.D. 1830. On one of the corners a large gun of iron was then lying, under the Haweli of Dārā Shikoh, called Dhaut Dahanī.

Ahli Bai (اهليه بائي), the wife of Khānde Rāo, the son of Malhār Rāo Holkar, of Indor, after whose death, in A.D. 1766, she had a jāgīr allotted to her, yielding an annual revenue of 1,500,000 rupees. Her husband, Khānde Rāo, was killed on battle at Dig against Sūrajmal Jāt, in 1754. Her son Malī Rāo, who had succeeded his grandfather Malhār Rāo in 1766, died nine months after. She was a woman of spirit and ability, and reserved in her own hands the right of nominating a successor, and elected Tukaji to the rāj.

Ahmad al-Makkarī (احمد), author of the History of the Muhammadan Dynasties in Spain. This work was translated by M. Pascual de Gayangos, an erudite Spaniard, London, 1810, in 4to. Vol. I. He was born in the 16th century, and died in Damascus in the year A.D. 1631, A.H. 1041. After having composed a very detailed biography of the celebrated and learned wazīr of Granada, Muhammad Ibn-ul-Khatīb, he added to it, in the form of an introduction, a general history of the Arabs in Spain from the conquest to their final expulsion.

Ahmad I. (احمد بن محمد), emperor of Turkey, son and successor of Muhammad III., whom he succeeded in January, A.D. 1604, Shu'bah, A.H. 1012. This prince was of a good constitution, strong and active; he would throw a horseman's mace, of nine or ten pounds weight, farther than any of his court. He was much given to sensual pleasures, and had 3,000 concubines. He died on the 15th November, A.D. 1617, 15th Zil-qad'a, A.H. 1025, at the age of thirty, having reigned fourteen years. He was succeeded by his brother Muṣṭafā I.

the author of the Hawāi. He is the author of the work called Nasakh-i-Jahān-ārū, which he composed in the year A.D. 1563, A.H. 971, of which number the title forms the chrono-gram. It is also called Tārīkh-i-Makhtasir, an abridged history of Asia, from Ādam down to Shāh Tahmāsp of Persia, A.D. 1525. It also contains memoirs of the Muhammadan kings of Spain, from A.D. 755 to 1336. It was dedicated to Shāh Tahmāsp. We are also indebted to him for the better known work entitled Nigāristān. We learn from the Tārīkh Badā'iyi that, having resigned his employment in Persia, he went towards the close of his life on a pilgrimage to Mecca, and that, landing in Dībal in Sindh, for the purpose of paying a visit to Hindustān, he died at that port in A.D. 1567, A.H. 975.

anecdote: The great Tartar conqueror Amīr Timur (Tamerlane) being on his march through Anadoli, halted for awhile at Amasia, where Ahmadi lived; and the poet took the opportunity of presenting him with an ode.
This led to further intimacies, Timur being a patron of literary men; and one day when both were in the bath, the monarch amused himself by putting crotchety questions to Ahmadi, and laughing at his answers.
"Suppose now," said he, pointing to the surrounding attendants, "you were required to value these beautiful boys, how much would you say each was worth?" Ahmadi answered with becoming gravity, estimating one at a camel-load of silver, another at six bushels of pearls, a third at forty gold wedges, and so made the circuit of the ring. "Very fair," said Timur, "and now tell me, What do you value Me at?" "Four and twenty aspers," replied the poet, "no more and no less." "What!" cried Timur, laughing,
"why the shirt I have on is worth that."
"Do you really think so?" asked Ahmadi, with the greatest apparent simplicity—"at that rate you must be worth nothing, for I included the shirt in the valuation!" Much to his credit, Timur, instead of being angry, applauded and rewarded the wit and boldness of the poet. Ahmadi was a contemporary of Shaikhī, and is the author of the Kulliyāt-i-Khwāja Ahmad Jafāgi. He also composed a heroic poem on the actions of Tamerlane, and a Sikandar-nāma in the Turkish language. He died in A.D. 1412.

Ahmad Ibn-Tulun (احمد ابن طولون),

the founder of the Tūlūnide dynasty in Egypt, a Turkish slave, who, being entrusted by al-Mu'tamid, the khalifa of Baghdād, with the government of that country and Syria in A.D. 879, set up for himself, and maintained his authority notwithstanding all attempts to depose him. He reduced Damascus, Hims, Hamāt, Kinnisrīn, and ar-Raqqa, situated upon the eastern banks of the Euphrates. His mosque in Cairo may be seen to this day. He died in A.D. 884, A.H. 270, and was succeeded by his son Khumārwaīh. Egypt continued to be governed by his successors for several years, when it was again reduced in A.D. 905 by Muhammad, general of the khalifa of Baghdād al-Muktafi; the last khalifa of Egypt having assassinated his predecessor, and thereby rendered himself very odious. In the year 933, Muhammad, the son of Tāj, or Tājil, surnamed al-Ashhad, seized upon Syria and Egypt in the khilafat of ar-Rāzi Billah, and his family retained the whole of it, except a small part which 'Ubad-ulla al-Mahdi, the first of the Fatimite dynasty (the seat of whose empire was at Qairuwān, near Tunis, had conquered in A.D. 910. His successor, Abū-Tamīm Ma'd, surnamed Mu'tizz li-dīn-illah, conquered the rest of Egypt about the year 970, by his general Ja'far, who built the city of al-Qāhira, commonly called Grand Cairo, whither his master soon removed his court. The Fatimite dynasty ended in A.D. 1176, when, upon the death of the last prince of this family, the kingdom was usurped by the famous Ṣalāh-uddin (Saladin).

Ahmad Jalal Bukhari (Sayyid), son of Sayyid Muhammad Bukhari.

Ahmad Jalayir (احمد جلاير), also called Ahmad Ilkāni, a descendant of Hasan Buzurg, which see.

Ahmad Jam (Shaikh ul-Islam) (احمد جام), entitled Abū-Naṣr and Zinda-Pīl, a celebrated Muhammadan saint of Nishāpūr, born in the year A.D. 1049, A.H. 441. He passed 18 years of his life in devotion in wilds and mountains. He subsequently got married, and was blessed with thirty-nine sons and three daughters. At the time of his death, besides the three daughters, fourteen of his sons were living, all of whom became men of learning and authors of several works. Ahmad Jām himself was an author, and among the different works that he wrote are the following: Kasālu Samghānadi, Anāṭ-at-Tālibin, Miftāḥ-un-Nigāt, Bahr-ul-Haqiqat, and Siriy-us-Sāyirīn. He died in the reign of Sultan Sanjar, in February, A.D. 1142, Rajab, A.H. 536.

Ahmad Jan (Sultan), of Hirāt. He died about the 6th April, A.D. 1863, 17th Shawwāl, A.H. 1279, and was succeeded by his son, Shāh Nawāz Khān.

Ahmad Kabir (Sayyid) (احمد کبیر)

(سید), a Musalmān saint, whose tomb is at Uchcha in Multān. He is the son of Sayyid Jalāl, and the father of two other saints, Sayyid Jalāluddin, surnamed Makhdūm Jahāniyān Jahān-gasht, and Rājū Qattāl. Numerous miracles were wrought by these two brothers.

Ahmad Khan (احمد خان), surnamed

Nekodār (or Nicholas), was raised to the throne of Persia after the death of his brother Abāqā Khān, the son of Hulākū Khān, in April, A.D. 1282, Zil-hijja, A.H. 680, and was the first emperor of the race of Chingiz Khān who embraced the Muhammadan religion. He is said to have been baptized in his youth by the name of Nicholas, but policy, or conviction, led him to abandon the doctrine of Christ for that of Muhammad, when he assumed the name of Ahmad Khān. In the first year of his reign, Majd-ul-Mulk Yazdi, a nobleman of his court, being accused of sorcery, lost his life. He put his own brother to death, and was successful in obtaining possession of the person of his nephew, Arghūn Khān: but that prince was not only rescued from his violence by the Mughul nobles, but by their aid was enabled to deprive him of his crown and life on the night of Thursday 11th August, A.D. 1284, 26th Jumādā I., A.H. 683, and become his successor.

Ahmad Khan Bangash (احمد خان)

(بنگش), second son of Muhammad Khān Bangash, Nawāb of Farrukhābād. When the Wazīr Saḍdar-Jang, after the death of Qāim-Jang, the brother of Ahmad Khān, confiscated his estates in December, A.D. 1749, A.H. 1163, he (Ahmad Khān) collected an army of Afghāns, defeated rājā Nawāl Rāi, the Wazīr's deputy, who was slain in the action, and recovered the territories lately seized from his family. This circumstance took place on Friday the 2nd August, 1750, 10th Rāmāzān, A.H. 1163. After this, Ahmad Khān governed his country about 22 lunar years, and died in November, 1771, Sha'ban, A.H. 1185, when he was succeeded by his son, Diler Immut Khān, who received the title of Muzaffar-Jang from the emperor Shāh 'Ālam, who was then on his way to Dehli from Allāhābād.

Ahmad Khan Mewati, one of the petty rulers (mulk-i-tawāif) who had usurped the chief parts of the Dehli empire during the Sayyid dynasty (beginning of the fifteenth century). Ahmad Khān held Mewāt, his frontier coming close up to Dehli. He had to submit to Bahlūl Lodi.

Ahmad Khan (Sayyid), *S I., of 'Aligarh, a distinguished Muhammadan reformer. He wrote a book on the life and work of the Prophet, and founded the 'Aligha College. (See Sayyid Ahmad.)

Ahmad Khan Sur. Vide Sikandar Khān Sūr.

Ahmad Khattu (Shaikh) (احمد کھٹو)

(شیخ), surname of Wajih-uddīn Ahmad Maghribī, who was the son of Malik Ikhtiyār-uddīn, a nobleman at the court of Sultān Firūz Shāh Tughluq of Dehli, and related to him. After the death of his father, having squandered his wealth in pleasure and dissipation, he became a disciple of Shaikh Bābā Is-hāq Maghribī, and turned very pious and journeyed to Gujrat, where he acquired great fame. During his residence at that place, he obtained such celebrity, that Sultān Muzaffar Gujrātī became his disciple. He died in that country in the reign of Sultān Muhammad of Gujrat, on Thursday 6th of January, 1446, 8th Shawwāl, A.H. 849, aged 111 years, and was buried at Sarkich, near Ahmadābād. Khattū is a place in Nāgūr, where Shaikh Ahmad was born.

(سلطان), son of Abū-Sa'id Mirzā, after whose death, in A.D. 1469, he took possession of Samarqand, and died about the year 1495.

Ahmad (Mulla) (احمد ملا), the son of a gāzi of Tatta. His ancestors, who resided in Sindh, were Fāruqs of the Hanifa sect, but he was a Shī'a. He is the author of a work called Khulāṣat-ul-Hayāt, the Essence of Life. He came from the Deccan to the court of the emperor Akbar, in the year A.D. 1582, A.H. 990, and when that monarch ordered the Tārīkh-i-Afī to be compiled, several authors were employed in the compilation, but subsequently the chief labour devolved upon Mullā Ahmad. The compilation of the first two volumes up to the time of Chingiz Khān was just finished by him, when Mirzā Fūlād Birlās, during the month of January, 1588, Saḍar, A.H. 996, persuaded the Mullā, who was always openly reviling the first khalīfas, to leave his own house at midnight on some pretence, and then murdered him in a street at Lahore. For this act Mirzā Fūlād was sentenced to death, was bound alive to the leg of an elephant in the city of Lahore, and dragged along till he died. The Mullā expired three or four days after the Mirzā. After the death of Mullā Ahmad, the remainder of the work was written by Asaf Khān Jafar Beg, up to the year A.H. 997, or A.D. 1589. Mullā Ahmad was buried at Lahore, but being a Shī'a who openly used to revile the first khalīfas, the people of Lahore exhumed his remains and burnt them.

Ahmad Nizam Shah Bahri (احمد نظام شاہ)

(نظام شاہ), the founder of the Nizām-Shāhī dynasty of the Deccan, was the son of Nizām-ul-Mulk Bahri, prime minister to Sultān Mahmūd Shāh Bahmani. He had conquered many places in the vicinity of his father's jāgīr, and was besieging the fort of Dumdrajpūr about the year A.D. 1486, A.H. 891, when he received intelligence of the assassination of his father, and immediately returned and assumed the titles of the deceased, and was generally known by those of Ahmad Nizām-ul-Mulk Bahri, to which the people of the Deccan added the title of Shāh. As he had distinguished himself repeatedly as a general in the field, though the Sultān wished to remove him from power, none of his nobility would accept the task of reducing him. He, however, on the 3rd May, 1490, 3rd Rajab, A.H. 895, gained a victory over the army of the Sultān, and from that time he sat without opponent on the masnad of royalty, and by the advice of Yūsuf 'Adil Shāh, who had already become independent, having discontinued to read the khutba in the name of the king, put in his own and spread a white umbrella over his head. He laid the foundation of the city of Ahmadnagar in A.D. 1495, A.H. 900, which was completed in two years, and became the first of the Nizām-Shāhī kings of Ahmadnagar. He died in A.D. 1508, A.H. 914, and was succeeded by his son, Burhān Nizām Shāh I. The following is a list of the Nizām-Shāhī kings of Ahmadnagar:

- Ahmad Nizām Shāh I., A.D. 1490. •
- Burhān Nizām Shāh, 1508.
- Husain Nizām Shāh I., 1553.
- Murtaza Nizām Shāh, 1565.
- Mirān Husain Nizām Shāh, 1587.
- Ismā'il Nizām Shāh, 1589.
- Burhān Nizām Shāh II.
- Ibrāhīm Nizām Shāh, 1594.
- Ahmad Nizām Shāh II., son of Shāh Tahir, 1594.
- Bahādur Nizām Shāh, 1595.
- Murtaza Nizām Shāh II., 1598.

The Nizām Shāhī dominions fall under the control of Malik Ambar, 1607.

Ahmad Pasha (أحمد پاشا), a general of Sulaimān I., emperor of Turkey, who, when appointed Governor of Egypt, revolted from his sovereign in A.D. 1524. He was soon after defeated by Ibrāhīm, the favourite of Sulaimān, and his head was sent to Constantinople.

Ahmad Rumi (أحمد رومي), author of the Fāṭiq-ul-Haqāiq, a work written in imitation of the Magnawī of Jalāl uddin Rūmī.

Ahmad Samani (Amir) (أحمد ساماني)

(أمير), second king of the race of Sāmān (Samanides), succeeded his father Amīr Ismā'il in the provinces of Khurāsān, etc., in A.D. 907, A.H. 295. He was a cruel prince, and contended with his uncle, his brothers, and other relations, for the extensive possessions of his father, more by intrigues at the court of Baghdād than by arms. After a reign of seven years, he was murdered by some of his domestics on Thursday 30th January, A.D. 914, 23rd Jumādā I., A.H. 301, and his son, Amīr Naṣr, then only eight years of age, was placed upon the throne of Khurāsān and Bukhārā. Ahmad was buried in Bukhārā, and they gave him the title of Sulṭān Shāhid, i.e. the martyred king.

Ahmad Sarhindi (Shaikh) (أحمد)

(سرهندي شيخ), entitled Mujaddid-i-Alf-i-Sāni, a dervish celebrated for his piety and learning, was the son of Shaikh 'Abdul-Wāhid Fārūqī, and was born at Sarhind in A.D. 1563, A.H. 971. He was a disciple of Khwāja Bāqī, a celebrated saint of Delhi, and is the author of several works. He died on Tuesday 29th November, A.D.

1624, the last Tuesday in the month of Ṣafar, A.H. 1034, and is buried at Sarhind. He was called "Mujaddid-i-Alf-i-Sāni, or the "Renewer of the second Millennium," because he adopted the general belief that every thousand years a maṭn was born who has a thorough knowledge of the Islām, and whose vocation it is to revive and strengthen it. He believed that he was the man of the second (gini) Millennium (alf).

Ahmad, Sayyid, of Bārha, brother of • Sayyid Mahmūd Bārha, served under Akbar in Gujrāt. He was in charge of Akbar's hunting leopards. His son, Sayyid Jamāl-uddin, was killed by the explosion of a mine before Chitor.

Ahmad, Sayyid, of Bukhārā, father of the renowned Shaikh Farid-i-Bukhārī. Vide below.

Ahmad Shah (أحمد شاه), entitled

Mujāhid-ud-dīn Muhammad Abun-Naṣr Ahmad Shāh Bahādur, was the son of Muhammad Shāh, emperor of Delhi, whom he succeeded on the 15th April, A.D. 1748, 27th Rabi' II., A.H. 1161. His mother's name was Udhum Bāi. He was born in the fort of Delhi on Tuesday 14th December, A.D. 1725, 47th Rabi' II., A.H. 1136, and crowned in Pāuipat on Monday 19th April, A.D. 1748, 2nd Jumādā I., A.H. 1161. After a reign of 6 years 3 months and 8 days, he was deposed and imprisoned, and afterwards blinded, together with his mother, by his prime minister, 'Imād-ul-Mulk Ḥāziz-uddin Khān, on Sunday 2nd June, N.S. 1754. After this, he lived more than 21 years, and died on the 1st January, A.D. 1775, from bodily disease. He was buried in front of the mosque of Qadam-Sharif in Delhi, in the mausoleum of Maryam-Makāṭī. After his imprisonment, 'Ālamgir II., son of Jahāndār Shāh, was raised to the throne.

(أبدالي), commonly called Shāh

Durrānī, was the son of a chief of the Afghān tribe of Abdāl, in the vicinity of the city of Hirāt. He was taken prisoner in his infancy by Nadir Shāh, who gave him the post of a mace-bearer, and by degrees promoted him to a considerable command in the army. The morning after the assassination of Nadir Shāh, which took place in the night of the 12th May, 1747, o.s., he made an attack, supported by a corps of Uzbeks, upon the Persian troops, but was repulsed. He then left the army, and proceeding by rapid marches to Qandahār, not only obtained possession of that city, but took a large convoy of treasure which was coming from

Kābul and Sindh to the Persian camp. By the aid of these means, he laid the foundation of a kingdom, which soon attained a strength that rendered it formidable to the surrounding nations. He not only subdued Qandahār and Kābul, but took Peshāwar and Lahore; and emboldened by this success, and the weakness of the empire, he resolved the conquest of the capital of Hindūstān. In the beginning of the year A.D. 1748, A.H. 1161, he began his march from Lahore. Muhammad Shāh, the emperor of Dehli, being at this time too indisposed to take the field, despatched his only son, prince Ahmad, against the enemy, under the command of the wazīr Qamar-uddin Khān, Saifdar-Jang, governor of Audh, and several other chiefs, with a great army. For some days several skirmishes took place between the two armies near Sarhind. At length, on Friday 11th March, A.D. 1748, 22nd Rabi' I., A.H. 1161, Qamar-uddin Khān, the wazīr, being killed as he was at his devotion in his tent by a cannon ball, a panic prevailed in the Mughul army; the battle, however, continued till a magazine of rockets taking fire in the enemy's camp, numbers of the troops were wounded by the explosion; and Shāh Abdālī, either disheartened by the loss, or satisfied by the plunder gained at Sarhind, thought it proper to retreat towards Kābul, which he did unmolested. In the year, A.D. 1757, A.H. 1170, he again advanced as far as Dehli and Agra, and after having plundered and massacred the inhabitants of Mathurā, he returned to Qandahār. About the year A.D. 1758, A.H. 1172, the Marāṭha power had spread itself in almost every province of Hindūstān, when Najib-ud-daula, the Rohela, Shujā'ud-daula Nawāb, of Audh, and not only the Musalmāns, but Hindūs also, joined in petition to Ahmad Shāh Abdālī, that he would march and assume the throne of Dehli, in which they promised to support him. The Abdālī, enraged at the seizure of Lahore by the Marāṭhas, rejoiced at the invitation, and advanced without delay across the Indus, and driving the Marāṭhas before him, he did not stop till they reached the vicinity of Dehli. He engaged the Marāṭhas in several battles, and attained the highest renown among Muhammadans by the memorable defeat that he gave the hostile army on the plains of Pānīpat. This famous action was fought in January, 1761. After this victory, Durānī Shāh returned to his own country, but before his departure he acknowledged Shāh 'Ālum, then in Bengal, as emperor of Hindūstān, and commanded Shujā'ud-daula and other chiefs to submit to his authority. He died after a reign of 26 years in A.D. 1772, A.H. 1182, aged 60 years, and was succeeded by his son, Timur Shāh. His tomb, covered with a gilt cupola, stands near the king's palace, and is held sacred as an asylum.

Ahmad Shah Bahmani II. (Sultan)

(احمد شاه بهمنی). On the death of his father, Sultān Mahmūd Shāh II., in October, A.D. 1518, Shawwāl, A.H. 924, Amir Barid, his prime minister, dreading that the surrounding powers would attack him should he assume open independence, placed prince Ahmad, son of the late king, upon the throne at Ahmadābād Bidar, leaving him the palace, with the use of the royal jewels, and a daily allowance of money for his support. The sum not being equal to his expenses, the king broke up the crown, which was valued at 400,000 huns, or £160,000, and privately sold the jewels. He died two years after his accession to the throne, in the year A.D. 1521, A.H. 927. After his death Amir Barid raised Sultān 'Alā-uddin III., one of the princes, on the throne. Two years after he was imprisoned, and another son of Mahmūd Shāh, named Walī-ullah Shāh, was placed in his room. Three years after his accession, the minister conceiving a passion for his wife, he caused him to be poisoned, and espoused the queen. He then placed Kalīm-ullah, the son of Ahmad Shāh II., on the throne. This prince enjoyed nothing but the name of sovereign, and was never allowed to leave the palace. He was afterwards treated with great rigour by Amir Barid, whereupon he made his escape, first to his uncle Ismā'il 'Adil Shāh to Bijāpūr, and thence to Burhān Nizām Shāh of Ahmadnagar, where he resided till his death. With him ended the dynasty of the Bahmani kings of the Deccan. In fact, before this event, the Deccan was divided into five kingdoms—'Adil-Shāhī, or kings of Bijāpūr; Qurb-Shāhī, or kings of Golkonda; 'Imād-Shāhī, or kings of Barar; Nizām-Shāhī, or kings of Ahmadnagar; and Barid-Shāhī, kings of Ahmadābād Bidar.

Ahmad Shah I. (احمد شاه), second king of Gujrat, was the son of Tālar Khān and grandson of Muzaffar Shāh, whom he succeeded as king of Gujrat. The author of the Muntakhab-ut-Tauwīkh states that his grandfather placed him on the throne during his lifetime, in the year A.H. 813, A.D. 1410, and that he survived that measure five months and sixteen days. In the same year he had the foundation of a new city on the banks of the Sābarmati, which he called after his own name, Ahmadābād, and which afterwards became the capital of the kings of Gujrat. The date of the laying of the foundation of this city is contained in the words "Bā-khair," i.e. all well. He died after a reign of nearly 33 years, on the 4th July, A.D. 1443, 4th Rabi' I., A.H. 847, and was succeeded by his son, Muhammad Shāh.

Ahmad Shah II. (احمد شاه ثانی), king of Gujrat. After the death of Mahmūd Shāh III., there being no relation on whom the succession might devolve, Itīmād Khān, the prime minister, resolved rather than see the kingdom in absolute anarchy, to elevate a youth, whom he asserted to be the son of prince Ahmad Khān, formerly governor of Ahmadābād, and declared him the legal successor to the crown of Gujrat. He was forthwith placed on the throne on the 18th February, A.D. 1554, 15th Rabi' I., A.H. 961. He reigned seven years and some months, and was found murdered one morning at the foot of the palace wall. This event took place on Monday the 21st April, A.D. 1561, 5th Sha'ban, A.H. 968. He was succeeded by Muza'ffar Shāh III.

[Vide Āin Translation, i. p. 335.]

Ahmad Shah of Bengal (احمد شاه), succeeded his father, Jalāl-uddin, to the throne of Bengal in A.D. 834, or A.D. 1430, reigned about 16 years, and died about the year A.D. 1446, A.H. 850. He was succeeded by Nāzīr-uddin Mahmūd Shāh I., a descendant of Shams-uddin Ilyās Shāh.

Ahmad Shah, or Ahmad-ullah Shah

(احمد شاه), commonly called "The Maulawī," a prominent character in the neighbourhood of Shahjāhānpūr and Muhammadī during the mutiny of 1857. He is said to have been the inspired Faqīr who travelled through the upper provinces, a few years ago, on a miraculous mission. He made a pretty long stay at Āgra, astonishing the natives and puzzling the authorities. It seems probable that he was even then busy in sowing the seeds of rebellion. He held great power within the city of Lucknow, in March, 1858, when the Commander-in-chief entered that city and commanded a stronghold in the very heart of the city. He was slain at Pawain, on the 15th June, 1858, sixteen miles north-east of Shahjāhānpūr, and the rājā of that place sent the head and trunk to Mr. Gilbert Money, the Commissioner.

Ahmad Shah Wali Bahmani I.

(احمد شاه ولی بهمنی), was the second son of Sultān Dāūd Shāh of the Bahmani race. He ascended the throne of the Deccan on the 15th September, A.D. 1422, 6th Shawwāl, A.H. 825, ten days before the demise of his brother, Sultān Firūz Shāh, who had resigned the crown in his favour. He is the founder of the city and fort of Ahmadābād Bidar, the foundation of which he laid in the year A.D. 1432, A.H. 836. It is said that the Sultān, on his return from a war at Bidar, took to the amusement of hunting; and coming to a most beautiful spot, finely watered, resolved to build upon it a city, to be called after his name, Ahmadābād. A citadel of great extent and strength was erected on the very site of Bidar, the ancient capital of princes, who, according to the Hindū books, 5,000 years back, possessed the whole extent of Mīrbāt, Karnatik, and Talingāna. Rājā Blūm Sen was one of the most celebrated of this house, and the history of the loves of his daughter and Rājā Nal, king of Mālwa, are famous through all Hindūstān. Their story was translated from the Sanskrit by Shaikh Faizī, under the title of Nal Daman, into Persian verse, at the command of the emperor, Akbar Shāh. Ahmad Shāh reigned 12 lunar years and 10 months, and died on the 19th February, A.D. 1435, 18th Rajab, A.H. 838. He was buried at Ahmadābād Bidar, and was succeeded by his son, Sultān 'Alā-uddin II.

Ahmad (Shaikh) (احمد غزنوی شیعہ), of Ghaznī, author of the work entitled Maqāmāt-i-Shaikh Ahmad, containing the Life of Ahmad Jām, Shaikh-ul-Islām, of Nishāpūr; with a minute account of the miracles performed by him. Vide Ahmad Jām.

Ahmad (Shaikh) (احمد امیثی شیعہ), commonly called Mullā Jiwan, of Amoghī, was the tutor of the emperor 'Alamgīr, and author of the Tafsiṣ-i-Ahmadī. He died in A.D. 1718, A.H. 1130. Vide Mullā Jiwan.

Ahmad (Shaikh), second son of Shaikh

Salim Chishtī, of Fathpūr Sikrī. He served under Akbar, and died in A.H. 985.

Ahmad Shihab-uddin Tālish (احمد شهاب الدین تالش). Vide Shihab-uddin Ahmad Tālish.

Ahmad Suhaili (Amir) (احمد سهیلی)

(امیر), seal-bearer to Sultān Husain Mirzā of Hirāt, to whom several of the poets of his time dedicated their works. Husain Waiz dedicated his Anwār Suhaili to him. Vide Suhaili.

Ahmad-ullah Shah, commonly called

"The Maulawī"; see Ahmad Shah.

Ahmad Yadgar (احمد یادگار), author of the Tarikh-i-Salāṭīn-i-Afghāna, a history of the Afghan kings of India from Bahlid Lodī, composed by order of Dāūd Shāh, last king of Bengal.

whose poetical name is Yaktā, was of the tribe of the Turks called Birlās. His father, Allāh Yār Khān, held at different periods the sūbadārī of Lahore, Tatta, and Multān, and was afterwards appointed to the Faujdārī of Ghaznī. Ahmad Yār Khān also held the Sūbadārī of Tatta in the latter part of the reign of 'Alamgīr. He was an excellent poet, and is the author of several poems. He died on the 21st September, A.D., o.s. 1734, 23rd Jumādā I., A.H. 1147.

Ahmad Yar Khan (Nawab), of Bareilly, the son of Nawāb Zulfikār-ud-daula Muhammad Zulfikār Khān Bahādur Dilāwar-Jang of Bareilly. He was alive in A.D. 1815, A.H. 1230.

Ahmad Zarrūq (احمد زروق), surname of Abul-'Abbās Ahmad bin-Ahmad bin-Muhammad bin-'Isā Barallusi, author of the commentary called Sharḥ Asmā' al-Husnā. He died in A.D. 1493, A.H. 899.

Ahsan (احسن), poetical name of 'Ināyat Khān, the son of Nawāb Zafar Khān. He was Governor of Kābul in the reign of 'Ālamgir, and is the author of a Dīwān. Fide Ashnā.

Ahsan-ullah Khān (Hakim) (احسن الله حكيم), so well-known at Delhi, died in September, 1873, in that city.

'Ain-uddīn (Shaikh) (عين الدين شينخ), of Bijāpūr, author of the Muthaqqit, and Kutāb-ul-Ibtisār, containing a history of all the Muhammadan saints of India. He flourished in the time of Sultān 'Alī-uddīn Husayn Bahmanī.

'Ain-ul-Mulk (Hakim) (عين الملك حكيم), a native of Shīrāz, and a well-educated and learned Muslim, was an officer of rank in the time of the emperor Akbar. He was an elegant poet, and his poetical name was Wutā. He died in the 40th year of the emperor's reign in A.D. 1594, A.H. 1003.
[For further notes, vide Ain Translation, i. p. 481.]

'Ain-ul-Mulk (Khawaja) (عين الملك خواجہ), a distinguished nobleman of the court of Sulṭān Muhammad Shāh Tughluq and his successor Sulṭān Firūz Shāh, kings of Delhi. He is the author of several works, one of which is called Tarsil 'Ain-ul-Mulk. He also appears to be the author of another work called Fath-nāmā, containing an account of the conquests of Sulṭān 'Alā-uddīn, who reigned from A.D. 1296 to 1316.

'Aish (عیش), the poetical name of Muhammad 'Askari, who lived in the reign of the emperor Shāh 'Ālam.

'Aishi (عیشی), a poet, who is the author of a Maṣnawī called Haft Akhtar, or the seven planets, which he wrote in A.D. 1675, A.H. 1086.

Ajaipal, the rājā who founded Ajmīr about A.D. 1183.

Ajit Singh, a Sikh chief and murderer of Mahārājā Sher Singh of Lahore. He also slew Dhaian Singh, another chief, and was himself seized by Ilira Singh, the son of Dhaian Singh, and put to death together with Lena Singh and others. This took place in September, 1843.

Ajit Singh (Raja) (اجیت سنگہ راجہ), a Rāthauri Rājput, and hereditary zamindār of Māpwar, or Jodhpūr, was the son of Rājā Jaswant Singh Rāthauri. He was restored in A.D. 1711 to the throne of his ancestors, and gave his daughter in marriage to the emperor Farrukhsiyar in the year A.D. 1716. He was murdered one night, when fast asleep, at the instigation of his son, Abhai Singh, who succeeded him. This took place in the beginning of the reign of the emperor Muhammad Shāh, about A.D. 1724.

'Ajiz (عاجز), the poetical name of 'Ārit-uddīn Khān, who lived about A.D. 1754, A.H. 1168.

'Ajiz, the poetical name of Lālā Gangā Bishn, father of Rāmjas Munshī, which see.

Ajmal (Shah) (اجمل), or Shāh Muhammad Ajmal, a Pīrẓāda of Allāhābād, was a descendant of Shāh Khān-ullah, and younger brother of Shāh Ghulām Qutb-uddīn, the son of Shāh Muhammad Fākhir, the respectability of whose family is well-known at Allāhābād. He died in the year A.D. 1821, A.H. 1236.

Ajmīri Khan, an inhabitant of Ajmīr. He walked with the emperor Akbar from Agra to Ajmīr, on which account he received the title of Ajmīri Khān from that emperor. He had built a garden on a spot of 28 bighas of ground at Agra. This place is now called Ajmīri Khān-kā Tila.

Aka Rihī, of Nishāpūr, an author.

Akbarabadi Mahall (اکبر آبادی محل), 'Azz-un-Nisā Begam, was the name of one of the wives of the emperor Shāh Jahān. The large red stone mosque at Faizbāzār, in Delhi, was built by her in the year A.D. 1651, A.H. 1060, at a cost of 150,000 rupees. He died on the 29th January, A.D. 1677, 4th Zil-hijja, A.H. 1087, in the reign of 'Ālamgir. There is also a masjid inside the city of Agra built by her, called Akbarābādī Masjid. She had a villa also built at Agra.

Akbar 'Alī Tashbihi (اکبر علی تشبیهی). He is mentioned in the Khulāṣat-ul-Ash'ār to have been the son of a washerman. He went to India, and turned faqir, but, as he was an infidel, his ascetic exercises cannot have been of much use to his soul. He left a diwān of about 8000 verses, and a maṣnawī, called Zar'ra wa Khurshed. He was alive in A.D. 1685, A.H. 993.

Akbar Khan, the son of Dost Muhammad Khān, ruler of Kābul, by his first wife. He shot Sir W. H. Macnaghten on the 26th December, 1841, when his father, Dost Muhammad Khān, was a State prisoner in India. When his father, Dost Muhammad Khān, came in possession of Kābul after the retreat of the English in 1842, he was appointed heir-apparent in preference to Muhammad Afzal Khān, his eldest son by his second wife. He died in 1848, when his full brother, Ghulām Haidar Khān, was nominated heir-apparent, after whose death, in 1868, Sher 'Alī, his brother, was nominated.

Akbar (Prince), the youngest son of the emperor 'Alamgīr, was born on the 10th September, o.s. 1657, 11th Zil-hijja, A.H. 1067, raised the standard of rebellion against his father, and joined the Marāṭha chief Sambhujī in June, 1681. He afterwards quitted his court, and repaired to Persia, where he died in A.D. 1706, A.H. 1118, a few months before his father, and was buried at Mashhad, in Khurāsān. 'Alamgīr, at one time, intended to make Akbar his successor, and this preference arose from Akbar being the son of a Muhammadan mother, the daughter of Shāh Nawāz Khān; whereas his brothers, Sultāns Mu'azzam and A'zam, were born of Rājput princesses.

Akbar Shah (اکبر شاه), the Great, emperor of Hindūstān, surnamed Abul-Fath Jalāl-uddīn Muhammad, was the eldest son of the emperor Humāyūn, and was born in Amarkot in the province of Sindh, on Sunday the 16th October, A.D. 1542, 5th Rajab, A.H. 949, at a time when his father, after being defeated by Sher Shāh, had taken refuge with Rānā Prashād. At the time of his father's death, Akbar was at Kālānūr, where he had been deputed by his father with a considerable force to expel the ex-king Sikandar Shāh Sūr from the Siwālik mountains. When information reached the prince of this momentous event, Bairām Khān, and other officers who were present, raised him to the throne on Friday 14th February, A.D. 1556, 2nd Rabi' II., A.H. 963, Akbar being then only 13 years and 9 months old. He enlarged his dominions by the conquest of Gujrāt, Bengal, Kashmir, and Sindh. Besides the forts of Aṭak, Agra, and Allāhābād, many military works were erected by him. He also built and fortified the town of Fathpūr Sikri, which was his principal residence, and which, though now deserted, is one of the most splendid remains of former grandeur of India. He died after a prosperous reign of 51 lunar years and 9 months, on Wednesday the 16th October, o.s. 1605, 13th Jumāda II., A.H. 1014, aged 64 lunar years and 11 months. The words "Faut-i-Akbar Shāh" (the death of Akbar Shāh), are the chronogram of his death. He was buried in the village of Sikandra, in the environs of Agra, where a splendid mausoleum was built over his remains by his son Jahāngīr, which is still in a high state of preservation. He received after his death the title of "Arsh-Ashyāni," and was succeeded by his son Sultān Salīm, who assumed the title of Jahāngīr. His mother's name was Humida Bānū, commonly called Maryam-Makāni. The history of this potentate has been written, with great elegance and precision, by his wazīr Abul-Fazl, in the work entitled Akbar-nāma. In order to keep his turbulent Uzbeks, Turks, and Afghans, in check, Hindū chiefs were encouraged by Akbar, and entrusted with the highest powers both military and civil, as was the case with Rājā Māleo of Mārwar, Bhagwān Dās of Amber, Mān Singh, his son, and Rājā Todar Mal. He also connected himself and his sons with them by marriage. Both Akbar and his successor, Jahāngīr, had amongst their wives several of Hindū origin. Towards the middle of his reign, Akbar became dissatisfied with the Muhammadan religion, and invited to his court teachers of the Christian, Hindū, and Parsi religions, and took an interest in their discussions. He adopted, however, none of them, but attempted to found a new system of belief, called "Din-i-Ilāhī," which acknowledged one God, and the king as his vice-regent.

Akbar Shah II. (اکبر شاه ثانی), king of Delhi, whose title in full is Abul-Nasr Mu'īn-uddīn Muhammad Akbar Shāh, was the son of the nominal emperor Shāh 'Alam; was born on Wednesday 23rd April, o.s. 1760, 7th Ramazān, A.H. 1173, and succeeded his father at the age of 48, on the 19th November, A.D. 1806, 7th Ramazān, A.H. 1221, as titular king of Delhi. On his accession he made some weak attempts to increase his influence and power. These were properly resisted, but at the same time the pledge given by Lord Wellesley, to increase the allowance of the imperial family when the revenue of the country improved, was redeemed by an act of politic liberality. An augmentation of 10,000 rupees per mensem was appropriated for the support of his eldest son, whom he had declared heir-apparent. He sat on the throne of his ancestors nearly 32 lunar years; died on Friday 28th

September, A.D. 1837, 28th Jumādā II., A.H. 1253, aged about 80 lunar years, and was buried at Dehli, close to the tomb of Bahādur Shāh. His son Bahādur Shāh II., the last king of Dehli, succeeded him. Akbar sometimes wrote poetry, and used the word Shu'ā for his poetical name.

Akhfash Ausāt (أخفش أوسط), was called Akhfash, because he had small eyes. His proper name is Abul-Hasan Sa'īd. He was an author, and died in the year A.D. 830. Some say he was born at Balkh, and died in A.H. 376. There were three persons of this name, all of whom were authors. Akhfash Asghar, or the lesser, died in A.D. 845.

Akhtar (اختر), the poetical name of Qāzī Muhammad Sādiq Khān, an excellent writer of prose and verse.

Akhtar (اختر), the poetical name of Wajīd 'Alī Shāh, the last king of Awdh, now of Garden Reach, Calcutta.

Akmal-uddin Muhammad bin-Mahmud (Shāikh), author of a commentary on the Ilidāya, entitled 'Ināya, or al-'Ināya. There are two commentaries on the Ilidāya, commonly known by that name, but the one much esteemed for its studious analysis and interpretation of the text, is by this author; it was published in Calcutta in 1837. This author died in the year A.D. 1384, A.H. 786.

'Akrima, or more correctly 'Ikrima (عكرمة), surname of Abū-'Abdullah, who was a freed slave of Ibn-'Abbās, and became afterwards his disciple. He was one of the greatest lawyers. He died in the year A.D. 726, A.H. 107.

Aksir, or more correctly, Iksir (Mirza) (اکسیر اصفهانی مرزا), of Isfahān, author of a book of elegies. He served under Nawāb Nizām-ul-Mulk Āṣaf-Jāh and Sādar-Jang, and died in Bengal in A.D. 1756, A.H. 1169.

Alahdad Sarhindi, or more correctly,

Ilahdad, poetically styled Faizi, a native of Sarhindi, and author of a Persian Dictionary called Madār ul-Afāzīl.

[Regarding this dictionary and its author, vide Jour. As. Soc. Bengal, 1868, p. 10.]

Al-Ahnaf (الأحنف), uncle of Yazid, the second khalifa of the house of Umayya. At the battle of Ṣiffin he had fought on the side of 'Alī. Several sayings of this celebrated chief are recorded in the Biographical Dictionary of Ibn Khallikān. He outlived Mu'āwiya.

Alahwirdi Khan (الهوردی خان), or more correctly, Ilahwirdi Khan, a nobleman of the reign of the emperor Jahāngir. He was raised to the rank of 5,000 in the time of Shāh Juhān, and held several offices of importance. He was appointed Governor of Patna, and espoused the cause of Sulṭān Shujā', brother of Aurangzib, A.D. 1658, A.H. 1068, and after the defeat of Shujā', accompanied him to Bengal, where he was slain, together with his son Saif-ullah, by order of that prince, in July, A.D. 1659, Zil-qa'da, A.H. 1069.

[The word wirdi or wirdī means "a rope," God being the ḥabl-i-matin, the strong rope which the faithful seize so as not to perish.]

Alahwirdi Khan (الهوردی خان),

or more correctly, Ilahwirdi Khan, title of Ja'far Khān, the son of Ilahwirdi Khān the first. He was raised to the rank of an amir by 'Alamgir, with the title of Ilahwardi Khān 'Alamgir-Shāhi. He was appointed Subādār of Allāhābād, where he died A.D. 1669, A.H. 1079. He was an excellent poet, and has left a Diwān.

(مهابت جنگ), or more commonly,

Allahwirdi Khan, styled Mahābat-

Jang, the usurper of the government of Bengal, was originally named Mirzā Muhammad 'Alī. His father, Mirzā Muhammad, a Turkmān, an officer in the service of the prince Āzam Shāh, on the death of his patron in A.D. 1707, falling into distress, moved from Dehli to Kaṭak, the capital of Orisā, in hopes of mending his fortune under Shujā'-uddin, the son-in-law of Nawāb Murshid Qulī Ja'far Khān, Subādār of Bengal, who received him with kindness, and after some time bestowed on his son the Faujdari of Rājmaḥall, and procured for him from the emperor a manṣab and the title of Allahwirdi Khān, and afterwards that of Mahābat-Jang. After the death of Shujā'-uddin, and the accession of his son, Sartarūz Khān, to the government of Bengal, Allahwirdi overthrew the Nawāb, in an action in which the latter was slain, in A.D. 1740, A.H. 1153, and usurped the government. He reigned sixteen years over the three provinces of Bengal, Bihār, and Orisā, and died on Saturday the 10th Aṣad, A.D. 1756, 9th Rajab, A.H. 1169, aged 80 years. He was buried in Murshidābād, near the tomb of his mother, in the garden of Khush-Bāgh, and was succeeded by his grand-nephew and grandson, Mirzā Mahmūd, better known by his assumed name of Sirāj-ud-daula. It does not appear that Allahwirdi ever remitted any part of the revenue to Delhi after payment of the first instalment, of which the bulk went to the Maratha Government at Puna. "

Alah Yar Khan (إله يار خان شيخ), or more correctly, Ilah Yar Khan

(Shaikh), son of Shaikh 'Abdus-Subhān, was formerly employed by Nawāb Muḥariz-ul-Mulk Sarbaland Khān, Governor of Gujrāt, and in the reign of the emperor Farrukhsiyar was raised to the rank of 6,000, with the title of Rustam Zamān Khān. In the time of the emperor Muḥammad Shāh, when Rājā Abhai Singh, the son of Rājā Ajit Singh Mūrwarī, was appointed Governor of Gujrāt in the room of Nawāb Sarbaland Khān, the latter made some opposition to his successor; a battle ensued, and Shaikh Ilah Yar, who was then with the Nawāb, was killed in the action. This took place on the day of Dasahrā, 5th October, o.s. 1730, 8th Rabi II., A.H. 1113.

Alah Yar Khan (إله يار خان ابن), (افتخار خان), or more correctly,

Ilah Yar Khan, son of Iftikhār Khān Turkmān, a nobleman of the court of Shāh Jahān. He died in Bengal in A.D. 1650, A.H. 1060.

Alah Yar Khan Mir-Tuzuk (إله يار خان مير توزك), or more correctly, Ilah Yar Khan, a nobleman in the time of the emperor 'Alamgir, who held the rank of 1,500, and died A.D. 1662, A.H. 1073.

Alamayo (Prince), the son of king Theodore of Abyssinia. After the fall of Magdala and the death of his father, 10th April, 1868, he was sent to England to be educated, where he died.

Al-Amin (الامين), the 6th khalifa of the house of 'Abbās, succeeded his father, Hārūn-ur-Rashid, to the throne of Baghdād, in March, A.D. 809, A.H. 193. He was no sooner seated on the throne than he formed a design of excluding his brother, al-Māmūn, from the succession. Accordingly, he deprived him of the furniture of the imperial palace of Khurāsān; and in open violation of his father's will, who had bestowed on al-Māmūn the perpetual government of Khurāsān and of all the troops in that province, he ordered these forces to march directly to Baghdād. Upon the arrival of this order, al-Māmūn expostulated with the general al-Fazl Ibn

Rabi'a, who commanded his troops, and endeavoured to prevent his marching to Baghdād; but without effect, for he punctually obeyed the orders sent by the khalifa. Al-Fazl having ingratiated himself with the khalifa by his ready compliance with his orders, was chosen prime minister, and governed with absolute sway, al-Amin abandoning himself entirely to drunkenness. Al-Fazl was a very able minister; but fearing al-Māmūn's resentment, if ever he should ascend the throne, he gave al-Amin such advice as proved in the end the ruin of them both. He advised him to deprive al-Māmūn of the right of succession that had been given him by his father, and transfer it to his own son Mūsa, though then but an infant. Agreeable to this pernicious advice, the khalifa sent for his brother al-Qāsim from Mesopotamia, and recalled al-Māmūn from Khurāsān, pretending he had occasion for him as an assistant in his councils. By this ill-treatment al-Māmūn was so much provoked, that he resolved to come to an open rupture with his brother. A war soon after broke out between them. Tāhir ibn-Husain, the general of al-Māmūn, laid siege to Baghdād, took it, and having seized al-Amin, cut off his head, and exposed it to public view in the streets of Baghdād. Afterwards he sent it to al-Māmūn in Khurāsān, together with the ring or seal of the khalāfat, the sceptre and the imperial robe. At the sight of these, al-Māmūn fell down on his knees, and returned thanks to God for his success, making the courier who brought the insignia a present of a million dirhams. The death of al-Amin took place on the 6th October, A.D. 813, 6th Safar, A.H. 198. He was then 30 years of age, and had reigned but four years and some months.

'Alamgir I. (عالمگیر پادشاه), emperor of Hindūstān, surnamed Abul-Zafar Muḥi-uddin Muḥammad Aurangzib, took the title of 'Alamgir on his accession to the throne. He was the third son of the emperor Shāh Jahān, born on Sunday 10th October, o.s. 1619, 11th Zil-qa'da, A.H. 1028. His mother's name was Arjmand Bānū, surnamed Mumtāz-Mahall. In his youth, he put on the appearance of religious sanctity, but in June, A.D. 1658, Ramzān, A.H. 1068, during his father's illness, he, in conjunction with his brother, Murād Baksh, seized Agra, and made his father prisoner. Murād was soon after imprisoned by 'Alamgir, who marched to Delhi, where he caused himself to be proclaimed emperor on the 21st July of the same year, 1st Zil-qa'da, A.H. 1068, but was not crowned till the first anniversary of his accession, a circumstance which has introduced some confusion in the chronology of his reign. Soon after, he put Murād Baksh and his eldest brother, the heir-apparent, Dārā Shikoh, to death. He greatly enlarged his dominions, and became so formidable that all Eastern princes sent ambassadors to him. He was an able prince, but a bigoted Sunni, and attempted to force the Hindūs to adopt that faith, destroying their temples, and levying the capitation tax (jizya) from every Hindū. The feudatory chiefs of Rājputāna successfully resisted the impost. He died after a reign of 50 lunar years at Ahmad-nagar, in the Deccan, on Friday, the 21st February, o.s. 1707, 28th Zil-qā'da, A.H. 1118, aged 90 lunar years and 17 days, and was interred in the court of the mausoleum of Shaikh Zain-uddin, in Khuldābād, eight kos from the city of Aurangābād. After his death, he received the title of "Hazrat Khuld-Makān" (i.e. He whose place is in paradise). He was married in the 19th year of his age to a daughter of Shāhnuwāz Khān, the son of 'Asaf Khān, the prime minister of the emperor Jahāngir, by whom he had five sons and four daughters. His eldest son, named Sultān Muhammad, died before his father; his second son was Muhammad Mu'azzam, who succeeded him with the title of Shāh 'Alam Bahādur Shāh; the third, 'Azam Shāh, was slain in battle fought against the latter; the fourth, Muhammad Akbar, who revolted against his father, took refuge in Persia, and died there; the fifth, Kām Baksh, who was also slain in battle. The names of his four daughters are: Zeb-un-Nisā, Zinut-un-Nisā, Badr-un-Nisā, and Mihr-un-Nisā.

'Alamgir II, 'Aziz-uddin, was the son of the emperor Jahārlūg Shāh by Anup Bāi; was born in A.D. 1688, A.H. 1099, and raised to the throne, in the fort of Delhi, by 'Inād-ul-Mulk (Ihāzi-uddin Khān the wazir, on Sunday the 2nd June, n.s. 1754, 10th Sha'bān, A.H. 1167, after the deposition and imprisonment of Ahmad Shāh, the son of the emperor Muhammad Shāh. He was, after a nominal reign of five years and some months, assassinated by the same person who had placed him on the throne, on the 29th November, n.s. 1759, 8th Rabi' II, A.H. 1173, and was interred in the platform before the mausoleum of the emperor Humāyūn. His son 'Alī Gauhar (afterwards Shāh 'Alam) being then in Bengal, Mughiy-ul-Sunnat, son of Kām Baksh, the son of the emperor Aurangzib, was seated on the throne, with the title of Shāh Jahān, and insulted by the empty name of emperor for some months, after which, on the 10th October, n.s. 1760, 29th Šafar, A.H. 1174, the Marāṭhas having plundered Delhi, prince Mirzā Jawān Bakht, the son of 'Alī Gauhar, was placed on the throne by the Marāṭha chief Bhāo, as regent to his father, who was still in Bengal.

Alap Arsalan. Vide Alp Arsalan.

Alaptigin or Alptigin (البتگین), one of the chief nobles of Bukhārā, and Governor of Khurāsān during the reign of the house of Sāmān. Having, in A.D. 962, renounced his allegiance to that court, he retired, with his followers, to Ghazni, then an insignificant town, to escape the resentment of Amir Maṣṣūr Sāmānī, whose elevation to the throne he had opposed, on the ground of his extreme youth. He established a petty principality, of which Ghazni became the capital. He died A.D. 976, A.H. 366, when his son, Abū-ls-ḥaq, succeeded him; but that weak and dissipated prince survived his father but a short time; and the suffrage of all ranks gave the rule to Subiktigin, a chief in the service of Alaptigin, in A.D. 977, A.H. 367.

Al-Aswad (الاسود), an impostor. Vide Musailama.

'Ala-ud-daula (Prince) (علاءالدوله)

(نواب), the son of Bāisanghar Mirzā, and grandson of Shāhrukh Mirzā, after whose death, in A.D. 1447, he ascended the throne at Hirāt, but was soon driven from it by his uncle, Ulugh Beg. After the death of Ulugh Beg, A.D. 1449, he was imprisoned and blinded by his brother, Sultān Bābar. He died in A.D. 1459, A.H. 863.

'Ala-ud-daula (نواب علاؤالدوله), a Nawāb of Bengal. Vide Sarfarāz Khān.

'Ala - ud - daula (Mir or Mirza)

(علاءالدوله مير), a poet whose poetical name was Kāfi. He is the author of a biography of those poets who flourished in the reign of the emperor Akbar. The time of his death is not known, but he was living at the time of the conquest of Chitor by Akbar in A.D. 1567, A.H. 975. There is some mistake in his poetical name; he appears to be the same person who is mentioned under the poetical name of Kāmī, which see.

'Ala-ud-daula Samnani (علاءالدوله)

of the Sūfi Junaid Baghdādī. In his youth he served Arghūn Khān, the Tartar king of Persia, and his uncle Sharuf-uddin Samnānī was a nobleman at the court. He died on Friday the 8th March, A.D. 1336, 23rd Rajab, A.H. 736, aged 77 lunar years, six years before Khwājā Kirmānī.

'Ala-uddin (علاءالدين), a Muhammadan prince of the Arsacides or Assassins, better known by the appellation of "The old man of the mountains." His residence was a castle between Damascus and Antioch, and was surrounded by a number of youths, whom he intoxicated with pleasures, and rendered subservient to his views, by promising still greater voluptuousness in the next world. As these were employed to stab his enemies, he was dreaded by the neighbouring princes.

[Vide Hasan Sabbāh.]

'Ala-uddin (Khwaja) (علاءالدين), surnamed 'Ātā (خواجه عطاءملك)

Malik, was the brother of Shams-uddin Muhammad Sāhib, diwān, and is the author of a history called Jahānkushā.

'Ala-uddin 'Alī al-Quraishi ibn-Nafīs (علاءالدين علي القرشي ابن نفيس), author of the commentary termed Mūjiz-ul-Qānūn fil-Ṭibb, being an epitome of the canons of Avicenna. He died A.D. 1288.

'Ala-uddin Alī Shah (علاءالدين على شاه), king of Western Bengal. He usurped the government of that country after defeating Fakhr-uddin Mubārak Shāh, and was assassinated, about A.H. 746, by the instigation of Khwāja Ilyās, who succeeded him under the title of Shams-uddin Ilyās Shāh.

'Ala-uddin Atsiz (علاءالدين التمز), the son of 'Alā-uddin Hasan Ghori. He defeated Bahā-uddin Sām in A.D. 1210, and reigned four years in Ghūr. He fell in battle against Taj-uddin Ildūz, A.D. 1214, and was the last of the kings of Ghūr, of the family of 'Alā-uddin Hasan.

'Ala-uddin Hasan (علاءالدين حسن غوري), prince of Ghūr, entitled Jahān-sūz. His elder brother, Qutb-uddin, prince of Ghūr, was publicly executed by his brother-in-law, Bahrām Shāh of Ghazni, in A.D. 1119, A.H. 513. Saif-ud-daula, brother of the deceased, took possession of Ghazni in A.D. 1148, A.H. 543, but afterwards was defeated, taken prisoner, and put to death by Bahrām Shāh in A.D. 1149, A.H. 544. When the mournful news of his brother's death reached 'Alā-uddin, he burnt with rage, and being determined to take revenge, invaded Ghazni with a great army. He defeated Bahrām Shāh, who fled to Lāhore, took possession of Ghazni, in A.D. 1152, A.H. 574, and gave up the city to flames, slaughter, and devastation for several days, on which account he is known by the epithet of "Jahān-sūz," or the burner of the world. He carried his animosity so far as to destroy every monument of the Ghazni emperors with the exception of those of Sultān Mahmūd, Mas'ūd, and Ibrāhīm; but he defaced all the inscriptions, even of their times, from every public edifice.

'Alā-uddin died in the year A.D. 1156, A.H. 549, after a reign of six years, and was succeeded by his son Malik Saif-uddin, or Saif-ud-daula, who in little more than a year fell in battle with the Ghiza Turkmāns. He was succeeded by his eldest cousin, Ghiyās-uddin Muhammad Ghori. The following is a list of the kings of Ghūr:

1. 'Alā-uddin Hasan Ghori.
2. Malik Saif-uddin, son of 'Alā-uddin Hasan Ghori.
3. Ghiyās-uddin Muhammad Ghori, son of Bahā-uddin Sām, the younger brother of 'Alā-uddin.
4. Shihab-uddin, brother of Ghiyās-uddin.
5. Ghiyās-uddin Mahmūd, son of Ghiyās-uddin.
6. Bahā-uddin Sām, son of Ghiyās-uddin Mahmūd.
7. Atsiz, son of Jahān-sūz, and last of the kings of Ghūr of this branch.

'Ala-uddin I. حسن کانگوه (بهمني), Hasan Kāngoh Bahmanī, the first Bahmanī king of the Deccan. He was a native of Delhi, and in the service of a Brahmanical astrologer named Kāngoh, or Kāngoh, enjoying high favour with the prince Muhammad Tughluq, afterwards king of Delhi. This Brahman assured Hasan that he perceived from his horoscope that he would rise to great distinction, and be eminently favoured of the Almighty; and made him promise that if he ever should attain regal power, he would use the name of Kāngoh and employ him as his minister of finance, a request with which Hasan readily complied. The Governor of Daulatabād and others having revolted took possession of the place, and selected Hasan (who had then the title of Zafar Khān and a jagir in the Deccan) to be their king. On Friday the 3rd August, A.D. 1347, 24th Rabi' II, A.H. 748, they crowned him and raised him on the throne, with the title of 'Alā-uddin Hasan Kāngoh Bahmanī at Kulbarga, which place became the royal residence and capital of the first Muhammadan king of the Deccan, and was named Ahsanābād. Towards the end of the reign of Muhammad Tughluq of Delhi, he subdued every part of the Deccan previously subject to the throne of Delhi. The death of 'Alā-uddin Hasan happened ten years, ten months, and seven days after his accession to the throne, about the 10th February, A.D. 1358, 1st Rabi' I, A.H. 759. He was succeeded by his son, Muhammad Shāh I. Bahmanī. The following is a list of the kings of the Bahmanī dynasty of Kulbarga or Ahsanābād with the years of their accessions:

'Alā-uddin Hasan I.	A.H. 748, A.D. 1347.
Muhammad Shāh I.	A.H. 759, A.D. 1358.
Mujāhid Shāh	A.H. 776, A.D. 1376.
Dāūd Shāh	A.H. 780, A.D. 1378.
Mahmūd Shāh	A.H. 780, A.D. 1378.
Ghiyās-uddin	A.H. 799, A.D. 1397.
Shams-uddin	A.H. 799, A.D. 1397.

Firūz Shāh Roz-afzūn A.H. 800, A.D. 1397.
 Ahmad Shāh Walī . . . A.H. 825, A.D. 1422.
 'Alā-uddin Ahmad II. A.H. 838, A.D. 1435.
 Humāyūn the cruel.
 Nizām Shāh.
 Muhammad Shāh II?
 Mahmūd II.
 Ahmad Shāh II.
 'Alā-uddin III.
 Walī-ullah.

Kalim-ullah, with whom the Bahmanī dynasty terminates, and is succeeded by Amīr Barīd at Ahmadābād Bidar.

'Ala-uddin II. (Sultan) (علاءالدين)

(ثاني سلطان), son of Sultān Ahmad

Shāh Walī Bahmanī, ascended the throne at Ahmadābād Bidar in the Deccan, in the month of February, A.D. 1435, A.H. 838, and died after a reign of 23 years, 9 months, and 20 days in the year A.D. 1457, A.H. 862. He was succeeded by his son, Humāyūn, a cruel prince.

'Ala-uddin Khilji (Sultan) (علاءالدين)

styled Sikandār-i-Sānī, "the second Alexander," was the nephew and son-in-law of Sultān Jalāl-uddin Firūz Shāh Khiljī, whom he murdered at Kara-Mānikpur, in the province of Allāhābād, on the 29th July, A.D. 1296, 17th Ramazān, A.H. 695, and marching thence with his army ascended the throne of Dehli in the month of October the same year, Zil-hijja, A.H. 695, after having defeated and removed Rukn-uddin Ibrāhīm, the son of Firūz Shāh. He was the first Musalmān king who made an attempt to conquer the Deccan. He took the fort of Chitor in August, A.D. 1303, 3rd Muharram, A.H. 703. It is said that the empire never flourished so much as in his reign. Palaces, mosques, universities, baths, mausolea, forts, and all kinds of public and private buildings, seemed to rise as if by magic. Among the poets of his reign, we may record the names of Amīr Khusrāu, Khwāja Hasan, Sadr-uddin 'Alī, Fakhr-uddin Khawās, Hamid-uddin Rājā, Maulānā 'Arif, 'Abdul-Hakīm, and Shihāb-uddin Sadr-Nishīn. In poetry, Amīr Khusrāu and Khwāja Hasan had the first rank. In philosophy and physic, Maulānā Badr-uddin Dāmishqī. In divinity, Maulānā Shitānī. In astrology, Shaikh Nizām-uddin Auliya acquired much fame. 'Alā-uddin died, according to Firishta, on the 6th Shawwāl, A.H. 716, or 19th December, A.D. 1316, after having reigned more than twenty years. He was buried in the tomb which he had constructed in his life-time near the Manihār Masjid in Old Dehli. Amīr Khusrāu, in that part of his Diwān called Naghiya-i-Naghiya, says that he died on the 6th Shawwāl, A.H. 715, i.e. about the 30th December, A.D. 1315. After his death, Malik Nāib Kāfur, one of the eunuchs of the king, placed his youngest son, Sultān Shihāb-uddin 'Umar, who was then only seven years old, on the throne. After a short time, however, the eunuch Kāfur was slain, and Shihāb-uddin was set aside, and his elder brother, Mubārak Khān, under the title of Mubārak Shāh, ascended the throne on the 1st April, A.D. 1316, 7th Muharram, A.H. 716, but according to Firishta in 1317. It was the boast of 'Alā-uddin that he had destroyed one thousand temples in Banāras alone. He is best known now by the beautiful gateway to the Kutb Mosque, and the unfinished tower by which he hoped to rival the Kutb Minār.

(عماد شاه) succeeded to the government of Barār in the Deccan after the death of his father, Fath-ullah 'Imād Shāh, about the year A.D. 1513, and following the example of other chiefs of the house of Bahmanī, declared himself king of Barār, and established his royal residence at Gawāl. He contracted an alliance by marriage with the sister of Ismā'il 'Adil Shāh, named Khadija, in A.D. 1528, A.H. 935, and died some time about the year A.D. 1532, A.H. 939. He was succeeded by his son Daryā, 'Imād Shāh.

'Ala-uddin Kaiqubad (Sultan) (علاءالدين)

(الدين كيقباد), a prince of the Saljūqian dynasty. When Sultān Malik-Shāh conquered Rūm or Anatolia, in Asiatic Turkey, he conferred on Sulaimān, the son of Kutlumish, that kingdom, whose descendants reigned there till the time of Abūqā Khān, the Tartar king of Persia. 'Alā-uddin Kaiqubād was a descendant of Sulaimān Shāh, and died about the year A.D. 1239, A.H. 637. See Sulaimān bin-Kutlumish.

'Ala-uddin Majzub (Shah) (علاءالدين)

(مجبذب شاه), a Muhammadan

saint of Āgra, commonly called Shāh 'Alāwal Balāwal, son of Sayyid Sulaimān. He died in the beginning of the reign of Islām Shāh, son of Sher Shāh, in the year A.D. 1546, A.H. 953. His tomb is in Āgra, at a place called Nāi-ki Mauḍī, where crowds of Musalmāns assemble every year to worship it. The adjacent mosque has sunk into the ground to the spring of the arches.

'Ala-uddin Mas'ud (علاءالدين مسعود)

Sultān of Dehli, was the son of Sultān Rukh-uddin Firūz, and grandson of Shams-uddin Iltutmish, was raised to the throne of Dehli after the murder of Bahram Shāh, in May, A.D. 1242, Zil-qa'da, A.H. 639. He died on the 10th June, A.D. 1246, 23rd Muharram, A.H. 644, after a reign of four years, and was succeeded by his brother (or uncle), Sultān Nāzir-uddin Mahmūd.

'Ala-uddin Muhammad al-Samarqandi (Shaikh) (علاءالدين محمد), author of a compendium of Al-Qudūri's Mukhtasir, which he entitled the Tuhfat-ul-Fukahā. This work was commented upon by his pupil Abū-Bakr bin-Mas'ūd al-Kāshānī, who died in A.D. 1191, A.H. 587. This comment is entitled al-Badāi' as-Ṣanāi'

'Ala-uddin Husain Shaḥ (علاءالدين حسين شاه), king of Bengal. He was the son of Sayyid Ashraf, and after defeating Muzaffar Shāh at Gaur in A.H. 899, ascended the throne of Bengal. He reigned with justice for a considerably longer period than any of his predecessors until the year A.D. 1521, A.H. 927, when he died a natural death, after a reign of 28 years. His son Nuṣrat Shāh succeeded him.

'Ala-uddin (Sultan) (علاءالدين سلطان),

a king of the race of Saljūq, who reigned in Iconium, and died in the year A.D. 1301, A.H. 700.

'Ala-uddin (Sultan) (علاءالدين سلطان),

the last king of Dehlī of the Sayyid dynasty, succeeded his father Sultān Muhammad Shāh to the throne in January, A.D. 1446, Shawwāl, A.H. 849. Bahlōl Lodi, in A.D. 1451, A.H. 855, at the instigation of Hamid Khān wazīr, took possession of Dehlī during the absence of the king, who was then at Badāon. 'Ala-uddin continued to reside at Badāon unmolested till his death, which happened in the year A.D. 1478, A.H. 883; his reign at Dehlī being about six years, and his government at Badāon 28 years.

'Ala-uddin (Sayyid), of Oudh, whose poetical name was Wāsilī, is the author of a Tarjī-band, commonly called Māmuqimān, with which word it commences. He was a native of Khurāsān, came to India about the year A.D. 1300, became a disciple of Nizām-uddin Auliā, and fixed his residence in Oudh.

'Ala-uddin Takash (علاءالدين تكش), a Sultān of Khwārizm. Vide Takash.

'Alā-ul-mulk Kotwal (Malik) (علاء الملك کوتوال),

He served under Sultān 'Alā-uddin Khiljī, king of Dehlī, and was the uncle of Ziyā-uddin Barni, the author of the Tārīkh Firūz-Shāhi. He was then very old and so fat that he was not able to attend the court more than once a month. He was living in A.D. 1300, A.H. 699.

'Al-Aziz Billah Abu-al-Mansur Tarar

(العزیز بالله ابو المنصور طرار), son of Mu'izz-ud-din-allah, second Khalifa of Egypt the Fātimite dynasty, succeeded his father in A.D. 976, and committed the management of affairs entirely to the care of Jauhar, or Ja'far, his father's long-experienced general and prime minister. This famous warrior, after several battles with Ad-Aftakīn, the amir of Damascus and the Karuṭians, died in A.D. 990, A.H. 381. 'Al-Aziz died on his way to Syria, in the 21st year of his reign and 42nd of his age, and was succeeded by his son, Abul-Manṣūr.

Al-Baghawī (البغوی). Vide Abul-

Faraj-al-Baghawī and Abū-Muhammad Farrāi ibn-Mas'ūd al-Baghawī.

Al-Batani (البطاني), commonly called by European writers Albatagnius, was an Arabian astronomer who wrote a treatise on the knowledge and the obliquity of the Zodiac of the stars. He died in 929. He greatly reformed astronomy, comparing his own observations with those of Ptolemy. This book was printed at Nuremberg, in 1537, 4to., and at Bologna in 1546. He died A.D. 929.

Al-Birunī (البرونی), an Arabian author, whose original work, entitled Tārīkh Hind, was compiled in India in about A.D. 1030-33. See Abū-Raiḥān.

Al-Bukhari (البخاری), who received this name from Bukhārā, the place of his birth or his chief residence, was a famous lawyer by name of Muhammad Ismā'il. His collection of traditions on the Muhammadan religion, commonly called Ṣaḥīḥ-ul-Bukhārī, is of the greatest authority of all that have ever been made; he called it Al-Ṣaḥīḥ, i.e. genuine, because he separated the spurious ones from those that were authentic. He says, he has selected 7,276 of the most authentic traditions out of 10,000, all of which he looked upon to be true, having rejected 200,000 as false. He died at Bukhārā in the year A.D. 870, A.H. 266. Vide Muhammad Ismā'il Bukhārī.

Al-Dawani. Vide Dawānī.

Al-Farghani (الفرغاني), surname of Ahmad ibn Kathīr or Kaṣīr, an Arabian astronomer of the ninth century, author of an introduction to astronomy.

'Alha and Udal (آلها وأودل), princes of Mahāba. There is a heroic ballad sung or recited by the Hindū sepoys in a kind of monotonous, but not unmusical sort of chaunt, accompanied by a sotto voce beat of the dhöl, which rise to a constrepito in the pause between the verses. Whoever has resided in a military cantonnement must have frequently observed the sepoy, when disengaged from military duty, collected in small knots, listening to one of the party reciting some poem or tale to a deeply interested audience. The subject of this lay is the prowess of 'Alhâ', the Rāja of Mahōba, a town in Bundelkhand, of which extensive ruins remain. The hero is described as the terror of the Muhammadans; his triumphs over whom are attributed not only to his own valour, but the favour of the goddess Kālī, whom he had propitiated by the offering of his life. There are many songs, it is said, of this prince, and his brother Udai, a warrior of equal estimation; but they are preserved only traditionally by the Pōwars, and their amateur students. The verses are in Bhukha.

Al-Hadi (ألہادی), the fourth khalif of the house of 'Abbās, succeeded his father, al-Mahdi, on the 4th August, A.D. 785, 23rd Muharram, A.H. 169, to the throne of Baghdād. He reigned one year and one month, and having formed a design to deprive his younger brother, Harūn-al-Rashid, of his right of succession, and even to assassinate him, was poisoned by his prime minister about the month of September, A.D. 786, Rabi' 1. A.H. 170. On his death his brother, the celebrated Harūn-al-Rashid, ascended the throne.

Al-Hakm, also called ibn Abūl Hakm,

an Arabian author, who (according to the chronological arrangement of the Arab authorities by Howard Vyse and Dr. Sprenger, in the former's second volume of The Pyramids of Gizeh) lived about A.D. 1450, or six hundred years after the death of the Khalif al-Mamūn of Baghdād; but by a manuscript note recorded by a gentleman of the British Museum (1868), it appears that al-Hakm was nearly contemporary with that prince, who flourished between A.D. 813 and 843. Al-Hakm writes that the Great Pyramid in Egypt was built by a certain antediluvian king Saurid, and filled by him chiefly with celestial spheres and figures of the stars, together with the perfumes used in their worship; and that khalifa al-Mamūn found the body of a man deposited, with jewels, arms, and golden writing, in the coffer, when he broke into the king's chamber of the Great Pyramid. But neither Abū Mūshar Jāfar bin Muhammad Balkhī, who wrote in about A.D. 890, nor ibn Khurdalbeh, in A.D. 920, have one word about al-Mamūn, or any opening of the pyramid. But when we descend to Masnūdi, in A.D. 967, he, after an astonishing amount of romancing on what took place at the building of the pyramids 300 years before the Flood, mentions that, not al-Mamūn, but his father, khalifa Harūn-al-Rashid, attempted to break into the Great Pyramid; and after penetrating 20 cubits, found a vessel containing 1000 coins of the finest gold, each just one ounce in weight, and making up a sum which exactly repaid the cost of his operations, at which, it is added, he greatly wondered. About the year A.D. 1170, or 340 years after al-Mamūn's age, that prince is mentioned by Abū Abd-ullah Muhammad bin Abdur Rahim Alkaiisi, who states that he was informed that those who went into the upper parts of the Great Pyramid in the time of al-Mamūn, came to a small passage, containing the image of a man in green stone, and within that a human body with golden armour, etc., etc.

Al-Hasan (الحسن), an Arabian who wrote on optics, about the year A.D. 1100.

'Ali (علي ابن ابو طالب), son of Abū-

Talib, was the cousin and son-in-law of Muhammad. He was born 23 years before the Hijri, i.e., in the year A.D. 599, at the very temple itself. His mother's name was Fātima, daughter of Asad the son of Hāshim. After the death of Muhammad, he was opposed in his attempts to succeed the prophet by 'Uṣmān and 'Umar, and retired into Arabia, where his mild and enlarged interpretation of the Qurān, increased the number of his proselytes. After the death of 'Uṣmān, the 3rd khalifa, he was acknowledged khalifa by the Egyptians and Arabians in July, A.D. 655, but in less than five years after he was compelled to resign that title, and Mu'āwiya was proclaimed khalifa at Damascus. 'Ali was subsequently wounded by 'Abdur-Rahmān ibn-Muljim in a mosque at Qūfa, whilst engaged in his evening prayers, on Friday the 22nd January, A.D. 661, 17th Ramazān, A.H. 40, and died four days after. 'Ali, after the decease of his beloved Fātima, the daughter of the prophet, claimed the privilege of polygamy, and had 18 sons and 18 daughters. The most renowned of them are the two sons of Fātima, viz., Hasan and Husain, as also Muhammad Hanif, by another wife. Among the many surnames, or honorable titles bestowed upon 'Ali, are the following: 'Wasi', which signifies "legatee and heir;" Murtaza, "beloved by God;" Asud-ullah-ul-Ghālīb, "the victorious lion of God;" Haidar, "a lion;" Shāh Mardān, "king of men;" Sher Khudā, "the lion of God." His memory is still held in the highest veneration by the Muhammadans, who say that he was the first that embraced their religion. They say, moreover, that Muhammad, talking of him, said, "Ali is for me and I am for him; he stands to me in the same rank as Aaron did to Moses; I am the town in which all knowledge is shut up, and he is the gate of it." However, these great eulogies did not hinder his name, and that of all his family, from being cursed, and their persons from being excommunicated through all the mosques of the empire of the khalifas of the house of Umayy; from Mu'āwiya down to the time of 'Umar ibn-

'Abdul-'Aziz, who suppressed the solemn malediction. There were besides several khalifas of the house of 'Abbās, who expressed a great aversion to 'Ali and all his posterity; such as Mur'azid and Mutawakkil. On the other hand, the Fāṭimite khalifas of Egypt caused his name to be added to that of Muhammad in the call to prayer (azān), which is chaunted from the turrets of the mosques. He is the first of the twelve Imāms, eleven of whom were his descendants. Their names are as follows:

1. 'Ali, the son of Abū-Tālib.
2. Imām Hasan, eldest son of 'Ali.
3. „ Husain, second son of 'Ali.
4. „ Zain-ul-'Abidin, son of Husain.
5. „ Muhammad Bāqir, son of Zain-ul-'Abidin.
6. Imām Ja'far Sādiq, son of Muhammad Bāqir.
7. Imām Mūsā Kāzim, son of Ja'far Sādiq.
8. „ 'Alī Mūsā Raza, son of Mūsā Kāzim.
9. Imām Muhammad Taqī, son of Mūsā Raza.
10. Imām 'Alī Naqī, son of Muhammad Taqī.
11. Imām Hasan 'Askarī, son of 'Alī Naqī.
12. „ Mahdī, son of Hasan 'Askarī.

As to the place of 'Ali's burial, authors differ; but the most probable opinion is, that he was buried in that place which is now called Najaf Ashraf, in Kūfa, and this is visited by the Muhammadans as his tomb.

The followers of 'Ali are called Shī'as, which signifies sectaries or adherents in general, a term first used about the fourth century of the Hijra.

'Ali is reputed the author of several works in Arabic, particularly a collection of one hundred sentences (paraphrased in Persian by Rashid-uddin-Wafwat), and a Diwān of didactic poems, often read in Madrasahs.

In mentioning 'Ali's name, the Shī'a use the phrase "alhihi as-salām," which is used after the names of prophets; the Sunnis say, "karrāma allāhu wajhahu," may God honour his face.

'Ali (علي بن أحمد بن أبو بكر كوفي), son of Ahmad bin-Abū-Bakr Kūfī, a resident of Uch and author of the history of Sindh in Arabic called Tuhfat-ul-Kirām. This work was translated into Persian and called Chāch Nāma, a translation of which was made in English by Lieutenant Postans and published in the Jour. As. Soc. in 1838.

'Ali (علي بن أحمد المشهور بأحمدى), son of Ahmad, commonly called Wāhidī, was an Arabian author who wrote three Commentaries, viz.: Wasit, Zakir, and Basit, and also Kitāb Nuzūl. He died in A.D. 1075, A.D. 468.

'Ali (علي بن حمزة), son of Hamzā, author of the Tārīkh Jāfahānī.

'Ali (علي بن حسين واعظ), son of Husain Wāiz Kashifī, the famous writer of the Anwār-i-Shahīdī, author of the work called Lafāif-uz-Zarāif, containing the anecdotes of Muhammad, of the twelve Imāms, of the ancient kings of Persia, and of various other persons. He is also the author of another work entitled Rushdāt, containing the Memoirs of the Sūfī Shaikhs of the Nakshbandī order. 'Ali died in A.D. 1632, A.H. 939. He is also called 'Alī Wācz.

[Vide Šafi-uddin Muhammad.]

'Ali (علي بن محمد قوسنجي), son of Muhammad Qūsanzī, an astronomer, and author of the Sharḥ-ul-Jadīd, the new commentary. He died A.D. 1474, A.H. 879.

'Ali (علي بن عثمان), son of 'Uṣmān

Gilānī, author of the Kashf-ul-Mahfūh, containing a minute description of the twelve orders of Sūfīs, etc., written in A.D. 1499, A.H. 905. He is also called Pīr 'Alī Hajwīrī.

'Ali (علي ملقب به أبو الحسن), surnamed Abul Hasan. [Vide 'Abul-Hasan 'Ali.]

'Ali (علي تخلص ملا ناصر علي), the poetical name of Mullā Nāṣir 'Alī, which see.

'Ali (علي), the poetical name of a poet who converted the Ghazals of Ḥāfiz into Mukhammas.

'Ali 'Adil Shah I. (علي عادل شاه),

(بیجاپوری), of Bijāpūr, surnamed

Abul-Muzaḥfar, succeeded to the throne of that kingdom after the death of his father Ibrāhīm 'Adil Shāh I, in A.D. 1558, A.H. 965. He reigned about 22 lunar years, and as he had no son, he appointed in the year A.D. 1579 his nephew, Ibrāhīm, son of his brother Tālmāsp, his successor; and the following year on the night of Thursday the 10th April, 1580, 23rd Šafar, A.H. 988, he was assassinated by a young eunuch. He was buried in the city of Bijāpūr, where his tomb or mausoleum is called by the people, "Rauza Ali."

[Vide Āin Translation, i. p. 545.]

'Ali 'Adil Shah II. (علي عادل شاه),

succeeded his father Muhammad 'Adil Shāh in his childhood in November, A.D. 1666, Muharram, A.H. 1067, and was unable to remedy the disorders which had occurred in his kingdom, by the rebellion of the celebrated Marhatta chief Sewājī, who had possessed himself of all the strongholds in the Kōkan country, and erected several new forts. Under pretence of making his submissions to the Sultān, he begged an interview with the Bijāpūr general, Nizāl Khān, whom he treacherously stabbed in an embrace. Rustam Khān was afterwards sent against him, and defeated. 'Alī 'Adil Shāh died in the year A.D. 1672, A.H. 1083, after a turbulent reign of eleven or twelve years. He was succeeded by his son Sikandar 'Adil Shāh.

'Alī Bahadur (علي نواب بهادر),

Nawāb of Banda, eldest son of Shamshe Bahādūr I. and grandson of the Marhatta chief Bājī Rāo Peshwā I. He received the investiture of Bundelkhand from Nānā Farnawīs, the Pūna minister, about the year A.D. 1790, and accompanied by his brother Ghānī Bahādūr, and supported by a powerful army, invaded Bundelkhand, but was opposed by Nānā Arjun (the guardian of Bakhat Singh, a descendant of Rāja Chatursāl), who falling in the contest, and Rāja Bakhat Singh being taken prisoner, Alī Bahādūr acquired the whole of that part of the rāj of Banda which belonged to Bakhat Singh and all the rāj of Pannā. He reigned about eleven or twelve years, and as at the time of his death, which happened in A.D. 1801 or 1802, his eldest son, Shamshe Bahādūr II. was absent at Pūna, his youngest son Zulfikār Alī was proclaimed (in violation of the title of his eldest brother) as his successor by his uncle Ghānī Bahādūr and his Mawān Himmat Bahādūr Goshāin. Ghānī Bahādūr, however, was soon after expelled by Shamshe Bahādūr, who took possession of the rāj.

'Alī Bahadur Khan (علي بهادر خان), the last Nayyab of Banda and son of Zulfikār Alī Khān Bahādūr. He is the author of a diwān and a masnawī called Mehrullāh. He was removed for alleged complicity in the rebellion of 1857.

'Alī Bai (علي باي), (whose name is spelt in our English Biographical Dictionaries Alī Bey) was a native of Natolia, son of a Greek priest. In his thirteenth year he was carried away by some robbers as he was hunting, and sold to Ibrahim, a lieutenant of the Janissaries, at Grand Cairo, who treated him with kindness. 'Alī distinguished himself against the Arabs, but when his patron was basely assassinated in A.D. 1758, by Abrahīm the Circassian, he avenged his death, and slew the murderer with his own hand. This violent measure raised him enemies, and his flight to Jerusalem and to Ptolemais or Acre with difficulty saved him from the resentment of the Ottoman Porte, that had demanded his head. Time, however, paved the way to his elevation. Those who had espoused the cause of the Circassian were sacrificed to the public safety; and 'Alī, recalled by the public voice, governed the country with benevolence and equity. In a battle fought against a rebellious Mamlūk to whom he had entrusted part of his army, 'Alī saw some of his troops desert, and unwilling to survive a defeat, he defended himself with the fury of a lion, till he was cut down by a sabre and carried to the conqueror's tent, where eight days after he expired of his wounds, April 21st, A.D. 1773, in his 45th year, and left behind him a character unrivalled for excellence, for courage, and magnanimity.

'Alī Bai (علي بائي). The titles by which he was known in the Muhammadan countries were al-Amīr, al-Ḥakīm, al-Faqīh, al-Sharīf, al-Ḥāj 'Alī Bāi ibn Usman Bāi al-Abbās, Khādīm Baitullāh al-Ḥarām, i.e. the prince, the learned, doctor of the law, of the blood of Muhammad, pilgrim, 'Alī Bāi, son of Usman Bāi, of the race of the Abbasides, servant of the house of God. He was master of the Arabic language, and had carefully studied the mathematical and natural branches of science and knowledge. It was in A.D. 1802 that he visited England. In June, A.D. 1803, he sailed from Spain to Morocco, and travelled through Tripoli, Cyprus, Egypt, Arabia, Syria, and Turkey, and wrote a history of his travels, which was translated.

into English and published in London in the year A.D. 1816, entitled The Travels of 'Alī Bāi. In his visit to the isle of Cyprus he surveyed some curious remains of antiquity that have been usually overlooked. Having been admitted in his character of a Muhammadan prince to sweep the interior of the Ka'ba at Mecca, the most sacred office that a Muslimān can perform, and to visit it repeatedly, he has given, from personal inspection, a more minute and exact account of the Temple of Mecca than other travellers could lay before the public. His notice of the venerated mountain beyond Mecca, the last and principal object of the pilgrimage to that city, and his description of the interior of the Temple of Jerusalem, which no Christian is permitted to enter, is said to contain much new information.

'Ali Barid I. (علي برید) succeeded his father, Amīr Barid, to the throne of Ahmadābād Bidar in the Deccan in the year A.D. 1542, and was the first of this family who assumed royalty. He died after a reign of more than twenty years in A.D. 1562, A.H. 970, and was succeeded by his son Ibrāhīm Barid.

'Ali Barid II. succeeded his father

Kasim Barid II. in the government of Ahmadābād Bidar in A.D. 1572, and was deposed in A.D. 1609 by his relative Amīr Barid II. who succeeded him, and was the last of this dynasty.

'Ali Beg (علي بیگ), a Pole, born of Christian parents. When young he was made prisoner by the Tartars and sold to the Turks, who educated him in the Muhammadan faith. He rose in the Turkish court, and was appointed interpreter to the Grand Signior, and translated the Bible and the English Catechism into the Turkish language. His great work is on the liturgy of the Turks, their pilgrimages to Mecca, and other religious ceremonies, translated into Latin by Dr. Smith. He died A.D. 1675.

'Ali Beg (Mirza) (علي بیگ مرزا),

a native of Badakhshān who held a high rank in the service of the emperor Akbar; and was honoured with the office of 4,000 in the reign of Jahāngir. He accompanied the emperor one day to visit the shrine of the celebrated saint, Shaikh Main-uddin Chishti at Ajmir, and happening to see the tomb of Shāhbāz Khān Kambū, he embraced it, and crying out with a loud voice, that "he, when living, was one of his oldest and best friends," gave up the ghost. This happened on the 11th March, o.s. 1616, 2nd Rabi I. A.H. 1025.

'Ali bin al-Husain al-Masa'udi al-Hudaili (علي بن الحسين مسعودی), the far-famed author of the Marūj-uz-Zuhab, and who has been, with some justice, termed the Herodotus of the East, was also a writer on the Shia' traditions. He died A.D. 957, A.D. 346.

'Ali Buya or Alīfūr Buya (علي بویه), entitled 'Imād-ud-daula, the first of a race of kings of Fars and 'Irāk. The flatterers of this family, which is called Dilāmi or Dīlīmā (from the name of their native village, Dīlām) and Buya or Buyites (from that of one of their ancestors named Buya), trace their descent to the ancient kings of Persia; but the first of this race that history notices was a fisherman of Dīlām whose name was Buya. His eldest son, 'Ali Buya, was employed by a governor of his native country, named Murawij, and was in the command of the chief part of his army, with which he encountered and defeated Yākūt, the governor of Isfahān, and by the immense plunder that he obtained from that victory, he became at once a leader of reputation and of power. He pursued Yākūt into Fars, defeated him again, and took possession of the whole of that province as well as those of Kirmān, Khūzistān and 'Irāq in A.D. 933, A.H. 321. This chief was afterwards tempted by the weak and distracted state of the Khalīfat or Caliphate, to a still higher enterprise; accompanied by his two brothers, Hasan and Ahmad, he marched to Baghdad. The Khalīf al-Rāzī Billāh fled, but was soon induced to return, and his first act was to heap honours on those who had taken possession of his capital. 'Ali Buya, on agreeing to pay annually 600,000 dinars of gold, was appointed viceroy of Fars and 'Irāq, with the rank of Amīr-ul-'Umra, and the title of 'Imād-ud-daula. His younger brother Ahmad received the title of Maizz-ud-daula, and was nominated wazīr to the Khalīf. Hasan, who was his second brother, received the title of Rukn-ud-daula; and acted, during the life of 'Ali Buya, under that chief. 'Ali Buya fixed his residence at Shīrāz, and died on Sunday the 11th November, A.D. 949, 16th Jamād I. A.H. 338, much regretted by his soldiers and subjects. He was succeeded by his brother Rukn-ud-daula.

Sultāns of the race of Buya, who reigned 108 lunar years in Persia.

'Imād-ud-daula 'Ali Buya; Maizz-ud-daula Ahmad; Rukn-ud-daula Hasan, sons of Buya.

Azd-ud-daula; Monyyad-ud-daula; Fokhr-ud-daula Abūl Hasan, sons of Rukn-ud-daula.

Majid-ud-daula, son of Fokhr-ud-daula.

Izz-ud-daula Bukhtiyār, son of Maizz-ud-daula.

'Ali Durdazd (مولانا علی دردزد)

(مولانا استرآبادی), of Astarābad.

A poet who was contemporary with Katibī Tarshīzī, who died in A.D. 1435, A.H. 840. He is the author of a diwān. He was living in A.D. 1436, in which year his wife died, on which account he wrote a beautiful elegy.

Alif bin Nur Kashani (الف بن نورکاشنی), author of another Matla-ul-Anwār, besides the one of the same name written by Mullā Nūṣa Wāez. This is a complete history of Muhammad, his descendants, with Memoirs of the khālifs.

‘Ali Ghulam Astarabadi (علی غلام استرآبادی), a poet who served under the kings of Deccan and was living in A.D. 1665, A.H. 972, in which year Rāmraj the rāja of Bijanagar was defeated and slain in a battle against the Muhammadan princes of Deccan, of which event he wrote a chronogram.

‘Ali Hamdani (علی همدانی). Vide Sayyid ‘Ali Hamdānī.

‘Ali Hamza (علی حمزه), author of the Jawāhir-ul-Anwār, a commentary on the abstruse meaning of the verses of the Qurān, etc., being an abridgment of the Miftāh-ul-Anwār, written in A.D. 1436. ‘Ali Hamza’s poetical name is ‘Azūrī, which see.

‘Ali Hazin (Shaikh Muhammad) (علی حزین). Vide Hazm.

‘Ali ibn Isa (علی ابن عیسی), general of the khālif al-Amīn, killed in battle against Tahir ibn Husain, the general of the khālif al-Māmūn, in the year A.D. 811, A.H. 195, and his head sent as a present to the khālif.

‘Ali Ibrahim Khan (علی ابراهیم خان), a native of Patna, who became judge of Banaras. He was the author of twenty-eight mans and several other works, and a tazkira or biography of Urdū poets, which he wrote about the year A.D. 1782, A.H. 1196, and which he entitled Gubzār-i-Ibrāhīm. His poetical name is Khālil. He is called Hāl by Isḥāqī (q.v.).

‘Ali Jah (علی جاه), the eldest son of the Nizām of Haidarābād. He rebelled against his father in Juno, A.D. 1795, was defeated and made prisoner, and died shortly after.

‘Ali Lala (Shaikh Razi-uddin), a native of Ghaznī. His father Sayyid Lālā was the uncle of Shaikh Sanāi the poet. He was a disciple of Najm-uddin Kubrā and his title Shaikh-ul-Shaikh. He died A.D. 1244, A.H. 642, aged 76 lunar years.

‘Ali Mahaemi (علی مهاییمی), a native of Mahāem in the Deccan, was the son of Shaikh Ahmad, and is the author of the commentary on the Qurān entitled Tafsīr Rah-mānī. He died A.D. 1431, A.H. 835.

‘Ali Mardan Khan (علی مردان خان), Amīr-ul-Umrā, was a native of Persia and governor of Qandahār on the part of the king of Persia, but finding himself exposed to much danger from the tyranny of his sovereign Shāh Safi, he gave up the place to the emperor Shāh Jahān, and himself took refuge at Delhi in the year A.D. 1637, A.H. 1047. He was received with great honour, was created Amīr-ul-Umrā, and was, at different times, made governor of Kashmir and Kābul, and employed in various wars and other duties. He excited universal admiration at the court by the skill and judgment of his public works, of which the canal which bears his name at Delhi still affords a proof, and the taste and elegance he displayed on all occasions of show and festivity. He died on his way to Kashmir, where he was going for change of air, on the 16th April, A.D. o.s. 1657, 12th Rajab, A.H. 1067, and was buried at Lahore in the mausoleum of his mother. He left three sons, viz., Ibrāhīm Khān, Isma‘īl Beg and Is-hāq Beg, of whom the two last were slain in the battle which took place between Dārā Shikōh and ‘Alam-gīr at Dhaulpūr on the 29th May, o.s. 1658, 7th Ramazān, A.H. 1068. He is believed to have introduced the bulbous Tartar dome into Indian architecture.

‘Ali Mosi Raza (علی موسی رضا), the eighth Imām of the race of ‘Ali, and the son of Mūsā Kāzim the seventh Imām. His mother’s name was Umm Sayyid; he was born in the year A.D. 764 or A.D. 769, A.H. 147, and died on Friday the 12th August, A.D. 818, 9th Safar, A.H. 203. His wife’s name was Umm Hābil, the daughter of the Khālif al-Māmūn. His sepulchre is at Tūs in Khurāsān. That town is now commonly called Mash-had, that is, the place of martyrdom of the Imām. To the enclosure wherein his tomb is raised, the Persians give the name of “Rauzat Rizawī,” or the garden of Razā, and esteem it the most sacred spot in all Persia. The chief ornament and support of Mash-had is this tomb, to which many thousands of pious pilgrims annually resort, and which had been once greatly enriched by the bounty of sovereigns. Nasir-Allah Mirzā, the son of Nādir Shāh, carried away the golden railing that surrounded the tomb, and Nādir Mirzā, son of Shāh-rukh Mirzā and grandson of Nādir Shāh, took down the great golden ball which ornamented the top of the dome over the grave, and which was said to weigh 60 maunds or 420 pounds. The carpet fringed with gold, the golden lamps, and everything valuable were plundered by these necessitous and rapacious princes. Aī Mūsā Razā was poisoned by the Khālif al-Māmūn, consequently is called a martyr.

(خان), founder of the Rohila government. It is mentioned in Forster's Travels, that in the year A.D. 1720 Bushārat Khān and Dāūd Khān, of the tribe of Rohilas, accompanied by a small number of their adventurous countrymen, came into Hindūstan in quest of military service. They were first entertained by Madan Shāh, a Hindū chief of Serauli (a small town on the north-west quarter of Rohilkhand) who by robbery and predatory excursions maintained a large party of banditti. In the plunder of an adjacent village, Dāūd Khān captured a youth of the Jāt sect, whom he adopted and brought up in the Muhammadan faith, by the name of 'Alī Muhammad, and distinguished this boy by pre-eminent marks of paternal affection. Some years after, the Rohilas quarrelling with Madan Shāh, retired from his country, and associating themselves with Chānd Khān, the chief of Bareilly, they jointly entered into the service of Azmat Khān, the governor of Morādābād. After the death of Dāūd Khān, who was slain by the mountaineers in one of his excursions, the Rohila party in a short space of time seized on the districts of Madan Shāh and 'Alī Muhammad Khān was declared chief of the party. From the negligence of government and the weak state of the empire of Delhi in the reign of Muhammad Shāh, he possessed himself of the district of Katir (now called from the residence of the Rohilas, Rohilkhand) and assumed independence of the royal authority. He was besieged in March, A.D. 1745, Safar, A.H. 1158, in a fortress called Bankar and 'Aoulā and taken prisoner, but was released after some time, and a jāgir conferred on him. The emperor Muhammad Shāh died in April, A.D. 1748, A.H. 1161, and 'Alī Muhammad Khān some time after him in the same year at 'Aoulā, which he had ornamented with numerous public and private edifices. He left four sons, viz., Sa'd-ullāh Khān, Abdullah Khān, Faiz-ullāh Khān, and Dūnde Khān. Sa'd-ullāh Khān succeeded to his father's possession, being then twelve years old.

[Vide Sa'd-ullāh Khān.]

'Ali (Mulla) (علي ملا), Muhaddis or the traditionist, whose poetical name was "Tūrī," died in the year A.D. 1573, A.H. 981, and Mulla 'Alam wrote the chronogram of his death.

'Ali Murad Khan (علي مراد خان),

a king of Persia of the Zand family. He succeeded to the throne after the death of Sādiq Khān in March, A.D. 1781, and assumed the title of wakīl. He reigned over Persia five years, and was independent of the government two years prior to this period. Persia during this time enjoyed a certain degree of peace. He continued to confine his rival 'Akā Muhammad Khān to the province of Māzandarān. He died in A.D. 1786.

'Ali Murad (Mir), present chief of Khairpūr (1869).

'Ali Naqi (Imam) (علي نقی امام) was the tenth Imām of the race of 'Alī, and the son of Imām Muhammad Taqī, who was the ninth Imām. He was born in the year A.D. 828, A.H. 213, and died on the 17th June, A.D. 869, 3rd Rajab, A.H. 255. His tomb is in Sarmaurāe (which is also called Sāmira) in Baghdād, where his son Muhammad Askari was also buried afterwards.

'Ali Naqi Khan (Nawab) (علي نقی خان)

(خان نواب), the father-in-law and prime minister of Wājīd 'Alī Shāh, the last king of Lucknow. He died at Lucknow of cholera about the 1st December, 1871, 17th Ramzān, A.H. 1278.

'Ali Naqi (علي نقی), Diwān of Prince

Murad Bakhs, son of Shalyahī, whom he slew with his own hand.

'Ali Nawedi (علي نویدی), a poet and pupil of Shāh Tāhir Andjāni, came to India, where he was patronized by Abūl Fatha Husain Nizām Shāh I. in the Deccan. For some time he was in disgrace with his patron and changed his Takhallus or poetical name from Nawedi to Nū-umaidi (or hopeless). He died in A.D. 1567, A.H. 976, at Ahmad-nagar in the Deccan.

'Ali Quli Beg. Vide Shāh Afghān Khān.

'Ali Quli Beg of Khurasan (علي قلی بیگ)

(بیگ), author of a tazkira or biography of poets.

'Ali Quli Khan (Nawab) (علي قلی خان).

'Ali Qusanji (Mulla) (علي قسانجي).

Vide Mulla 'Alī Qūsanji.

'Ali Qusanji (Mulla) (علي قوسانجي), author of the Sharah Tajrid, and Haasia Kashshaf. He died in A.D. 1405, A.H. 808.

'Ali Shahab Tarshizi (علي شهاب ترشیزی)

(ترشیزی), a poet who was a native of Tarshish. He flourished in the reign of Shāh-rukh Mirzā, and found a patron in his son Muhammad Jogī, in whose praise he wrote several panegyrics. He was contemporary with the poet Azurī, who died A.D. 1462, A.H. 866.

Alisher (Amir) (علیشیر امیر), surnamed

Nizām-uddin, was the prime minister of the Sultān Husain Mirzā (q.v.), ruler of Khurāsān. He sprang from an illustrious family of the Jaghtai or Chaghtai tribe. His father, Gajkina Bahādur, held one of the principal offices of government during the reign of Sultān Abūl Qāsim Bābar Bahādur, great grandson of Amīr Taimūr. His grandfather, by his mother's side, was one of the principal Amirs of Sultān Baiqara Mirzā, the grandfather of Sultān Husain Mirzā. 'Alisher, who was born A.D. 1440, and educated at the same school as his future patron, attached himself originally to Sultān Abūl Qāsim Bābar Mirzā, who was greatly attached to him, and called him his son. After his death he retired to Mash-had and continued his studies there; which place he subsequently quitted for Samarkand, on account of the disturbances which broke out in Khurāsān, and applied himself diligently to the acquirement of knowledge in the college of Khwāja Fuzl-ullāh. When Sultān Husain Mirzā became uncontrolled ruler of Khurāsān (A.D. 1469), he requested Sultān Ahmad Mirzā, at that time ruler of the countries beyond the Oxus, to send 'Alisher to him. On his arrival he was received with the greatest distinction, and raised to the highest posts of honour. 'Alisher's palace was open to all men of learning; and notwithstanding that the reigns of government were placed in his hands, in the midst of the weightiest affairs, he neglected no opportunity of improving both himself and others in the pursuit of knowledge. He was not only honoured by his own Sultān and his officers, but foreign princes also esteemed and respected him. After being employed in the capacity of diwān and prime minister for some time, love of study induced him to resign, and bidding a final adieu to public life, he passed the remainder of his days in composing Turkish and Persian works, of which Sām Mirzā recounts the names of no less than twenty-one. Daulat Shāh, the biographer, Mirkhānd and his son Khūndamīr, the historians, dedicated their works to him, and amongst other men of genius who were cherished by his liberality may be mentioned the celebrated poet Jāmī. His collection of Odes in the Chaghtai or pure Turkish dialect, which he wrote under the poetical name of Nawāī, amounts to 10,000 couplets, and his parody of Nizāmī's five poems, containing nearly 30,000 couplets, is universally admired by the cultivators of Turkish poetry, in which he is considered to be without a rival. In the Persian language also he wrote a collection of Odes, under the poetical name of Fāni or Fanāī, consisting of 6000 distiches. He was also a proficient in painting and some of the plastic arts. 'Alisher died on Sunday the 6th December, A.D. 1500, 15th Jamād I. A.H. 906, five years before his royal friend and master Sultān Husain Mirzā. Khūndamīr has recorded the year of his death in an affectionate chronogram: "His highness the Amir, the asylum of divine guidance, in whom all the marks of mercy were conspicuous, has quitted the thorny brake of the world, and fled to the rose-garden of compassion. Since the 'light of mercy' has descended on his soul, those words represent the year of his departure." One of his works is called Majālis-ul-Nafāes.

'Ali Tabar (Prince) (علی طبار شهزاده), was the son of prince 'Azim Shāh, and grandson of the emperor 'Alamgir. He died in the year A.D. 1734, A.H. 1147.

'Ali Waez (علی واعظ), the son of the famous Husain Wāez Kāshifi of Ifirāt.

Al-Mahdi (المهدي), the third khalif of the race of Abbās, succeeded his father, Abū Ja'far al-Mansūr, to the throne of Baghdad, and was inaugurated on Sunday the 8th October, A.D. 775, 6th Zil-hijja, A.H. 158. From the accession of al-Mahdi to the year A.D. 781, A.H. 164, the most remarkable event was the rebellion of al-Ma'na (or al-Ma'anna), which see. All this time war had been carried on with the Greeks, but without any remarkable success on either side. But after the suppression of the rebellion of al-Ma'na, the khalif ordered his son Harūn al-Rashid to penetrate into the Greek territories with an army of 95,000 men. Harūn then, having entered the dominions of the empress Irene, defeated one of her commanders that advanced against him; after which he laid waste several of the imperial provinces with fire and sword, and even threatened the city of Constantinople itself. By this the empress was so terrified, that she purchased a peace with the khalif by paying him an annual tribute of 70,000 pieces of gold, which for the present at least delivered her from the depredations of these barbarians. After the signing of the treaty, Harūn returned home laden with spoils and glory. This year (i.e. the 164th year of the Hijrī or A.D. 781) according to some of the oriental historians, the sun one day, a little after his rising, totally lost his light in a moment without being eclipsed, when neither any fog nor any cloud of dust appeared to obscure him. This frightful darkness continued till noon, to the great astonishment of the people settled in the countries where it happened. Al-Mahdi was poisoned, though undesignedly, by one of his concubines, named Hasana. She had designed to destroy one of her rivals whom she imagined to have too great an ascendancy over the khalif, by giving her a poisoned pear. Thus the latter, not suspecting anything, gave to the khalif; who had no sooner eaten it than he felt himself in exquisite torture, and soon after expired. This event took place on the eve of Thursday the 4th August, A.D. 785, 23rd Muhurram, A.H. 169, in a village called Ar Rād in the dependencies of Māsabadān. He was succeeded by his eldest son al-Ilādī.

Al-Mamun (المأمون), surnamed 'Ab-

- dullāh, was the seventh khalif of the race of the Abbasides, and the second son of Harūn al-Rashid. He was proclaimed khalif at Baghdad on the 6th October, A.D. 813, 6th Safar, A.H. 198, the day on which his brother al-Amin was assassinated. He conferred the government of Khurāsān upon Tāhir ibn Husain, his general, and his descendants with almost absolute and unlimited power. This happened in the year A.D. 820, A.H. 205, from which time we may date the dismemberment of that province from the empire of the khalifs. During the reign of this khalif nothing remarkable happened; only the African Moslems invaded the island of Sicily, where they made themselves master of several places. Al-Māmūn conquered part of Crete, had the best Greek writers translated into Arabic, and made a collection of the best authors. He also calculated a set of astronomical tables and founded an academy at Baghdad. In Khurāsān he made Tūs, at that time the capital of the kingdom, his place of residence. Under his patronage Khurāsān became the resort of learned men; and the city of Tūs, the great rival of Baghdad. He died of a surfeit on the 18th August, A.D. 833, 17th Rajab, A.H. 218, after a reign of 20 years and some months in Asia Minor, aged 48 years, and was buried at Tarsus, a city on the frontiers of Asia Minor. His wife named Būrān, daughter of Hasam ibn Sahl, his prime minister, out-lived him 50 years, and died on Tuesday the 22nd September, A.D. 884, 27th Rabi' I. A.H. 271, aged 80 years. Al-Māmūn was succeeded by his brother al-Mo'tasim Billah.

Al-Mansur (المنصور), 2nd khalif of Barbary of the Fatimite race. Vide Ismāil, surnamed al-Mansūr.

Al-Mansur (المنصور), whose former name was Abū Ja'far, was called al-Mansūr, the victorious, by his overcoming his enemies. He was the second khalif of the noble house of Banī Abbās or Abbasides, and succeeded to the throne of Irak at Baghdad after the death of his brother Abū Abbās surnamed al-Saffāh, in A.D. 754, A.H. 136. He was opposed by his uncle, 'Abdullāh, son of Ali, who caused himself to be proclaimed khalif at Damascus, but was defeated by al-Mansūr's general, Abū Muslim. He laid the foundation of the city of Baghdad on the banks of the Tigris in A.D. 762, and finished it four years after. He was a prince of extraordinary talent and taste, and an ardent lover of science and literature. He got the Pahlawi copy of Pilpay's Fables translated into Arabic. In the year A.D. 775, A.H. 158, the khalif set out from Baghdad in order to perform the pilgrimage to Mecca; but being taken ill on the road, he expired at Bir Maimūn, whence his body was carried to Mecca, where, after 100 graves had been dug, that his sepulchre might be concealed, he was interred, having lived, according to some 63, according to others 68 years, and reigned 22 lunar years. He is said to have been extremely covetous, and to have left in his treasury 600,000,000 dirhams and 24,000,000 dinars. He is reported to have paid his cook by assigning him the heads and legs of the animals dressed in his kitchen, and to have obliged him to procure at his own expense all the fuel and vessels he had occasion for. He was succeeded by his son al-Mahdi. A Christian physician, named Bueishua, was very eminent at the court of al-Mansūr, who understanding that he had an old infirm woman for his wife, sent him three beautiful Greek girls and 3,000 dinars as a present. Bacchisua sent back the girls and told the khaliif that his religion prohibited his having more than one wife at a time; which pleased the khaliif so much, that he loaded him with presents, and permitted him, at his earnest request, to return to his own country of Khurāsān.

Al-Maḡna or al-Maḡanna (المغنة),

a famous impostor of Khurāsān who lived in the reign of al-Mahdī the khaliifa of Baghdād. His true name was Hākam ibn Hāsham, and he had been an under-secretary to Abū Muslim, governor of that province. Hereafterwards turned soldier, and passed thence into Māwarunnahr, where he gave himself out as a prophet. The name of al-Maḡna, as also that of al-Burḡai, that is, the veiled, he received from his custom of covering his face with a veil or girde-mask, to conceal his deformity; he having lost an eye in the wars, and being otherwise of a despicable appearance, and a stutterer; though his followers pretended he did this for the same reason that Moses did, viz., lest the splendour of his countenance should dazzle the eyes of his beholders. In some places he made a great many proselytes, deluding the people with a number of juggling tricks which they swallowed as miracles, and particularly by causing the appearance of a moon to rise out of a wall for many nights together; whence he was also called in the Persian tongue, Sāzinda Māh, or the Moon-maker. This wretch, not content with being reckoned a prophet, arrogated to himself divine honours; pretending that the Deity resided in his person. He had first, he said, assumed the body of Adam, then that of Noah, and subsequently of many other wise and great men. The last human form he pretended to have adopted was that of Abū Muslim, a prince of Khurāsān, from whom it proceeded to him. At last this impostor raised an open rebellion against the khaliif, and made himself master of several fortified places in Khurāsān, so that al-Mahdī was obliged to send one of his generals with an army against him about the year A.D. 780, A.H. 163. Upon the approach of the khaliifa's troops, al-Maḡna retired into one of his strong fortresses which he had well provided for a siege. But being closely besieged by the khaliifa's forces, and seeing no possibility of escaping, he gave poison in wine to his whole family and all that were with him in the castle; when they were dead, he burnt their bodies, together with all their furniture, provisions, and cattle; and lastly he threw himself into the flames. He had promised his followers, that his soul should transmigrate into the form of an old man riding on a greyish coloured beast, and that after so many years he would return and give them the earth for their possession; which ridiculous expectation kept the sect in being for several years. English readers will remember the use made of this story by the author of Lallah Rookh.

Al-Mo'tamid Billah (المعتد بالله),

the fifteenth khaliif of the house of Abbās, was the son of al-Mutwakkil Billah. He was raised to the throne of Baghdād by the Turks after the murder of al-Mu'tadi in A.D. 870, A.H. 256. This year the prince of the Zan-jians, Ali or al-Habib, made incursions to the very gates of Baghdād, doing prodigious mischief wherever he passed. In the year A.D. 874, Ya'kūb-bin-Lys having taken Khurāsān from the descendants of Tāhir, attacked and defeated Muhammad ibn Wāsil (who had killed the khaliif's governor of Fars, and afterwards made himself master of that province), seizing on his palace, where he found a sum of money amounting to 40,000,000 dirhams. In the year A.D. 879, A.H. 265, Ahmad ibn Tulān rebelled against the khaliif and set up for himself in Egypt. There were now four independent powers in the Moslem dominions, besides the house of Umayya in Spain, viz., the African Moslems, or Aglabites, who had for a long time acted independently; Ahmad ibn Tulān in Syria and Egypt; Ya'kūb ibn al-Lys in Khurāsān, and al-Habib in Arabia and I'raq. In the year A.D. 883, A.H. 270, al-Habib was defeated and slain by al-Muwaffiq, the khaliif's brother and coadjutor, who ordered his head to be cut off, and carried through a great part of that region which he had so long disturbed. In the year A.D. 891, A.H. 278, the Qarmatians first made their appearance in the Moslem empire, and gave almost continual disturbance to the khaliifs and their subjects. Al-Mo'tamid reigned 22 lunar years 11 months and some days, and died in the year A.D. 892, A.H. 279. He was succeeded by his nephew, al-Mo'tazid Billah, the son of al-Muwaffiq.

Al-Mo'tasim Billah (المعتصم بالله)

was the fourth son of Harūn-al-Rashid, and the eighth khaliif of the house of Abbās. He succeeded to the throne by virtue of his brother al-Mamūn's express nomination of him to the exclusion of his own son al-Abbās, and his other brother al-Qāsim, who had been appointed by Harūn-al-Rashid. In the beginning of his reign, A.D. 833, A.H. 218, he was obliged to employ the whole forces of his empire against one Bābak, who had been for a considerable time in rebellion in Persia and Persian I'raq, and had taken upon himself the title of a prophet. He was, however, defeated and slain. In the year A.D. 838, A.H. 223, the Greek emperor Theophilus invaded the khaliif's territories, where he behaved with the greatest cruelty, and, by destroying Sozopetra, the place of al-Mo'tasim's nativity, notwithstanding his earnest entreaties to the contrary, occasioned the terrible distinction of Amorium. He is said to have been so robust, that he once carried a burden of 1,000 pounds weight several paces. As the people of Baghdād disturbed him with frequent revolts and commotions, he took the resolution to abandon that city, and build another for his own residence. The new city he built was first called Sāmira, and afterwards Sarmauri (for that which gives pleasure at first sight), and stood in the Arabian 'Irāq. He was attached to the opinion of the Matazalites who maintain the creation of the Qurān; and both he and his predecessor cruelly persecuted those who believed it to be eternal. Al-Mo'tasim died on Thursday the 6th January, A.D. 842, 18th Rabi I. A.H. 227. He reigned eight years, eight months and eight days, was born in the eighth month (Shaban) of the year, was the eighth khalif of the house of Abbās, ascended the throne in the 218th year of the Hijri, died on the eighteenth of Rabi I. lived forty-eight years, fought eight battles, built eight palaces, begat eight sons and eight daughters, had 8,000 slaves, and had 8,000,000 dinars, and 80,000 dirhams in his treasury at his death, whence the oriental historians gave him the name of al-Musammān, or the Octonary. He was the first khalif that added to his name the title of Billāh, equivalent to the Dei Gratia of Christian sovereigns. He was succeeded by his son al-Wāthiq or Wāsiq Billāh.

'Al-Mo'tazid Billah (المعتز بالله),

the son of al-Muwaffiq, the son of al-Mut-wakkil Billah, was the sixteenth khalif of the race of Abbas. He came to the throne of Baghdad after the death of his uncle al-Mo'tamid Billāh in A.D. 892, A.H. 279. In the first year of his reign, he demanded in marriage the daughter of Khamarawia, Sultān or khalif of Egypt, the son of Ahmad ibn Tulān; which was agreed to by him with the utmost joy, and their nuptials were solemnized with great pomp in the year A.D. 895, A.H. 282. He carried on a war with the Qarmatians, but very unsuccessfully, his forces being defeated with great slaughter, and his general al-Abbās taken prisoner. The khalif some time after his marriage granted to Hārūn, son of Khamarawia, the perpetual prefecture of Awāsam and Kinnisrin, which he annexed to that of Egypt and Syria, upon condition that he paid him an annual tribute of 45,000 dinars. He reigned nine years, eight months and twenty-five days, and died in A.D. 902, A.H. 289. His son al-Muktafi Billāh succeeded him.

Al-Mughira (المغيرة), the son of Sayyid and governor of Kūfa in the time of Mu'awia, the first khalif of the house of Umayy. He was an active man, and of very good parts; he had lost one of his eyes at the battle of Yernouk, though some say that it was with looking at an eclipse. By the followers of Alī he was accounted to be of the wrong party, and one of the chief of them. For thus they reckon: There are five elders on Alī's side: Muhammad, Alī, Fātima, Hasan and Husain; and to these are opposed Abū Bakr, 'Umar, Mu'awia, Amrū and al-Mughira. He died in the year A.D. 670, A.H. 50, at Kūfa. A great plague had been raging in the city, which made him retire from it; but returning upon its violence abating, he nevertheless caught it, and died of it.

Al-Muhtadi (المهتدي), the fourteenth khalif of the Abbasides, was the son of one of Wāthiq's concubines named Kurb, who is supposed by some to have been a Christian. Al-Muhtadi was raised to the throne of Baghdad after the dethronement of al-Mutta'iz Billāh in A.D. 869, A.H. 255. The beginning of his reign is remarkable for the irruption of the Zanjians, a people of Nubja, Ethiopia, and the country of Caffres, into Arabia, where they penetrated into the neighbourhood of Basra and Kūfa. The chief of this gang of robbers was 'Alī ibn Muhammad ibn Abdūl Rahmān, also called al-Habīb, who falsely gave himself out to be of the family of Alī ibn Abū Taleb. This made such an impression upon the Shias in those parts, that they flocked to him in great numbers; which enabled him to seize upon the cities of Basra and Ramla, and even to pass the Tigris at the head of a formidable army. In the year A.D. 870, A.H. 256, al-Muhtadi was barbarously murdered by the Turks who had raised him to the throne. He reigned only eleven months and was succeeded by al-Mo'tamid.

Al-Mukhtar (المختار), a celebrated

Muhammadian chief who had beaten all the generals of the khalifs Yazid, Marwān, and Abdūl Malik, and had made himself sole master of Babylonian 'Irāq, whereof Kūfa was the capital. He persecuted all those he could lay his hands on, who were not of Husain's party: he never pardoned any one of those who had declared themselves enemies to the family of the prophet, nor those who, as he believed, had dipped their hands in Husain's blood or that of his relations. He sent an army against Ubaid-ullah the son of Zayād, who was sent by the khalif Abdūl Mālik towards Kūfa with leave to plunder it for three days, and slow him in battle in August, A.D. 686, Muharram, A.H. 67. Al-Mukhtar was killed at Kūfa in a battle fought with Misaa'b, the brother of Abdullāh, the son of Zuhayr, governor of Basra, in the month of April, A.D. 687, Rāmzan, A.H. 67, in the 67th year of his age. It is said that he killed nearly 50,000 men.

was the seventeenth khalif of the house of Abbās who reigned in Baghdad. He succeeded his father, al-Mo'tazid Billāh, in A.D. 902, A.H. 289, and proved a warlike and successful prince. He gained several advantages over the Qarmatians, but was not able to reduce them. The Turks, however, having invaded the province of Māwarunnahr, were defeated with great slaughter; after which al-Muktafi carried on a successful war against the Greeks, from whom he took Seleucia. After this he invaded Syria and Egypt, which provinces he recovered from the house of Ahmad ibn Tulān in A.D. 905, A.H. 292; he then renewed the war with success against the Greeks and Qarmatians.

Al-Muktafi died in A.D. 908, A.H. 295, after a reign of about six years and a half. He was the last of the khalfis who made any figure by their warlike exploits. His successors al-Muqtadir, al-Qāhir, and al-Rāzi, were so distressed by the Qagmānians and numberless usurpers who were every day starting up, that by the 325th year of the Hijri, A.D. 937, they had nothing left but the city of Baghdad.

Al-Muqtadi Billah (المقتدي بالله), surnamed Abū Qāsim Abd-ullāh, the son of Muhammad, and grandson of al-Qāem Billāh, was raised to the throne of Baghdad after the death of his grandfather in A.D. 1075, A.H. 467, by orders of Sultān Malikshāh Saljūki, who was then the real master of the empire. He was the 27th khaliḥ of the race of Abbās, reigned 19 lunar years and 5 months and died A.D. 1094, A.H. 487. His death induced Barkayāraq the Saljūki, the reigning Sultān of Persia, whose brother Mahmūd had died about the same period, to go to Baghdad, where he confirmed al-Mustazhir, the son of the late khaliḥ, as his successor, and was himself hailed by the new lord of the faithful, as Sultān of the empire.

Al-Muqtadir Billah (المقتدر بالله),

the eighteenth khaliḥ of the house of Abbās, was the son of al-Muqtazid Billāh. He succeeded his brother al-Muktafi to the throne of Baghdad in A.D. 908, A.H. 295. He reigned 24 lunar years 2 months and 7 days, and was murdered by a eunuch on the 29th October, A.D. 932, 25th Shawwāl, A.H. 320. He was succeeded by his brother al-Qāhir Billāh.

Al-Muqtafi Bi-amr-illah (المقتفي)

(بامرالله), the son of al-Mustazahr, was the 31st khaliḥ of the house of Abbās. He succeeded his nephew al-Rāshid in A.D. 1136, A.H. 530, reigned about 24 lunar years and died in A.D. 1160, A.H. 555, leaving his kingdom to his son al-Mustanjad.

Al-Mustaa'li Billah (المستعلي بالله), the sixth Fatimite khaliḥ, succeeded his father, al-Mustanṣar Billāh, in the government of Egypt and Syria. During his reign, the power of that dynasty was impaired, and its authority weakened, their political influence having ceased in most of the Syrian cities, and the provinces of that country having fallen into the possessions of the Turkmans on one hand, and the Franks on the other. This people (the Crusaders) entered Syria and encamped before Antioch in the month of October, A.D. 1097, Zil-qada, A.H. 490; they obtained possession of it on the 20th June, 1098, 16th Rajab, A.H. 491; the following year they took Maaratun Nomān, and in the month of July, 1099, Sha'ban, A.H. 492, they became masters of Jerusalem, after a siege of more than 40 days. This city was taken on a Friday morning; during the ensuing week a great multitude of Moslems perished, and upwards of 70,000 were slain in the Masjid al-Aqṣā (or mosque of Umar). — al-Mustaa'li was born at Cairo on the 24th August, A.D. 1076, 20th Muharram, A.H. 469, proclaimed khaliḥ on Thursday the 28th December, A.D. 1094, 18th Zil-hijja, A.H. 487, and died in Egypt on the 10th December, A.D. 1101, 16th Safar, A.H. 495. His son Amar bi Ahkām-ullāh Abū Ali Mansūr succeeded him.

Al-Mustaa'sim Billah (المستعصم بالله), surnamed Abū Ahmad Abdullāh, was the thirty-seventh and last khaliḥ of the race of Abbās. He succeeded his father, al-Mustanṣar, to the throne of Baghdad in A.D. 1142, A.H. 540. In his time Ilalakū Khān Tartar, emperor of the Mughals and grandson of the great conqueror Changiz Khān, besieged Baghdad for two months, and having taken that place, seized al-Mustaa'sim and his four sons, whom he put to a most cruel death with 800,000 of its inhabitants. Ilalakū Khān was very desirous of seizing upon Baghdad, and of adding the whole kingdom of Mesopotamia to his already vast and numerous conquests; but, partly on account of his own scruples, and partly from fear of offending the prejudices of his Sunnī followers, who were all of the same faith with the khaliḥ, he refrained for a time from entering the sacred dominion of one who was considered as the head of their holy religion, and the true representative of their beloved prophet. But the glorious days of the house of Banī Abbās had already been numbered, the effeminate Mustaa'sim had personal vices enough to lead to and deserve the final extinction of his race! Ibn al-Qama, his prime minister (who hated him more than any other of his oppressed subjects) from within, and Nasir-uddin Tūsī, the preceptor of the Mughal prince (who owed him an old grudge) from without, urged the conqueror to the gates of Baghdad. Nasir-uddin had a few years before been at Baghdad, seeking shelter from persecution, and when he was introduced to Mustaa'sim, the latter asked him to what country he belonged? "Tūs, please your holiness," answered Nasir-uddin. "Art thou of the asses, or of the oxen of Tūs?" said the khaliḥ (meaning the two principal branches of the Shia faith—Akhbaris and Usūlis). Mortified as the illustrious refugee was at this inhospitable insult, he still submissively answered, "Of the oxen of Tūs, please your highness." "Where, then, are thy horns," said the insolent buffoon. "I have them not with me," replied Nasir-uddin, "but if your holiness permit, I will go and fetch them." "Make haste, hence, thence, thou deformed animal," said the khaliḥ, "and never again appear in my presence in so imperfect a state!" Nasir-uddin kept his promise well, for, at the moment when Baghdad was on the point of being surrendered, and the khalif driven to the last extremity, he sent him a message to the effect that the ox of Tūs was at the gate with his horns, and inquiring, when it would please his holiness to receive him? Nasir-uddin had in the city another old offender, whom he was anxious also to chastise. This was ibn Hājib, also one of the khalif's ministers, and a person of great reputation for his learning; but being an Arabian Sunni, and a very bigoted one too, he had behaved still more cruelly than his master to the distressed Persian Shia when he sought protection at Baghdād. Ibn Hājib, having been seized with depression of spirits, the physicians had recommended him (and the priests had granted him dispensation) to take, occasionally, a little wine. This happened when Nasir-uddin was at Baghdād. One day, ibn Hājib feeling himself particularly melancholy, and having, in consequence, taken a larger dose than usual, he became unusually merry, and requested Nasir-uddin to accompany him on the Tigris. Having reached the middle of the stream, he stopped the boat, and produced the several volumes of Nasir-uddin's works, which the learned refugee had presented to the khalif—some of them in the original manuscript, and not yet transcribed, and in the presence of their anxious author, he threw them all, one after another, into the river, with such spiteful force, that the water was splashed about in every direction; when turning himself, on each occasion, to his mortified guest, he exclaimed with a sarcastic smile of triumph, "How wonderfully it bubbles!" When the turn of Nasir-uddin came he, too, gave full vent to his revenge. He ordered ibn Hājib to be cased up to his neck, in an ox's hide, just taken off the animal, and, having filled the skin with air, he laid it for a few hours in the sun, till it became quite dry, and sounded like a drum. Then the victor advanced close to his half exhausted enemy, gave him a kick of triumph, and, as he rolled on the ground, exclaimed, "How wonderfully it rattles!" The fall of Baghdād took place on Sunday the 10th February, A.D. 1258, 4th Safar, A.H. 656, from which time Baghdād was added to the other conquered provinces of this proud emperor. Al-Mustaa'sim reigned 15 lunar years and 7 months.

Al-Musta'in Billah (المستعين بالله),

the son of Muhammad, the son of al-Mo'tasim Billah, was the twelfth khalif of the race of Abbās. He ascended the throne of Baghdād in A.D. 862, A.H. 248, after the death of his cousin or brother al-Mustanasir Billah, but was forced to abdicate the throne in A.D. 866, A.H. 252, by his brother al-Mo'tiz Billah, who afterwards caused him to be privately murdered.

Al-Mustakfi Billah (المستكفي بالله) was the 22nd khalif of the Abbaside family, and the son of al-Muktafi, the son of al-Mo'tazid Billah. He succeeded his uncle al-Muttaqi in A.D. 945, A.H. 333, reigned in Baghdād one year and four months, and was deposed by his wazir in A.D. 946, A.H. 334. After him al-Mutia' Billah was raised to the throne.

Al-Mustanasar Billah (المستنصر بالله),

the son of Tāhir, was the fifth khalif of Egypt of the Fatimite race. He succeeded his father A.D. 1036, and with the assistance of a Turk named Basāsiri, conquered Baghdād and imprisoned al-Kāem Billah about the year A.D. 1054, and for a year and a half was acknowledged the only legitimate chief of all the Musalmāns. Basāsiri was defeated and killed by Tughrul Beg A.D. 1059, A.H. 487.

[vide Basāsiri. Al-Mustanasar died in 1094, having reigned 60 years; and was succeeded by his son al-Mustaa'li Billah Abūl Qāsim.]

Al-Mustansir Billah I. (المستنصر بالله),

the eleventh khalif of the race of Abbās, ascended the throne of Baghdād after the murder of his father, al-Mutwakkil, in December, A.D. 861, Shawwal, A.H. 247, and had reigned only six months, when he was cut off by the hand of death in A.D. 862, A.H. 248. He was succeeded by his cousin al-Musta'in Billah.

Al-Mustansir Billah II. (المستنصر بالله), surnamed Abū Ja'far al-Mansūr, ascended the throne of Baghdād after the death of his father, al-Tāhir, in A.D. 1226, A.H. 623. He was the 36th khalif of the house of Abbās, reigned about 17 years, and died A.D. 1242, A.H. 640, leaving his kingdom to his son al-Mustaa'sim Billah, the last of the khalifs.

Al-Mustanjid Billah (المستنجد بالله), the 32nd khalif of the race of Abbās, succeeded to the throne of Baghdād after the death of his father al-Muktafi, in A.D. 1160, A.H. 555, reigned 14 lunar years and died in A.D. 1171, A.H. 566, when his son al-Mustazid succeeded him.

Al-Mustarashid Billah (المسترشد بالله), the twenty-ninth khalif of the Abbaside family, succeeded his father, al-Mustazahr, to the throne of Baghdād in A.D. 1118, A.H. 512. It is related by ibn Khallikān that when Sultān Mas'ūd, the son of Muhammad, the son of Malikshāh Saljūki, was encamped outside the town of Marāgha in Azurbeyān, al-Mustarashid was then with him, and on Thursday the 28th or, according to ibn Mustaufi, the 14th or 28th Zil'qada, A.H. 529 (corresponding with the 24th August or 7th September, A.D. 1135), a band of assassins broke into the khalif's tent and murdered him. Al-Mustarashid reigned 17 lunar years and some months, and was succeeded by his son al-Rāshid Billah.

Al-Mustazhir Billah (المستظهر بالله),

the son of al-Muqtadī, was the twenty-eighth khalīf of the dynasty of Abbās. He was placed on the throne of Baghdād after the death of his father in A.D. 1094, A.H. 487, by Barkyaraq Saljūki, the Turkish Sultān of Persia. He reigned 25 lunar years and some months, and at his death, which happened in the year A.D. 1118, A.H. 512, he was succeeded by his son al-Mustarashid.

Al-Mustazl Bi-amr-illah (المستضيء بأمر الله), the thirty-third khalīf of the Abbaside family, succeeded his father, al-Mustanjad, to the throne of Baghdād in A.D. 1171, A.H. 566. He reigned about seven years and died in A.D. 1179, A.H. 575, when his son al-Nāsir Billāh succeeded him.

Al-Mutaa'zz Billah (المتعزز بالله), the 13th khalīf of the race of Abbās. He deposed his brother al-Mustain in A.D. 866, A.H. 252, and having caused him to be murdered privately, ascended the throne of Baghdād. He did not, however, long enjoy the dignity of which he had so iniquitously possessed himself, being deposed by the Turkish Militia (who now began to set up and depose khalīfs as they pleased) in the year A.D. 869, A.H. 255. After his deposition, he was sent under an escort from Sarr Manrao to Baghdād, where he died of thirst and hunger, after a reign of three years and about seven months. The fate of this khalīf was peculiarly hard: the Turkish troops had mutilated for their pay; and al-Mutaa'zz not having money to satisfy their demands, applied to his mother, named Kabīha, for 50,000 dinars. This she refused, telling him that she had no money at all, although it afterwards appeared that she was possessed of immense treasure. After his deposition, however, she was obliged to discover them, and even deposit them in the hands of the new khalīf al-Muhtadi. They consisted of 1,000,000 dinars, a bushel of emeralds, and another of pearls, and three pounds and three quarters of rubies of the colour of fire.

Al-Mutia' Billah (المطيع بالله),

the twenty-third khalīf of the race of Abbās, was the son of al-Muqtadir Billāh. He ascended the throne of Baghdād after al-Mustakfi in A.D. 946, A.H. 334, reigned 29 lunar years and 4 months, and died in A.D. 974, A.H. 363. It was in his time that the temporal power of the khalīfs of Baghdād, after having been long sustained by Turkish mercenaries, was completely and finally broken by the Byzantine Romans, led by Nicephorus Phocas and John Zimisceas. [Smith's Gibbon (ed. 1862), vi. pp. 106, 422, 427-8.] His son al-Taya' succeeded him.

Al-Muttaqi Billah (المتقي بالله),

the son of al-Muqtadir, was the twenty-first khalīf of the dynasty of Abbās. He succeeded his brother al-Rāzi Billāh to the throne of Baghdād in A.D. 941, A.H. 329, reigned 3 years 11 months and 15 days, and died in A.D. 945, A.H. 333. He was succeeded by his nephew al-Mustaqfi, the son of al-Muktafi.

Al-Mutwakkil 'Al-allah (المتوكل على الله).

This was the name and title assumed by Abū Fazl Ja'far on his accession to the throne of Baghdād. He was the tenth khalīf of the house of Abbās, and the son of al-Mō'tasim Billāh. He succeeded his brother al-Wāthik or Wāsiq in the year A.D. 847, A.H. 232, and began his reign with an act of the greatest cruelty. The late khalīf's wazīr having treated al-Mutwakkil ill in his brother's lifetime, and opposed his election to the khalāfat, was on that account now sent to prison, and afterwards thrown into an iron furnace lined with spikes or nails heated red hot, where he was miserably burnt to death. During this reign nothing remarkable happened, except wars with the Greeks, which were carried on with various success. He was very intolerant, especially of the Jews and Christians, on whom he heaped many indignities. He did not stop there. In his imbecility and ferocity he forbade the pilgrimage to Kərbala, and caused the sacred repository of the ashes of Husain and the other martyrs interred there to be razed. He reigned 14 years 9 months and 9 days, and was assassinated and cut into seven pieces on the 24th December, A.D. 861, 17th Shawwal, A.H. 247, at the instance of his son al-Mustanasir, who succeeded him.

Al-Muwaffiq Billah (الموفق بالله),

the son of al-Mutwakkil Billāh, the khalīf of Baghdād and brother and coadjutor of the khalīf al-Mutamid, to whom he was of much service in his battles against his enemies. He died of elephantiasis or leprosy in the year A.D. 891, A.H. 278, and while in his last illness could not help observing that of 100,000 men whom he commanded, there was not one so miserable as himself. His son Mō'tazid, after the death of his brother al-Mō'tamid in A.D. 892, succeeded to the throne of Baghdād.

Al-Muwyiyid (Isma'il) (الموید اسمعیل), whose name is spelt in Lemprière's Universal Biographical Dictionary "Alombuadad," and in Watkin's Biographical Dictionary "Almuvadad," was an Arabian historian, who gave a chronological account of the Saracen affairs in Sicily from A.D. 842 to 904. This MS. is in the Library of the Escorial, in Spain, and a Latin version of it is inserted in Muratori's Itinerarium Scriptores.

Al-Muzani (المزني). Vide Abū

Ibrāhīm Ismail.

Al-Nasir Billah (الناصر بالله), or al-Nasir-uddin Allah, the son of al-Mustazī, succeeded his father to the throne of Baghlād in A.D. 1179. He professed the Shia' faith, and after a long reign of 46 lunar years and 11 months, died in the year A.D. 1225. He was the 34th khalif of the house of Abbās, and was succeeded by his son al-Tāhir Billāh.

Alp Arsalan (الپ ارسلان), (which means in the Turkish language "the valiant lion"), was a king of Persia of the Seljūki dynasty, and the son of Dāūd Beg Soljāki. He succeeded his uncle Tughrāl Beg in A.D. 1063, A.H. 455, married the sister of the khalif Qāim Billāh, and his name was pronounced in the public prayers of the Muhammadans after that of the khalif. He was a warlike prince; and, having spoiled the Church of St. Basil in Caesarea, defeated Romanus Diogenes, Emperor of the Greeks in A.D. 1068, A.H. 460, who was seized and carried to the conqueror. Alp Arsalan demanded of his captive, at the first conference, what he would have done if fortune had reversed their lot. "I would have given thee many a stripe," was the imprudent and virulent answer. The Sultān only smiled and asked Romanus what he expected would be done to him. "If thou art cruel," said the Emperor, "put me to death. If vain-glorious load me with chains, and drag me in triumph to thy capital. If generous, grant me my liberty." Alp Arsalan was neither cruel nor vain-glorious, he nobly released his prisoner, and, giving all his officers who were captives dresses of honour, sent them away to their homes. Alp Arsalan after a reign of more than nine years was stabbed about the 15th December, A.D. 1072, 30th Rabi' I. A.H. 465, by a Khwārizmian desperado whom he had taken prisoner and sentenced to death. He was buried at Marv in Khurāsān, and the following is the translation of the inscription engraved on his tomb: "All ye who have seen the glory of Alp Arsalan exalted to the heavens, come to Marv, and you will behold it buried in the dust." He was succeeded by his son Malikshāh.

Alp Arsalan, who is by some called Apal Arsalan, was the son of Atsiz, a Sultān of Khwārizm, whom he succeeded in A.D. 1166, A.H. 551-557, and died in A.D. 1162.

Alptakin or Alptagin (الپتکین). Vide Alaptakin.

Al-Qadir Billah (القادر بالله), the twenty-fifth khalif of the Abbaside family, was the son of Is-hāq, the son of Muqtadir Billah. He ascended the throne of Baghlād after the dethronement of al-Tayyā' in A.D. 991, A.H. 381. He was a contemporary of Sultān Mahmūd of Ghazni; reigned 49 lunar years and 3 months, and died A.D. 1031, A.H. 422. He was succeeded by al-Qāim-bi-amr-illāh.

Al-Qadiri or Qadiri (القادري), a sect of Muhammadans. These are a branch of the Muctazillis, and differ in their opinions from the orthodox Musalmāns, in that they deny God's decree, and assert free will; affirming that the contrary opinion makes God the author of evil.

Al-Qāhir Billāh (القاهر بالله), the nineteenth khalif of the race of the Abbasid and the third son of 'al-Mo'tazid Bil' succeeded his brother al-Muqtadir to the crown of Baghlād in October, A.D. 932, Shawwāl, A.H. 320. He had reigned only one year, five months and twenty-one days when his wazīr ibn Maqla deprived him of his sight with a hot iron on Wednesday the 23rd April, A.D. 934, 6th Janad I. A.H. 322, and raised al-Rāzī Billāh, the son of Muqtadir, to the throne. It is said that al-Qāhir, after this, as long as he lived, was obliged to beg for charity in the mosque at Baghlād, calling out to the people that assembled there, "Have pity and give charity to one, who had once been your khalifa."

Al-Qaim (القایم), second khalif of the Fātimite race of Barbary: he succeeded his father Obeid-ullah al-Mahdī A.D. 924, A.H. 312. During his reign we read of nothing remarkable, except the revolt of Yeyid ibn Kondat, a man of mean extraction. Al-Qāim reigned nearly 12 years and died in A.D. 945* A.H. 334. His son Isma'il al-Mansūr succeeded him.

'Al-Qama (علقمه), son of Qys, was one of the pupils of Abdullah bin Masaūd, and an eminent man. He died in A.D. 681, A.H. 61.

Al-Qaim Billah or Al-Qaim-bi-amr-illāh (القایم بالله), surnamed Abū Ja'far Abdūllāh, the 26th khalif of the house of 'Abbās. He succeeded his father Qādir Billāh to the throne of Baghlād in A.D. 1031, A.H. 422, reigned 44 lunar years and 8 months, and died in A.D. 1075, A.H. 467, which was soon after Sultān Malikshāh the Seljūki had ascended the throne of Persia, and as that monarch was the real master of the empire, the nomination of a successor was deferred till he was consulted. He deputed a son of his prime minister Nizām-ul-Mulk to Baghlād with orders to raise al-Muqtadi, the grandson of al-Qāim, to the (nominal) rank of the commander of the faithful.

Al-Rashid or Harun al-Rashid (هارون الرشید), the celebrated hero of the Arabian Nights, was the fifth khalif of the race of Abbās and son of al-Mahdī; he succeeded his eldest brother al-Hādī to the throne of Baghlād in A.D. 786, A.H. 170. This was one of the best and wisest princes that ever sat on the throne of Baghlād. He was also extremely fortunate in all his undertakings, though he did not much extend his dominions by conquest. In his time the Moslem empire may be said to have been in its most flourishing state, though, by the independency of the Moslems in Spain, who had formerly set up a khalif of the house of Umyya, his territories were not quite so extensive as those of some of his predecessors. He possessed, however, the provinces of Syria, Palestine, Arabia, Persia, Armenia, Natolia, Media or Azurbejan, Babylonia, Assyria, Sindh, Sijistan, Khurasan, Tabristan, Jufjan, Zabulistan, Mawarunnahr, or great Bukharia, Egypt, Libya, Mauritania, etc., so that his empire was still by far the most powerful of any in the world, and indeed extended farther than the Roman empire ever had done.

In the beginning of the year A.D. 802, A.H. 186, he divided the government of his extensive dominions among his three sons in the following manner: To al-Amin the eldest, he assigned the provinces of Syria, Irak, the three Arabias, Mesopotamia, Assyria, Media, Palestine, Egypt, and all the part of Africa extending from the confines of Egypt and Ethiopia to the Straits of Gibraltar, with the dignity of khalif; to al-Mamun the second, he assigned Persia, Kirmān, the Indies, Khurasan, Tabristan, Kabilistan and Zabulistan, together with the vast province of Mawarunnahr; and to his third son al-Qasim, he gave Armenia, Natolia, Jurjan, Georgia, Circassia, and all the Moslem territories bordering upon the Euxine sea. As to the order of succession, al-Amin was to ascend the throne immediately after his father's decease; after him al-Mamun; and then al-Qasim, whom he had surnamed al-Mutasim.

The most considerable exploits performed by this khalif were against the Greeks, who by their perfidy provoked him to make war upon them, and whom he always overcame. In the year A.D. 803, A.H. 187, the khalif received a letter from the Greek Emperor Nicephorus, commanding him to return all the money he had extorted from the Empress Irene, or expect soon to see an Imperial army in the heart of his territories. This insolent letter so exasperated Harun, that he immediately assembled his forces and advanced to Heraclea, laying the country through which he passed waste with fire and sword. For some time also he kept that city straitly besieged, which so terrified the Greek Emperor that he submitted to pay an annual tribute.

In the year A.D. 804, A.H. 188, war was renewed with the Greeks, and Nicephorus with a great army attacked the khalif's forces with the utmost fury. He was, however, defeated with the loss of 40,000 men, and received three wounds in the action; after which the Moslems committed terrible ravages in his territories, and returned home laden with spoils. The next year Harun invaded Phrygia; defeated an Imperial army sent to oppose him, and having ravaged the country, returned without any considerable loss. In the year A.D. 806, A.H. 190, the khalif marched into the Imperial territories with an army of 135,000 men, besides a great number of volunteers and others who were not enrolled among his troops. He first took the city of Heraclea, from which he is said to have carried 16,000 prisoners; after which he made himself master of several other places, and, in the conclusion of the expedition, he made a descent on the island of Cyprus, which he plundered in a terrible manner. This success so intimidated Nicephorus, that he immediately sent the tribute due to Harun, the withholding of which had been the cause of the war; and concluded a peace upon the khalif's own terms. Charlemagne respected his character, and Harun in token of his friendship presented to the European prince a clock, the mechanism and construction of which were regarded among the prodigies of the age. Harun reigned 23 years, and died in Khurasan on the eve of Saturday the 24th March, A.D. 809, 3rd Jamad II., A.H. 193, and was buried at Tus, which is now called Mashhad. He was succeeded by his eldest son, al-Amin.

Al-Rashid Billah (الراشد بالله), the thirtieth khalif of the Abbasides, succeeded his father, al-Mustashid, in August or September, A.D. 1135, Zil'kad, A.H. 529, and died in the year A.D. 1136, A.H. 530. He was succeeded by al-Muqtali, the son of al-Mustazhir.

Al-Razi. See Razi.

Al-Razi Billah (الراضي بالله), the son of al-Muqtadir and the twentieth khalif of the house of Abbas, was the last who deserved the title of the Commander of the Faithful. He was raised to the throne of Baghdad, after the dethronement of his uncle al-Qahir Billah by the wazir Ibn Maqla in April, A.D. 934, Jamad I. A.H. 322. In the year 936, the khalif finding himself distressed on all sides by usurpers, and having a wazir of no capacity, instituted a new office superior to that of wazir, which he entitled Amir-ul-Umra. This great officer, Imad-ud-daula Ali Boya, was trusted with the management of the finances in a much more absolute and unlimited manner than any of the khalif's wazirs ever had been. Nay, he officiated for the khalif in the great mosque at Baghdad, and had his name mentioned in the public prayers throughout the kingdom. In short the khalif was so much under the power of this officer, that he could not apply a single dinar to his own use without the leave of the Amir-ul-Umra. In the year A.D. 937, the Moslem empire so great and powerful, was shared among the following usurpers:

The cities of Wasat, Basra, Kufa with the rest of the Arabian Irak, were considered as the property of the Amir-ul-Umra, though they had been in the beginning of the year seized upon by a rebel called al-Baridi, who could not be driven out of them.

The country of Fars, Faristan, or Persia properly so called, was possessed by Imad-ud-daula Ali ibn Boya, who resided in the city of Shiraz.

Part of the tract denominated al-Jabal, together with Persian Irak, which is the mountainous part of Persia, and the country of the ancient Parthians, obeyed Rukn-ud-daula, the brother of Inad-ud-daula, who resided at Isfahān. The other part of the country was possessed by Washmakīn the Dilamites.

Dayār Rahia, Dayār Bīkr, Dāyār Modar, and the city of Musal, acknowledged for their sovereign a race of princes called Hamdanites.

Egypt and Syria no longer obeyed the khalīfs, but Muhammad ibn Tāj, who had formerly been appointed governor of those provinces.

Africa and Spain had long been independent.

Sicily and Crete were governed by princes of their own.

The provinces of Khurāsān and Malvarun-nahr were under the dominions of al-Nasr ibn Ahmad, of the dynasty of the Samānians.

The provinces of Tabrīstān, Jurjan or Georgia, and Māzīndārān, had kings of the first dynasty of the Dilamites.

The province of Kirmān was occupied by Abū Alī Muhammad ibn Fyila al-Sāmānī, who had made himself master of it a short time before. And

Lastly, the provinces of Yemama and Bahryn, including the district of Hajr, were in the possession of Abū Tahir the Karmatian.

Thus the khalīfs were deprived of all their dominions, and reduced to the rank of sovereign pontiffs; in which light, though they continued for some time to be regarded by the neighbouring princes, yet their power never arrived to any height. In this low state the khalīfs continued till the extinction of the Khilāfat by Halākū Khān the Tartar in the year A.D. 1258, A.H. 656.

Al-Rāzi Billāh reigned 7 years 2 months and 11 days, and died in A.D. 941, A.H. 329. He was succeeded by his brother al-Muttaqī.

Al-Saharawi (الصحرأوى). Vide Abūl Qāsim.

Al-Saffah (السفاح), surname of Abūl

Abbās, the son of Muhammad, the son of Alī, the son of ‘Abdullāh, the son of Abbās, the uncle of the prophet. He was proclaimed khalīfa by the inhabitants of Kūfa on Friday the 29th November, A.D. 749, 13th Rabi’ II., A.H. 132, upon which a battle took place between him and Marwān II., the last khalīfa of the house of Umayya and Ommuaidas, in which the latter was slain, 5th August, A.D. 750, 26th Zil-hijja, A.H. 132. Al-Saffah after this victory investing himself with sovereign power, laid the foundation of the dynasty of the Abbasides, which continued to be transmitted to his family from father to son for 524 lunar years, during a succession of 37 khalīfs, till they were dispossessed by Halākū Khān the Tartar king of Persia in A.D. 1258, A.H. 656. By the elevation of the house of Abbās to the dignity of khilāfat, began that glorious period during which Arabic and Persian literature reached its highest perfection. With some few exceptions these khalīfas were the noblest race of kings that ever adorned the throne of sovereignty. Abūl Abbās died, after a reign of more than four years, of the small-pox, on Sunday the 9th June, A.D. 754, 13th Zil-hijja, A.H. 136, and was succeeded by his brother Abū Ja’far Almansūr.

Amin-ud-daula Abul Jin (امین الدوله ابوالجین), surnamed the Samaritan, was a physician, and had been wazīr to Mālik Salāh Ismā'il. He was strangled at Cairo in A.D. 1250, A.H. 648, and there were found in his house, amongst other precious articles, about 10,000 volumes of valuable works, copied by the most celebrated calligraphers.

Amin-ud-daula Khan (امین الدوله خان), a rebel, was blown from the mouth of a gun on the 3rd August, 1857, at Agra.

Amir bi Ahkam Allah (امر حکام الله), surnamed Abū 'Alī Mansūr, seventh khalif of the Fatimite dynasty of Egypt, succeeded his father, al-Mustau'li Billāh, in December, 1101. From this time to the reign of 'Azid li-din Allah, during which period five khalifs ascended the throne of Egypt, the history of that country affords little else than an account of the intestine broils and contests between the wazīrs or prime ministers, who were now become so powerful, that they had in a great measure stripped the khalifs of their civil power, and left them nothing but a shadow of spiritual dignity. These contests at last gave occasion to a revolution, by which the race of Fatimite khalifs were totally extinguished.

Amira Singh Tappa (امیرہ سنگہ ٹپہ), also called Amar Singh, a Gurkha general. He was the highest in rank and character of all the military chiefs of Nipāl. In 1814 during his campaign against Sir David Ochterlony in the Kumāon hills, he evinced equal valour and patriotism; but was compelled to surrender, at Malaun near Simla, 10th May, 1815.

Amir Barid I. (امير برید), the son of Qāsim Barid, whom he succeeded in the government of Ahmadābād Bidar in A.D. 1504, A.H. 910. During his rule the king Sultān Mahmūd Shāh Bahmanī died in A.D. 1517, A.H. 923, when Amir Barid placed Sultān 'Alā-uddīn III. on the throne, and after his death Sultān Kalīm Ullāh, who being treated with great rigour by the Amīr, fled from Bidar to Ahmadnagar, where he died shortly after. With Kalīm Ullāh ended the dynasty of the Bahmanī kings of Deccan. Amir Barid reigned over the territories of Ahmadābād Bidar with full power more than 25 years, and died at Daulatābād in A.D. 1542, A.H. 949. He was buried at Ahmadābād Bidar, and succeeded by his son Ali Barid.

Amir Barid II. (امير برید ثانی) succeeded to the government of Ahmadābād Bidar after deposing his relative Ali Barid Shāh II. in A.D. 1609, and was the last of the Barid Shāhī dynasty.

Amiri (امیری), the poetical name of Maulānā Sultān Muhammad, a distinguished man who lived in the time of Shāh Tahmasp Safwī I. He praised this sovereign in his poems, and is the translator of Amir Ali Sher's Tazkira, called Majālis-ul-Nafīs, from Turki into Persian. He is also the author of the Bostān ul-Khayāl.

Amir Khan (امير خان), title of Mir Abūl Wafā, the eldest son of Mir Qāsim Khān Nāzukīn, was a nobleman in the time of the emperors Jahangir and Shāh Jahān. At the time of his death he was governor of Thatta, where he died A.D. 1647, A.H. 1057, aged more than 100 years. His former name was Mir Khān, but having made a present of one lac of rupees to Shāh Jahān, he was honoured with the title of Amir Khān.

Amir Khan (امير خان ميرميران), surnamed Mir Mirān, the son of Khalil-ullāh Khān Yezdi, was a nobleman of high rank in the time of the emperors Shāh Jahān and 'Alamgir, and a great favourite of the latter. He died at Kābul on the 28th April, A.D. 1698, 27th Shawwāl, A.H. 1109, and the emperor conferred the title of Amir Khān on his son.

Amir Khan (Nawab) (امير خان نواب), entitled U'mdat-ul-Mulk, was the son of the principal favourite of the emperor 'Alamgir, of the same name, and a descendant of the celebrated Shāh Na'mat-ullāh Walī. He was himself a favourite of the emperor Muhammad Shāh; was appointed governor of Allahabad in A.D. 1739, A.H. 1152, and re-called to court in A.D. 1743, A.H. 1156. He was naturally free of speech, and the emperor, fond of his repartee, had allowed him more license in his conversation than was consistent with respect to his own dignity, when he was on business with the emperor, which by degrees disgusted Muhammad Shāh and made him wish his removal from office. He was consequently, with the consent of the emperor, stabbed with a dagger by a person who had been discharged from his service, and fell down dead on the spot. This circumstance took place on Friday the 26th December, 1747, 23rd Zil-hijja, A.H. 1159. He was buried after four days in the sepulchre of Khalil-ullāh Khān his grandfather, which is close to the Sarāi of Rūh-ullāh Khān at Dehlī. His poetical name was Anjām. He composed hogographs, and has left Persian and Rekhta Poems. There is a full account of Amir Khān in the Sujar-ul-Mutākhharin, where he is said to have died in the same year as the emperor.

Amir Khan (امير خان), the famous ally of the Pindaris and ancestor to the present Nawab of Tonk. He was originally in the service of Jaswant Rāo Holkar, who becoming insane in 1806 and incapable of the administration of his own affairs, this Muhammadan chief endeavoured to establish an ascendancy at his court, but soon left it with the army he commanded to pursue the separate object of his own ambition, and became the chief supporter of the Pindaris. A treaty was ratified with him by the British Government on the 19th December, 1817. He had on various pretexts avoided the ratification of the engagements which his agent had concluded with the resident of Delhi, but the movement of troops to his vicinity, and their occupation of positions which left him only the option between engaging in an unequal conflict and signing this treaty, induced him to adopt the safer course. He was confirmed in the possession of all the territories he held from the Holkar family, but compelled to surrender his large trains of artillery to the English Government, and to disband that great body of plunderers which had been for more than two years the scourge of Mālwa and Rājputāna. Amir Khān died A.D. 1834, A.H. 1250. His Life was written by a Hindu named Basāwan Lāl; and the Memoir was translated into English by the late Thoby Prinsep.

Amir Khan (امير خان), whose proper name was Mir Khān, but was changed by the emperor 'Alamgir by adding an alif to it into Amir Khān. On a spot of seven bighas of ground, he had built his house close to the place called Guzr Tijara, including the mahalla of Chhipitolā. In the first year of the emperor 'Alamgir he was appointed governor of the fort of Shāhjahanabad, and in the eleventh year of the reign of the emperor he was appointed Subadār of Kābul.

Amir Khan Sindhi (امير خان سندھی), title of Mir Abdul Karīm, son of Amir Khān, the son of Mir Abul Qāsim Namkin. He was employed in various offices during the reign of 'Alamgir, Bahādūr Shāh and Farrukhsiyar, and died some time before the accession of Muhammad Shāh to the throne of Dehlī.

Amir Mahmud (امير محمود فخر الدين), surnamed Fakhr-uddin, and commonly called Ibn-Yemīn, was the son of Amir Yemīn-uddin, entitled Mālik-ul Fuzlā, i.e., the prince of the learned. Amir Mahmūd was an excellent poet, and died on Saturday the 29th January, A.D. 1368, Jumādā II. A.H. 769, in Persia. He is mentioned in Dr. Sprenger's Catalogue, p. 67, to have died in 749 Hijrī corresponding with A.D. 1348, and in the Tazkira Daulat Shahi it is mentioned that he died in A.H. 745, A.D. 1344. He has left a Diwān.

Amir Mirza (Nawab) (امير ميرزا نواب)

was the son of George Hopkins Walters, a pensioned European officer, who, with his family, consisting of a wife, two daughters and one son, had established himself in Lucknow as a merchant many years ago. After his death his family, through the intrigues of one Bakhsh Ali Khān, embraced the Muhammadan religion, and the younger daughter not long after was consigned to the Seraglio of king Nasir-uddin Hydar and became one of the queens of that monarch, under the title of Wilayati Mahal, or the King's European consort. The elder daughter also received the name and title of Ashraf-un-nisa Begam. She remained unmarried all her life. The brother, Joseph Walters, received the name of Amir Mirzā. He was brought up as a Muslimān of the Shī'a sect, and always took a pride in showing himself as an orthodox follower of the Crescent. After Wilayati Mahal's death, her elder sister Ashraf-un-nisa Begam succeeded to her estate, consisting of Government Securities valued at 11,400,000 rupees besides jewellery, movable and immovable property of considerable value. In 1832 Ashraf-un-nisa died, and was succeeded by Amir Mirzā, her brother, who squandered almost the whole property by his reckless prodigality. Amir Mirzā died on the 10th January, 1870, in his 66th year.

Amir Mo'izzi (امير معزي), a celebrated poet of Samarkand, who served under Sulṭān Malik Shāh and Sulṭān Sanjar Saljūki, and was honoured with the title of Mālik-ush-Shu'arā, or the Royal Poet. He was accidentally killed by an arrow shot by the latter prince. His Diwān contains 15,000 verses. His death happened in the year A.D. 2147, A.H. 542. His proper name was Amir Ali.

Amir Shahi (امير شاهي سبزواري), of Sabzwār, a poet who flourished in the time of Shāhrukh Mirzā, about the year A.D. 1436. Vide Shāhi (Amir).

Amir Taimur (امير تيمور صاحبقران), styled Sāhib Qatrān, because he reigned more than 30 years, or because he was born in a conjunction of the planets so called. He is also called Timur-lāḡ (Tamerlane) from some defect in his feet; was born at Kush in ancient Sogdania on Tuesday, the 9th April, A.D. 1336, 27th Shu'bān, A.H. 736. Some say he was the son of a shepherd, and others that he was descended in a right line from Qājuli Bahādūr, son of Tūmān Khān, of the same lineage with Chāngēz Khān, the celebrated conqueror of Persia. His father's name was Amir Turāghāi and mother's Takina Khātūn; however, his obscurity was soon forgotten in the glory of his exploits. Distinguished by his courage and unbounded ambition, he gained a number of faithful adherents, and seized the city of Balkh, the capital of Khurāsān, and having put to death Amir Husain, the ruler of that place, whose sister he had married, he ascended the throne on Wednesday the 10th April, A.D. 1370, 12th Ramzān, A.H. 771. He then subdued Kandahār, Persia and Baghdād, and seconded by an enthusiastic army he penetrated to India, took Delhi on Tuesday the 17th December, A.D. 1398, 7th Rabi' II. A.H. 801, with its immense treasures, and returned to punish Baghdād that shook off his yoke. The offending city was given up to pillage, and 80,000 of her inhabitants put to the sword. Now master of the fairer part of Asia, he interfered, at the request of the Greek emperor, in the affairs of Bāizid (Bajazet), emperor of the Turks, and commanded him to abandon the siege of Constantinople. The message roused the indignation of Bāizid; he marched against the new enemy, and was defeated by him in Phrygia, after a battle of three days, on Friday the 21st July, A.D. 1402, 19th Zil-hijja, A.H. 804. Bāizid fell into the hands of the emperor, and was carried about in mockery in an iron cage. To these conquests Taimūr added Egypt and the treasures of Cairo, and then fixed the seat of his empire at Samarkand, where he received the homage of Manuel Palaeologus, emperor of Constantinople, and of Henry III. King of Castile, by their ambassadors. Taimūr was preparing fresh victories by the invasion of China, when death stopped his career on Wednesday the 18th February, A.D. 1405, 17th Shu'bān, A.H. 807, in the 36th year of his reign, aged 71 years, and was buried at Samarkand. He was the ancestor of Bābar, who founded the dynasty of the Mughul emperors of Delhi. After his death he received the title of "Firdaus Makāni," i.e., "May paradise be his place of residence." He had four sons, viz., Jahāngir Mirzā, Umar Shaikh Mirzā, Mirān Shāh and Shāhrukh Mirzā. Tamerlane on his death-bed named his grandson Pīr Muhammad, son of Jahāngir Mirzā, the universal heir of all his dominions; but the contempt with which his will was treated after death was equal to the veneration which had been paid to his authority during his life. The Sulṭān Khalīl, another of his grandsons, immediately took possession of the capital of Samarkand, and proclaimed himself emperor. Pīr Muhammad did not live long enough to assert his rights, but was assassinated six months after the death of his grandfather. After his death, Shāhrukh Mirzā, the youngest of the two surviving sons of Tamerlane, succeeded to the inheritance assigned for Kīm Muhammad.

Amir Yemin-uddin (امير يمين الدين), entitled Malīk-ul-Fuzlā, i.e., the prince of the learned, was a Turk and an excellent poet. He flourished in the time of Sultān Muhammad Khudā Banda, and died in A.D. 1324, A.H. 724. [Fide Tughradi.]

Amjad 'Ali Shah (امجد علي شاد), was the son of Muhammad Ali Shāh, whom he succeeded on the throne of Lucknow as king of Oudh, with the title of Surīā Jāh, on the 17th May, A.D. 1842, 5th Rabi II, A.H. 1258, and died on the 16th March, A.D. 1847, 26th Safar, A.H. 1263. He was succeeded by his son Wajīd Ali Shāh, in whose time Oudh was annexed to the British Government on the 7th February, A.D. 1856.

'Ammar ibn Hissan (عمار ابن حسان), was Ali's general of the horse, and was killed in battle fought by Ali against Mu'āwīa, the first khalīf of the house of Umaia, in the month of July, A.D. 657, Safar, A.H. 37. He was then about 90 years of age, and had been in three several engagements with Muhammad himself. He was one of the murderers of Usmān, the third khalīf after Muhammad.

Amra-al Qais (امراء القيس), the son of Hajar, one of the most illustrious poets of the Arabians had before Muhammadanism. He is one of the seven poets whose poems have, for their excellency, been hung in the temple of Mecca. These poems were called Muallakat (suspended), and as they were written in letters of gold, they were also called Muzakhibāt. The names of these seven celebrated poets are Amra-al-Qais, Tarafa, Zuhir, Labid, Antār, Amrū and Hārith.

[Amra-al-Qais is the same person who is commonly called Majnūn, the lover of Laila, and Labid was his friend and master. Amīr Khuseu's Lovers of Majnūn and Laila has been translated into English.]

Amrit Rao (امرب راو), a Mahrattā

chief who had been placed on the masnad of Pūnā by Holkar in A.D. 1803, but deposed by the British, and a pension of 700,000 rupees was assigned for his support annually. He was the son of Raghunāth Rāo, commonly called Raghoba. For some time he resided at Banaras and then in Bundelkhand, and died at the former station in A.D. 1824.

'Amru bin Mua'wia (عمرو بن معاوية), an ancient Arabian poet whose collection of poems are to be found in the Royal Library at Paris, No. 1120.

'Amru ibn Al-'As (عمرو ابن لعاص), a celebrated Muhammadan, at first the enemy and afterwards the friend of Muhammad, of whom it is reported by tradition that Muhammad said, "There is no truer Muslim, nor one more steadfast in the faith than 'Amrū." He served in the wars of Syria, where he behaved with singular courage and resolution. Afterwards Umar the khalīf sent him into Egypt, which he reduced in A.D. 641, A.H. 20, and became lieutenant of the conquered country. Usmān continued him in that post four years, and then removed him; whereupon he retired to Palestine, where he lived privately till Usmān's death. Upon this event, he went over to Mu'āwīa upon his invitation, and took a great part in the dispute between 'Ali and Mu'āwīa. The latter restored him to the lieutenancy of Egypt, and continued him in it till his death, which happened in A.D. 663, A.H. 43. Before he turned Muhammadan he was one of the three poets who were famous for writing lampoons upon Muhammad, in which style of composition 'Amrū particularly excelled. There are some fine proverbs of his remaining, and also some good verses. He was the son of a courtesan of Mecca, who seems to have numbered some of the noblest of the land among her lovers. When she gave birth to this child, the infant was declared to have most resemblance to 'As, the oldest of her admirers, whence, in addition to his name of Amrū, he received the designation of Ibn-al-'As.

'Amru (عمرو بن سعيد), the son of Sa'id, was a cousin of the khalīf 'Abdul-Malik. In the year A.D. 688, A.H. 69, the khalīf left Damascus to go against Misaa'b, the son of Zuhayr, and appointed Amrū to take care of Damascus, who seized upon it for himself, which obliged 'Abdul-Malik to return. After three or four days the khalīf sent for him and killed him with his own hand.

'Amru bin Lais (عمرو بن ليث), brother of Ya'kūb ibn Lais, whom he succeeded in the government of Khurasān, etc., in A.D. 878, A.H. 265, and ruled over those countries for 23 years. He was at last seized by Amīr Isma'īl Sāmānī in A.D. 900, A.H. 286, and sent to Baghdād, where he was confined for some time; his execution was the last act of the Khalīf Al-Mo'tazid, who gave orders for it a few months before his own death in A.D. 901, A.H. 289. He was blind of one eye. With Amrū fell the fortunes of his family. His grandson Tahir struggled for power in his native province; but after a reign of six years, during which he conquered Fārs, his authority was subverted by one of his own officers, by whom he was seized and sent prisoner to Baghdād. The only other prince of the family of Banī Lais that attained any eminence was a chief of the name of Khulāī, who established himself in Sīstān and maintained his power over that province till the time of Sulṭān Mahmūd of Ghaznī, by whom he was defeated and made prisoner.

Anandpal (انندپال), son of Jaipāl I., rāja of Lāhore, whom he succeeded about the year A.D. 1001, and became tributary to Sulṭān Mahmūd of Ghaznī. He died about the year 1013, and was succeeded in the government by his son Jaipāl II.

Anarkali (انارکلی), the name of a lady, otherwise "Nadira Begam," who lived in the time of the emperor Jahāngīr. Her mausoleum is at a place called Anārkālī in Lāhore, which has been recently used as a church. Different stories are told concerning the name Anārkālī, by which the mausoleum as well as the station in its vicinity is known. According to some, it was the name of a princess in Jahāngīr's time, while others say that Anārkālī was a beautiful handmaid with whom Jahāngīr fell in love, and who, on Akbar becoming aware of it, was buried alive. These stories may not be true; but this much is at least certain, that the woman after whose name the building is called, lived in the time of Akbar, or his son Jahāngīr, that Jahāngīr or some other prince was madly in love with her, and that her death took place under such mournful circumstances as broke the heart of the fond lover, and led him to compose the following couplet, still found engraved on her tombstone: "Oh! could I see again the face of my lost friend, I would thank my God until the day of judgment."

Anisi Shamlu (انیس شاملو), a poet named Yūl Qulī Beg. He was an intimate friend and constant companion of prince Ibrāhīm Mirzā, a grandson of Shāh Isma'īl Safwī, consequently took the takhallas of Anisī. When 'Abdullah Khān Uzbaq took Hirāt he made a proclamation in his army, that the life of Anisī be spared, and treated him with great respect. He came to India and received a salary of 50,000 rupees and a jagir. He died at Barhānpūr in A.D. 1606, A.H. 1014, and has left a Diwān and a Musnawī called Mahmūd Aīz.

Ang or Ungh Khan, a king of the Tūt Tartars, who resided at Karakoram, and to whom the celebrated Jangez Khān was at one time a tributary. He is also called Prester John by the Syrian Missionaries. Jangez Khān having thrown off his allegiance, a war ensued, which ended in the death of Ang Khān in A.D. 1202.

Anjam (انجام), the poetical name of Nawāb 'Umdat-ul-Mulk Amīr Khān. Vide Amīr Khān.

Anup Bai (انوپ بائی), the wife of the emperor Jahāndār Shāh, and mother of Alamgīr II., king of Dehli.

Anwari (انوري), a famous Persian poet

surnamed Ashad-uddin. • He formerly took for his poetical name "Khāfari," but he changed it afterwards to "Anwari." From the superiority of his poetical talents he was called the king of the poets of Khurāsān. He was a native of Abiward in Khurāsān, was the favourite of Sultān Sanjar Saljūki, and the rival of the poet Rashīdī surnamed Watwāt, who espoused the cause of Atsiz, the Sultān of Khwārizm. Whilst the two princes were engaged in war, the two poets assailed one another by rhymes sent on the point of arrows. He is also said to have been the greatest astronomer of his age. It so happened in the year A.H. 581 or 582, September, A.D. 1186, that there was a conjunction of all the planets in the sign of Libra; Anwari predicted a storm which would eradicate trees and destroy every building. When the fatal day arrived it was perfectly calm, and there was the whole year so little wind, that the people were unable to winnow their corn. He was therefore accused for his predictions as an astrologer, and was obliged to fly to Balkh, where he died in the reign of Sultān Alāuddin Takash in A.D. 1200, A.H. 596. His death is mentioned in the Khulāsat-ul-Ashār to have taken place in A.D. 587, and others have written A.H. 592. Anwari, when very young, was sitting at the gate of his college, called Mansūriya in Tus, when a man richly dressed rode by him on a fine horse, with a numerous train of attendants; upon his asking who it was, he was told that it was a poet belonging to the court. When Anwari reflected on the honour conferred on poetry, for which art he had a very early bent, he applied himself to it more ardently than ever, and having finished a poem, presented it to the Sultān, who approved the work and invited him to his palace, and raised him even to the first honours of the State. He found many other poets at court, among whom were Salmān, Zabīr and Rashīdī, all men of wit and genius. Anwari has left us a collection of highly esteemed poems on various subjects, called Diwān Anwari. Verses from his poems are quoted by Sa'di in his Gulistan.

Anwari Khan (انوري خان), a corruption of Abū Raihān, which see.Anwar-uddin Khan (انور الدين خان), Nawāb of the Carnatic, a soldier of fortune, who had attained power by treacherous connivance to the murder of the legitimate heir, a child whose guardian he had been appointed by Nizām-ul-Mulk. He at first served under one of the emperors of Delhi, and was appointed governor of Korā Jahānābād. His success, or perhaps ill conduct, preventing him from being able to pay the usual revenues of his government to the throne; he quitted it privately, and went to Ahmadābād, where Ghāzi-uddin Khān, the father of Nizām-ul-Mulk, gave him a post of considerable trust and profit in the city of Sūrat. After the death of Ghāzi-uddin, his son, who had succeeded in the Sūbadari of the southern provinces, appointed him Nawāb of the Carnatic, or Vellore and Rājmandrum, countries which he governed from A.D. 1725 to 1741, and in A.D. 1744 he was formally created governor of the country. He was killed in battle fought against Muzaffar Jang, the grandson of Nizām-ul-Mulk, on the 23rd July, O.S. A.H. 1162, who took possession of the Carnatic. Anwar-uddin was then 107 years old. His eldest son was made prisoner and his second son, Muhammad Ali, fled to Trichinopoly. A heroic poem called Anwar Nāma, in praise of this Nawāb was written by Abdi, in which the exploits of Major Lawrence, and the first contests between the English and French in India are recorded with tolerable accuracy. (Vide Sa'adat-ullah Khān.) His son Muhammad Ali was confirmed by Nawāb Nasir Jang in the government of the Carnatic in A.D. 1750.

Aohad Sabzwari (Khwaja) (اوحده سبزواري), poetical name of Khawja Fakhr-uddin, a physician, astronomer, and poet, of Sabzwār. He died A.D. 1463, A.H. 868, aged 81 lunar years, and left a Diwān in Persian containing Ghazals, Qasidas, etc.

Aohadi (اوحدي), the poetical name of Shaikh Aohad-uddin of Isfahān or Marāgha, a celebrated Persian poet who put into verse the Jām-i-Jam, a book full of Muhammadan spirituality, which he wrote in imitation of the Hādīqa of Sanāi; he also wrote a Diwān containing verses. He was liberally rewarded by Arghūn Khān, the king of the Tartars. He was a pupil of Aohad-uddin Kirmāni; died in A.D. 1337, A.H. 738, and was buried at Marāgha in Tabriz.

Aohad-uddin (اوحده الدين), the surname of the celebrated Anwari, which see.Aoji (اوجي), a poet who died in

A.D. 1640, A.H. 1050.

'Apa Sahib (آپا صاحب), a nephew of Rāghōji Bhonsla II. and cousin to Parsarām Bhonsla, commonly called Bālā Sāhib, rāja of Nāgpur or Berār. The latter succeeded his father in March, A.D. 1816, but being an idiot and unfit to rule, 'Apā Sāhib assumed the chief authority under the title of Regent, and had the sole conduct of the public affairs. Although he was in a great degree indebted for his elevation to the English Government, he early evinced a disposition as inconsistent with the gratitude which he owed to that State, as with the obligations of good faith. It was also discovered that he had secretly murdered his predecessor, Bālā Sāhib (Parsarām), in order to obtain that elevation which he had so disgraced. He was consequently seized in the beginning of the year A.D. 1818, and brought to the Residency, where he continued in confinement till directed to be sent under a strong escort to the Company's territories. When arrived at Raichora, a village within one march from Jabalpūr, he contrived, by bribing some of his guards, to make his escape. It is believed that after having for a short period found a refuge in Asirgūrh, he fled to the Panjāb, where he remained a miserable dependant on the charity of Rāja Ranjīt Singh. After the dethronement of 'Apā Sāhib, the grandson of Rāghōji Bhonsla was raised to the masnad of Nāgpur.

Apa Sahib (آپا صاحب), also called Shalyi, third brother of Partāp Singh Narāyan, rāja of Satāra. After the dethronement of his brother in A.D. 1839, he was placed on the masnad of Satāra by the British Government, and died on the 5th April, 1848. Before his death he expressed a wish that he might adopt as a son, a boy by name Balwant Rāo Bhonsla. It was, however, determined to annex Satāra.

Aqa Muhammad Khan Qajar (آقا محمد خان قاجار), king of Persia, of the tribe of Qājūr, and son of Muhammad Hasan Khān Qājār, ruler of Māzandarān. He was made an eunuch in his childhood by 'Adil Shāh, the nephew and immediate successor of Nādir Shāh. After the death of 'Adil Shāh he obtained his release, and joined his father, who was afterwards slain by Karīm Khān Zand, king of Persia. Aghā, or Aqā Muhammad, was obliged to surrender himself to him, and was a prisoner in the city of Shirāz. He had for some time been very strictly guarded, and was never allowed to go beyond the walls of the town, but afterwards he was permitted to go a-hunting. When the last illness of Karīm Khān assumed a dangerous appearance, he contrived to leave that city on the usual pretext of hunting. When intelligence was brought to him that the founder of the Zand dynasty was no more, accompanied by a few attendants, he commenced his flight, and, favoured by the confusion of the moment, he reached his province of Māzandarān in safety, and proclaimed himself one of the competitors for the crown of Persia. Soon after the death of 'Alī Murād Khān, ruler of Persia, in A.D. 1785, he made himself master of Isfahān without a battle, but had for several years to contend with Luff 'Alī Khān, the last prince of the Zand family, before he became sole master of Persia. Luff 'Alī Khān was put to death by him in A.D. 1795, 14th Muharram, A.H. 1212. Aqā Muhammad Khān was murdered on the 10th July, A.D. 1797, by two of his attendants, whom he had sentenced to death, in the 63rd year of his age. He had been a ruler of a great part of Persia for 20 years, but had only for a short period enjoyed the undisputed sovereignty of that country. He was succeeded by his nephew, Fath 'Alī Shāh, who died in A.D. 1834, A.H. 1250. After him, his grandson, Muhammad Shāh, the son of 'Abbās Mirzā, mounted the throne, and died in 1847, when his son, Nāsir-uddīn Ahmad Shāh, the present king of Persia, succeeded him.

Aqa Razi (آقا رضى), a poet of Persia, who came to India, and after his return home, died in A.D. 1615, A.H. 1024.

'Aqidat Khan (عقيدت خان), title of Mir Mahmūd, brother of Asālat Khān Mashhadi. He came to India in the 14th year of 'Alamgir, A.D. 1670, and was raised to the rank of 1,000 and 400 sawārs.

'Aqil (عقيل), 'Aqil the brother of 'Ali.

There is a story of him that being displeased with his brother 'Alī the Khulīfa, he went over to Mu'āwīya, who received him with great kindness and respect, but desired him to curse 'Alī; and as he would not admit of any refusal, 'Aqil thus addressed the congregation: "O people, you know that 'Alī, the son of Abū-Tālib, is my brother; now Mu'āwīya has ordered me to curse him, therefore, may the curse of God be upon him." So that the curse would either apply to 'Alī or to Mu'āwīya.

'Aqil Khan (عاقل خان), 'Aqil Khān, nephew of Afzal Khān wazīr, a nobleman of 3,000, who served under the emperor Shāh Jahān, and died A.D. 1619, A.H. 1059.

'Aqil Khan (Nawab) (عاقل خان نواب), the title of Mir 'Askarī. He was a native of Khwāf, in Khurāsān, and held the office of wīzarat in the time of the emperor 'Alamgir. He was an excellent poet; and as he had a great respect for Shāh Burhān-uddīn, entitled Rāz-i-Illāhī, he chose the word Rāzī for his poetical title. He is the author of several works, among which are a Magnawī and Diwān. He died A.D. 1695, A.H. 1108. Fide Rāzī.

'Arabshah (عرب شاه), author of a history of Amīr Taimūr (Tamerlane) called Ajāeb-ul-Magdūr, and of a treatise on the unity of God. He was a native of Damascus, where he died in A.D. 1450, A.H. 859. He is also called Ibn 'Arabshāh and Ahmad Ibn Arabshāh.

Aram Bano Begam (آرام بانو بیگم), a daughter of the emperor Akbar, who died in the 40th year of her age in A.D. 1624, A.H. 1033, during the reign of Jahāngīr, her brother, and is buried in the mausoleum of Akbar at Sikandra in Agra. Her tomb is of white marble. Her mother's name was Bībī Dawlat Shud, and her sister's name Shahr-un-nisa Begam.

Aram Shah (Sultan) (آرام شاه), king of Dehli, succeeded his father, Sulhān Qutb-uddin Aibak, in A.D. 1210, A.H. 607, and had scarcely reigned one year when he was deposed by Altīmsh, the adopted son and son-in-law of Qutb-uddin, who assumed the title of Shams-uddin Altīmsh.

Araru (آراری), a zamīndār of Korā in the province of Allahābād, was of the tribe of Kharhar, who, taking advantage of the weakness of the empire, slew Nawāb Jān Nisār Khān (brother to the wazīr's wife), chakladār of that district in A.D. 1731, A.H. 1144, upon which Azīm-ullāh Khān, the son of the deceased, was sent with an army to chastise him, but the zamīndār took refuge in his woods, and for a long while eluded his pursuer, who, tired out, returned to Dehli, leaving his army under the command of Khwārizm Beg Khān. Arārū, emboldened by the Nawāb's retreat, attacked and slew the deputy, upon which the wazīr Qamar-uddin Khān applied for assistance to Burhān-ul-Mulk Sa'adat Khān Subādār of Oudh, for the reduction of the rebel. Sa'adat Khān marched against Arārū in A.D. 1735, A.H. 1148, killed him in battle and sent his head to the emperor Muhammad Shāh. The skin of his body was flayed off, and sent stuffed with straw to the wazīr.

Ardai Viraf (اردی وراف), a priest of the Magian religion, who lived in the time of Ardisher Bābagan, king of Persia, and is the author of the Ardai Viraf Nama, which he wrote in the Zend, or the original Persian language.
[See Nousherwān Kirmānī.]

Ardisher Babakan (اردشیر بابکان), or Bābagān, the son of Bābak, was, we are told, a descendant of Sāsān, the son of Bahman and grandson of Isfandiār. He was the first king of the Sāsānian dynasty. His father Bābak, who was an inferior officer in the public service, after putting to death the governor appointed by Ardawān (Artabanus) made himself master of the province Fars. The old man survived but a short time. His son Ardisher, after settling the affairs of Fars, not only made himself master of Isfāhān, but of almost all Irāq, before Ardawān, who was the reigning prince, took the field against him, about the year A.D. 223. The armies met in the plains of Hurmuz, where a desperate battle ensued, in which Ardawān lost his crown and his life; and the son of Bābak was hailed in the field with the proud title of Shāhān Shāh, or King of kings. He was contemporary with Alexander Severus, the Roman emperor. Ardisher (whom the Roman historians call Artaxerxes) having reigned fourteen years as absolute sovereign of Persia, resigned the government into the hands of his son, Shāhpūr, called by the Romans Sapor or Saporess, in the year A.D. 238.

The following is a list of the kings of Persia of the Sāsānian race:—

1. Ardisher.
2. Shāhpūr I.
3. Hurmuz I.
4. Bahām I.
5. Bahrām II.
6. Bahrām III.
7. Narsē.
8. Hurmuz II.
9. Shāhpūr II.
10. Ardisher II.
11. Shāhpūr III.
12. Bahrām IV.
13. Yazdijard I.
14. Bahām Gōr.
15. Yazdijard II.
16. Hurmuz, or Hurmuz III.
17. Firōz.
18. Balas or Palash.
19. Kābād.
20. Jāmāsp.
21. Nausherwān (Kasra).
22. Hurmuz.
23. Khusrō Parwez.
24. Sherōya.
25. Ardisher III.
26. Shahrīār.
27. Tūrān, or Pūrān Dukht.
28. Azarmī Dukht.
29. Farrukhād Bakhtīār.
30. Yazdijard III.

Ardisher (اردشیر), (or Artaxerxes) II.
succeeded his father Shāhpūr II. in the year A.D. 380, and sat on the throne of Persia only four years, during which period no event of consequence occurred. He was deposed in A.D. 384 by his brother Shāhpūr III. who succeeded him.

Ardisher (اردشیر), (or Artaxerxes) III.
a king of Persia, of the Sāsānian race, who reigned about the year A.D. 629, after Sherōya.

Ardisher Darazdast (اردشیر)

(درآزدست), an ancient king of Persia, the Artaxerxes Longimanus of the Greeks, surnamed Bāhman, was the son of Isfandiār. He succeeded his grandfather, Gashtasp, as king of Persia in n.c. 464. He is celebrated for the wisdom he displayed in the internal regulation of his empire. In the commencement of the reign of this monarch, the celebrated Rustam was slain by the treachery of his brother. This prince is supposed to be the Ahasuerus of Scripture, who married Esther, and during the whole of his reign shewed the greatest kindness to the Jewish nation. The long reign of this monarch includes that of two or more of his immediate successors, who are not noticed by Persian writers. According to them, he ruled Persia 112 years, and was succeeded by his daughter Queen Humāi.

Arghun Khan (ارغون خان), the son of Abākā Khān and grandson of Hālākū Khān, was raised to the throne of Persia after the murder of his uncle Ahmad Khān, surnamed Nekōdār, in August, A.D. 1284, Jamād I. A.H. 683. His reign was marked by few events of consequence. He recalled the celebrated Shams-ud-din Muhammad Sāhib Diwān, his father's wazīr, who, disgusted with court, had retired to Isfahān; but this able minister was hardly re-established in his office, before his enemies persuaded the prince that he had actually poisoned his father; and the aged wazīr was in the same year made over to the public executioner. Amir Būkā, the rival of Shams-ud-din, rose, upon his fall, to such power that he was tempted to make a grasp at the crown; but he was unsuccessful, and lost his life in the attempt. Arghūn Khān died on Saturday, the 10th March, A.D. 1291, 5th Rabi I. A.H. 690, after a reign of 6 years and 9 months, and was succeeded by his brother Kaijaptū or Kaikhatū. His mother was a Christian.

Arghun Shah Jani Qurbani (Amir)

(ارغون شاه جاني قرباني امير), who reigned in Naishapūr and Tūs about the year A.D. 1337, and was defeated by the Sarbadars of Sabzwār.

Arif (عارف), the poetical name of the

- son of Ghulām Husain Khān. He was an excellent Urdū poet of Delhi, and died in A.D. 1852, A.H. 1268.

'Arifi (Maulana) (عارفي), a Persian poet who flourished in the time of the wazīr khwāja Muhammad bin Iqbal, and wrote a work in his name called Dakh Nāma. He lived in the 9th century of the Hijrī era.

'Arifi (Maulana) (عارفي), son of Mubārīk Maskhara, was a learned Musalmān, and was living in A.D. 1680, A.H. 988, when he wrote a chronogram on the death of Qasim Kūhī, who died in that year, during the reign of the emperor Akbar.

Arjumand Bano Begam (آرجمند بانو)

(بنگم), entitled Mumtāz Mahāl (now corrupted into Taj Mahāl and Taj Bibi) was the favourite wife of the emperor Shāh Jahān, and daughter of 'Asaf Khān, wazīr, the brother of the celebrated Nūr Jahān Begam. She was born in the year A.D. 1692, A.H. 1000, and married to the prince Mirzā Khurram (afterwards Shāh Jahān) in A.D. 1612, A.H. 1021, by whom she had several children. She died in child-bed a few hours after the birth of her last daughter, named Dāhar Arā, on the 7th July, o.s. 1631, 17th Zil-hijja, A.H. 1040, at Burhānpūr in the Deccan, was at first buried there in a garden called Zainābād, but afterwards her remains were removed to Agra, where a most splendid mausoleum was built over her tomb, with a coating of white marble decorated with mosaics, which for the richness of the material, the chasteness of the design, and the effect at once brilliant and solemn, is not surpassed by any other edifice either in Europe or Asia. It was completed in A.D. 1645, A.H. 1055, and is now called the "Taj," or "Taj Mahāl," which is said to have cost the enormous sum of £3,000,000. The chronogram of her death contains the date in the word "Gham," or Grief. She was also called Kudsiā Begam and Nawāb 'Alia Begam.

Arjun Singh (ارجن سنگه) was one of the three sons of Raja Mānsingh.

Arpa Khan (آريا خان), one of the princes of the Tartar family, was crowned king of Persia after the death of Abū Saīd Khān Bahādūr, in November, A.D. 1336, A.H. 736. He reigned five months and was killed in battle against Mūsī Khān in A.D. 1336, who succeeded him.

Arsalan Khan (ارسلان خان), title of Arsalān Qulī, the son of Alahwardī Khān I., was a nobleman in the service of the emperor Alamgir, and was living about the year A.D. 1696, A.H. 1108.

Arsalan Shah (ارسلان شاه), the son of Sulṭān Maṣṣūd III, of Ghazni. He murdered his brother Sherzād in A.D. 1116, A.H. 609, and having ascended the throne, he imprisoned all his other brothers excepting Bahram Shāh, who fled to Khurāsān and sought assistance of Sulṭān Sanjar his uncle.

Sanjar in the year A.D. 1118, A.H. 512, marched to Ghazni, and in a battle defeated Arsalān Shāh, who made his escape to Lahore, but was soon after taken prisoner and put to death, when Bahram Shāh ascended the throne.

Arsalan Shah (ارسلان شاه), a king of Khwarizm, and son of Atsiz. Vide Alp Arsalān.

Arsalan Shah Saljuki (ارسلان شاه سلجوقي), the son of Tughral II and grandson of Sulṭān Muhammad, brother to Sulṭān Sanjar. Arsalān Shāh died in January, A.D. 1176, A.H. 571. His son Tughral III. who succeeded him, was the last Sulṭān of the family of the Saljūkides, who reigned in Persia.

'Arsh-Ashaiani (عرش آشیانی), the title given to the emperor Akbar I. after his death.

'Arshi (عرشی), whose proper name was Mir Muhammad Momin, was a brother of Mir Sālah Kashifi, the son of Mir Abdullāh Musākhin Qalam Husaini, who was a celebrated calligrapher under Jahāngir. 'Arshi is the author of a poem called Shāhid-Arshi, composed in the year A.D. 1659, A.H. 1070, also of another work entitled Mehr na Wafa, and of a Diwān.

Artaxerxes. Vide Ardisher.

Arzami Dukht (ارزمي دخت), a queen of the Persians, whose general named Mehrān being killed in a battle against the Saracens, she was deposed by the people, who placed Yazdijard III. upon the throne in her stead, a young man of the royal family. But this did not much mend the matter, the government of the new king of theirs being even more inauspicious than that of the queen; for in her reign the confines of the empire were only invaded, but in his all was entirely lost, and the whole kingdom and country of the Persians fell into the hands of the Musulmāns. The accession of Yazdijard is placed by Sir John Malcolm in A.D. 632, A.H. 11, but Major Price fixes it in A.D. 635, A.H. 14.

[Vide Taurāndukht.]

Arzani Begam (ارزاني بيگم) was the daughter of Shahrinār, who was married, in the 16th year of Jahāngir's reign, to Mīr-un-nisā, the daughter of Nur Jahān.

[Vide Aīn Translation i. p. 331.]

Arzu (آرزو), the poetical name of Sirāj-ud-dīn Alī Khān, which see.

Asa Ahir (آسا اهير), a shepherd chief, who built the fortress of Asirgarh in the Deccan in the 14th century; he had some 2000 retainers. The hill had long before been encircled by a wall to protect the cattle, and it was to employ the poor that Asā constructed, instead of the fortifications, which still remain, beyond all comparison, the strongest native built fortress in India. Asā was put to death by Malik Nasir, the Muhammadan chief Khandais, who possessed himself of the stronghold by treachery, and completed the fortifications. Two centuries later Asirgarh and all Nimar were conquered by Akbar and incorporated with the Mughal empires. It was taken by the British in 1817.

Asad (اسد), the poetical name of Mirzā Asad-ullāh Khān, usually called Mirzā Noushāh. His ancestors were of Samarcand, but he was born at Agra; but was brought up and lived at Delhi, where he rose to great fame as a poet and writer of the Persian language, whilst his compositions in Urdu were not less admired. He won the favour of Bahādur Shāh, the last king of Delhi, who conferred upon him the title of Nawāb, and appointed him royal preceptor in the art of poetry. He is the author of a Persian Inshā, a Masnawi in praise of 'Alī, and a Diwān in Persian and another in Urdu. Both have been printed. He was in A.D. 1832, when sixty years of age, living at Delhi, and was engaged in compiling a history of the Mughal emperors of India. His poetical name is Ghulib, which see. He died in the year A.D. 1869, A.H. 1285.

Asadi Tusi (اسد طوسي), a native of Tūs in the province of Khurāsān, and one of the most celebrated Persian poets at the court of Sulṭān Mahmūd of Ghazni, whom the Sulṭān often entreated to undertake the legendary history of Persia, but he excused himself on account of his age. His best work is supposed to be lost. He was the master of Firdausi, who afterwards composed the Shāh Nāma. It is said that Firdausi on his departure from Ghazni requested him to finish the Shāh Nāma, which was yet incomplete, and that Asadi composed that part of the poem between the Arabian conquest of eastern Persia under the khālif 'Umar, to the end, consisting of 4000 couplets. The year of Asadi's death is unknown, but it appears from the above circumstance that he was living in A.D. 1010, A.H. 401, in which year Firdausi departed from Ghazni. The most celebrated of the other works of Asadi now extant is his dispute between Day and Night, a translation of which in English verse is to be found in the Rose Garden of Persia, by Louisa Stuart Costello, published, London, 1845.

Asad Khan (اسد خان نواب), entitled Asaf-ud-daula and Jumlat-ul-Mulk, was descended from an illustrious family of Turkmans. His father, who fled from the oppressions of Shāh Abbās, of Persia, into Hindūstan, was raised to high rank by the emperor Jahāngīr with the title of Zulfikār Khān, and married to the daughter of a new relation to his empress Nūr Jahān. His son Asad Khān (whose former name was Ibrahim) was very early noticed by Shāh Jahān, who married him to a daughter of his wazīr Asaf Khān, and promoted him to the office of second Bakhshī, which he held till the 15th year of Alamgir (A.D. 1671), when he was raised to the rank of 4000, and a few years afterwards to the office of wazīr and highest order of nobility, seven thousand. In the reign of Bahādur Shāh he was appointed Wakil Mutlaq (an office superior to wazīr), and his son Isma'il made Mir Bakhshī or chief paymaster, with the title of Amir-ul-'Umra Zulfikār Khān; but on the accession of Farrukh-siār, he was disgraced, his estates seized, and his son put to death. After that period, he lived upon a scanty pension in a sort of confinement, but much respected by all ranks. He died in the year A.D. 1717, A.H. 1129, aged 90 lunar years, and was buried with great funeral pomp at the expense of the emperor, in a mausoleum, erected by his father for the family.

Asad-ullah al-Ghalib (اسدالله الغالب), the conquering lion of God, an epithet of Alī the son-in-law of Muhammad.

Asad-ullah Asad Yar Khan (Nawab) (اسد الہہ اسد یار خان); he lived in the time of the emperor Muhammad Shāh, and died in A.D. 1745, A.H. 1158. His poetical name was Insān, which see.

Asad-ullah Khan (Mirza) (اسد الہہ) (خان میرزا). Fide Asad and Ghālib.

Asaf (آصف), a native of Qumm in Persia, who came to India in the reign of the emperor Shāh Jahān, and is the author of a Diwān. [The name comes from the legendary minister of Solomon, who appears to have been merely a musician; vide I. Chron. c. xvi. 7.]

Asafi (Khawaja) (آصفی خواجہ), son of Khawaja Na'mat-ul-lāh, was an elegant poet. Asafi is his poetical name, which he took on account of his father having served in the capacity of wazīr to Sulhān Abū Sa'īd Mirzā; for, they say, Asaf or Asuph of the Scriptures, was wazīr to king Solomon. He was one of the contemporaries and companions of Jāmī, and took instructions from him in the art of poetry. He died about the month of August, A.D. 1520, 16th Shaban, A.H. 926, aged more than 70, and was buried at Herat; but according to the work called Khulāsat-ul-Ashā'ār, he died in A.H. 920. He is author of a Diwān or book of Odes called Diwān Asafi, and a Masnawī in the measure of Makhzan-ul-Ashrār.

Asaf Jah (آصف جاہ), the title of the celebrated Nizām-ul-Mulk of Haidurābād.

Asaf Khan I. (آصف خان), surnamed

Abdul Majid, was a nobleman in the time of the emperor Akbar, who in A.D. 1665, A.H. 973, distinguished himself by the conquest of Garrakōta, a principality on the Narbada, bordering on Bundelkhand. It was governed by a Queen or Rānī named Durgāwati, who opposed the Muhammadan general in an unsuccessful action, and when seeing her army routed and herself severely wounded, she avoided falling into the hands of the enemy by stabbing herself with a dagger. Her treasures, which were of great value, fell into the hands of Asaf Khān; he secured a great part, and the detection of this embezzlement was the immediate cause of his revolt. He was, however, subsequently pardoned, and after the conquest of Chittour, that country was given to Asaf Khān in jagīr.

Asaf Khan II. (آصف خان), title of Khraj-Ghayas-ud-dīn 'Alī Qaivastī, the son of Aqā Mullānd, uncle to Asaf Khān Jāfar Beg. He held the Bakhshigari in the time of the emperor Akbar, and after the conquest of Gujrat in A.D. 1573, A.H. 981, in which he distinguished himself, the title Abbās Khān was conferred on him. He died at Gujrat in A.D. 1581, A.H. 989, and after his death his nephew Mirzā Jāfar Beg was buried with the title of Asaf Khān.

Asaf Khan III. (آصف خان جعفر)

(بیگ), commonly called Mirzā Ja'far Beg, was the son of Mirzā Badī-uz-Zamān and grandson of Aqā Mullā Qazwīnī. He was born at Qazwīn, and came to India in his youth, A.D. 1577, A.H. 985. At the recommendation of his uncle Mirzā Ghāias-ud-dīn, who was a nobleman at the court of the emperor Akbar, and bore then the title of Asaf Khān, was received with honour, and after the death of his uncle the office of Bakhshigari was conferred on him with the title of Asaf Khān, A.D. 1581, A.H. 989. He was an excellent poet, and was one of the many that were employed by the emperor in compiling the Tārīkh Afifi, and after the assassination of Mullā Ahmad in A.D. 1588, A.H. 996, the remainder of the work was written by him up to the year A.H. 997. He is also called Asaf Khān Mirzā Ja'far Bakhshī Begī, and is the author of a poem called Shirīn wa Khawar. The office of chief Diwān was conferred on him by the emperor in A.D. 1598, A.H. 1007, and in the reign of Jahāngīr he was raised to the high post of wazārat. He died in the year A.D. 1612, A.H. 1021. In his poetical compositions he used the name of Ja'far. One of his sons, who also bore the name of Ja'far, became an excellent poet and died in the time of Alamgir, A.D. 1682, A.H. 1094.

Asaf Khan IV. (آصف خان), the title of 'Abūl Hasan, who had several other titles conferred on him at different times, such as Ya'tqād Khān, Yomīn-ud-daula, etc., was the son of the celebrated Wazīr Ya'tmad-ud-daula, and brother to Nūr Jahān Begam. After his father's death in A.D. 1621, A.H. 1030, he was appointed wazīr by the emperor Jahāngīr. His daughter Arjumand 'Bāno Begam, also called Mumtāz Mahal, was married to the prince Shāh Jahān. 'Asaf Khān died at Lāhore in the 16th Year of Shāh Jahān on the 10th November, O.S. 1641, 17th Sha'ban, A.H. 1051, aged 72 lunar years, and was buried there on the banks of the Rāwī opposite to the city of Lāhore. Besides Mumtāz Mahal, he had four sons, viz., Shāista Khān; Mirzā Masih, who was drowned in a drunken frolic in the river Behat in Kashmir; Mirzā Husain, of moderate abilities and little note; and Shāhnawāz Khān, who rose to much reputation and distinction.

Asaf-ud-daula (آصف الدوله), a title of Asad Khān, which see.

Asaf-ud-daula (Nawab) (آصف الدوله)

(نواب), the eldest son of Nawāb
Shujāa'-ud-daula of Andh after whose death in January, A.D. 1775, Zil-qada, A.H. 1188, he succeeded to his dominions, and made Lucknow the seat of his government, which formerly was at Faizābād. He died after a reign of twenty-three lunar years and seven months on Friday the 21st September, A.D. 1797, 28th Rabi' I. A.H. 1212, and was buried in the Imām Bāra at Lucknow, of which he was the founder. His eldest adopted son, Wazīr Ali Khān, agreeably to his request, was placed on the masnad, but was after four months deposed by Sir John Shore, then Governor of Calcutta, and Sa'adat Ali Khān, the brother of the deceased, raised to the masnad. Asaf-ud-daula is the author of a Diwān in Urdū and Persian.

Asalat Khan (اصالت خان), title of Mir Abdul Hādī, son of Mir Mirān Yezdī, was a nobleman in the service of the emperor Shāh Jahān. He died in the year A.D. 1647, A.H. 1057.

Atabak Eldiguz (اتابک یلدگوز).

Idē Eldiguz.

Atabak Muhammad (اتابک محمد) was the eldest son of Eldiguz, whom he succeeded as prime minister in A.D. 1172, A.H. 568. When Tughral III. a prince of the Saljūkiān dynasty (who was a child of seven years of age), was placed on the throne in A.D. 1176, Muhammad, who was his uncle, became the actual ruler of Persia. This chief after enjoying power 13 years died in March, A.D. 1186, Zil-hijja, A.H. 581, in which year the conjunction of all the planets took place. He was succeeded by his brother Qizal Arsalān.

Atabak Muzaffar (اتابک مظفر), the son of Atābak Muhammad. He succeeded his brother Abū Bakr in A.D. 1210, A.H. 607, and not only inherited Azurbajān, but a considerable part of 'Iraq. He enjoyed this power 15 years; after which 'Azurbajān was invaded and conquered by Sultān Jalāl-ud-dīn, the monarch of Khwārizm, A.D. 1225, A.H. 622. Muzaffar shut himself up in the fort of Alanjaq, where he died; and with him perished the power of the family of Eldiguz.

'Ata Husain Khan (عطا حسین خان), whose poetical name was Tabsin, is the author of the Nautarz Murassa', an Urdū translation of the Chahār Darvesh. He flourished in the time of Nawāb 'Asaf-ud-daula of Lucknow, about the year A.D. 1776, A.H. 1189. As a specimen of the Urdū language the Nautarz Murassa' was rendered objectionable for students, by his retaining too much of the phraseology and idiom of the Persian and Arabic. On this account a simple version was executed by Mir Amman of Dehli in A.D. 1802, A.H. 1217, which is styled the Bāgh-o-Bahār.

[Idē Tabsin.]

Atal (اتل), a name assumed by Mir

Abdul Jalil Māhli in his poetical compositions, who gave out that he was by inspiration the pupil of Ja'far Zafalli, and wrote poetry in Persian and Arabic.

several Muslimān authors, but particularly of Taj-ud-dīn Muhammad bin-Ahmad bin-Atā-ullāh, who is the author of a book entitled Ukūm-ul-'Atia, which treats on Muslimān law, and is to be found in the Royal Library at Paris, No. 672. There is one Atā-ullāh who is the author of a dictionary called Firdaus-ul-Lughāt.

'Ata-ullah (عطا الهه), bin-Muhammad

-al-Husaini Naishāpūrī, author of the Rauzat-ul-Ithbāb, containing the history of Muhammad, of his companions, and of the twelve Imāms. This book was written at Herāt and dedicated to Amīr 'Alī-sher in A.D. 1494, A.H. 899. He is also called Amīr Jamāl-ud-dīn Atā-ullāh. He also wrote another work on the art of writing poetry, entitled Kitāb Takmil-us-Sana'at, dedicated to the same Amīr, in which he calls himself 'Atā-ullāh bin-Muhammad-al-Husaini Naishāpūrī. He was wazīr to Sultān Husain Mirzā of Herāt, and died in the beginning of the year A.H. 917.

At-har or Athar Khan (الطهر خان),

Avank Khān (اونک خان), or Ung Khān, a prince of the tribe of Karit or Kirit, a tribe of Mughuls or Oriental Tartars, who made profession of the Christian religion. He was surnamed Malīk Yūhannā, or king John. From the name of this prince we have made John the Priest, who was stripped of his dominions by Chingiz Khān in A.D. 1202, A.H. 599. They have since applied the name of John the Priest or Prestre John to the king of Ethiopia, because he was a Christian. Avank Khān is by some authors called Avant Khān. He was a very powerful sovereign, and the greatest part of Tartary was tributary to him; but he was defeated and put to death by Chingiz Khān.

Aweis Qarani (Khwaja) (اویس قرنی),

an upright Musalmān of the Sūfi sect, who had given up the world, used to say to those that sought him, "Do you seek God? If you do, why do you come to me? And if you do not seek God, what business can I have with you?" He was an inhabitant of Yaman and of the tribe of Qāran. He was slain in a battle fought by Ali against Mu'awia I. in A.D. 657, 17th Shawwal, A.H. 37. This man had never seen Muhammad, and yet the Musalmāns say, that when he heard that Muhammad had lost a tooth in battle, and not knowing which, he broke all his teeth.

Aweis Jalayer (Sultan) (اویس جلایر سلطان) succeeded his father, Amīr Hasan Buzurg, as king of Baghdād in July, A.D. 1356, Rajab, A.H. 757, and after a reign of nearly nineteen lunar years died on Tuesday the 10th October, A.D. 1374, 2nd Jamad I. A.H. 776. He was succeeded by his son Sulhān Husain Jalāyer.

Aweis Mirza (اویس مرزا), a prince nearly related to Baiqara Bahādur, was nephew to Abūl Ghāzī Sulhān Husain Bahādur. He was murdered by Sulhān Abū Saīd Mirzā, between the years A.D. 1451 and 1457.

'Ayani (عیانی), whose proper name was Abū Is-hāq Ibrāhīm, probably flourished previous to the 8th century of the Hijrat. He is the author of a Masnawī called Anba Nūna, a history of the prophets who preceded Muhammad.

Ayaz (ایاز), a slave of Sultān Mahmūd of Ghazni who, being a great favourite of his master, was envied by the courtiers; they therefore informed the Sultān that they frequently observed Ayāz go privately into the Jewel office, whence they presumed he had purloined many valuable effects. The next time when the slave had entered the treasury, the Sultān followed by a private door, and, unobserved, saw Ayāz draw from a large chest a suit of old dirty garments, with which having clothed himself, he prostrated himself on the ground and returned thanks to the Almighty for all the benefits conferred on him. The Sultān, being astonished, went to him, and demanded an explanation of his conduct. He replied, "Most gracious Sir, when I first became your Majesty's servant, this was my dress, and till that period, humble had been my lot. Now that, by the grace of God and your majesty's favour, I am elevated above all the nobles of the land, and am intrusted with the treasures of the world, I am fearful that my heart should be puffed up with vanity; I therefore daily practise this humiliation to remind me of my former insignificance." The Sultān being much pleased, added to his rank, and severely reprimanded his slanderers.

'Ayaz (Qazi) (عياض قاضی), son of Mūsa, and author of the Shurah Sahih Muslim, Mashāriq-ul-Anwār, and several other works. He died in A.D. 1149, A.H. 544.

'Ayesha (عائشه), daughter of Abū Bakr, and one of the most beloved wives of Muhammad, though she bore him no child. She was his third wife, and the only one that was a maid, being then only seven years of age; on which account (some say) her father, whose original name was Abdullāh, was named Abū Bakr, that is to say, the father of the virgin. An Arabian author, cited by Maracci, says, that Abū Bakr was very averse to giving him his daughter so young, but that Muhammad pretended a divine command for it; whereupon he sent her to him with a basket of dates, and when the girl was alone with him, he stretched out his hand, and rudely took hold of her clothes; upon which she looked fiercely at him, and said, "People call you the faithful man, but your behaviour to me shews you are a perfidious one." But this story is most probably one of those calumnies against Muhammad which were invented and found favour in the Middle Ages. After the death of her husband she opposed the succession of Ali, and had several bloody battles with him; although violent, her character was respected, and when taken prisoner by Ali she was dismissed without injury. She was called prophetic and mother of the faithful. She died, aged 67, in the year A.D. 678, A.H. 58. Her brother Abdur Rahmān, one of the four who stood out against Yezid's inauguration, died the same year. There is a tradition that 'Ayesha was murdered by the direction of Mu'āwīa I. and the following particulars are recorded:— 'Ayesha having resolutely and insultingly refused to engage her allegiance to Yezid, Mu'āwīa invited her to an entertainment, where he had prepared a very deep well or pit in that part of the chamber reserved for her reception, and had the mouth of it deceptively covered over with leaves and straw. A chair was then placed upon the fatal spot, and 'Ayesha, on being conducted to her seat, instantly sank into eternal night, and the mouth of the pit was immediately covered with stones and mortar. There is, however, no trustworthy authority in support of this story.

'Ayn-uddin (Shaikh) (عين الدين شيخ), of Bijāpūr, author of the Mulhiqat, and Kitāb-ul-Anwār containing a history of all the Muhammadan saints of India. He flourished in the time of Sultān Ala-uddin Hasan Bahmani.

'Ayn-ul-Mulk (Hakim) (عين الملك حكيم), a native of Shirāz, and a well-educated and learned Musulmān, was an officer of rank in the time of the emperor

Akbar. He was an elegant poet, and his poetical name was Wafā. He died in the 40th year of the emperor in A.D. 1594, A.H. 1003.

'Ayn-ul-Mulk (Khawaja) (عين الملك خواجه), a distinguished nobleman in the court of Sultān Muhammad Shāh Tughlaq and his successor Sultān Firoz Shāh Bārbak, kings of Dehlī. He is the author of several works, one of which is called Tarāif 'Ayn-ul-Mulkī. He also appears to be the author of another work called Fathā Nāma, containing an account of the conquests of Sultān 'Alā-uddin Sikan-dar Sāni, who reigned from A.D. 1296 to A.D. 1316.

'Aysh (عیش), poetical name of Muhammad 'Askari, who lived in the reign of the emperor Shāh 'Alam.

'Ayshi (عیشی), a poet who is the author of a Masnawī called Haft Akhtar, or the seven planets, which he wrote in A.D. 1675, A.H. 1086.

Azad (آزاد), poetical name of Mīr Ghulām Ali of Bilgrām, born about 1703. His father Sayyad Nūh, who died in A.D. 1752, A.H. 1165, was the son of the celebrated Mīr Abdūl Jāhil Bilgrāmī. He was an excellent poet and is the author of several works in Persian and Arabic, among which are Qasā'id 'Uzzā, Sab - hut - ul - Mirjān, Khuzāna 'Amira, and Tazkira Sarv 'Azād. He died in the year A.D. 1786, A.H. 1200.

Azad (آزاد), the poetical name of Captain Alexander Hiderley, in the service of the rājā of Alwar. He was a good poet and has left a small Diwān in Urdū. His father's name was James Hiderley, and his brother's Thomas Hiderley. He died on the 7th July, 1861, Zilhij, A.H. 1277, at Alwar, aged 32 years.

Azad Khan (آزاد خان), governor of Cashmere, of the Afghān tribe, succeeded his father, Hājī Karīm Dād, a domestic officer of Ahmad Shāh Abdālī, and who was at the death of that prince advanced to the government of Cashmere by Taimūr Shāh, as a reward for quelling the rebellion of Amīr Khān, the former governor. Azād Khān was only 18 years of age (in 1783) when he was governor of Cashmere, but his acts of ferocity exceeded common belief.

Azal (ازل), poetical name of Mirzā Muhammad Amīn, who died in A.D. 1728, A.H. 1141.

'Azam Shah (اعظم شاه), the third son of the emperor Alamgir, was born on the 11th July, o.s. 1653, 25th Shābān, A.H. 1063. After his father's death (his eldest brother Bahādur Shah being then at Kābul) he was crowned in the garden of Shālimar at Ahmadābād in the Deccan on the 4th March, o.s. 1707, 10th Zil-hijja, A.H. 1118, but was soon after slain, together with his two sons, Bedār Bukht and Wālājāh, in a battle fought against his eldest brother at Jajowan between Agra and Dholpur. This took place on Sunday the 8th June, o.s. 1707, 18th Rābī' I. A.H. 1119, three lunar months and eighteen days after his father's death. His mother's name was Bāno Begam, the daughter of Shāhnawāz Khān. He was buried in the mausoleum of Humāyūn at Delhi. His two youngest sons who survived him were 'Alī Tabār and Bedar Dil.

'Azd-ud-daula (عبد الدولة), a Sultān of the Bōyites, succeeded his father, Rukn-ud-daula, in September, A.D. 976, Muharram, A.H. 366, to the government of Fars and 'Irāk, as well as in the office of wazīr or Amīr-ul-Umrā to the Khalīf Al-Tāya Billāh of Baghdād, in the room of his cousin Izz-ud-daula, the son of Ma'izz-ud-daula, whom he killed in battle in A.D. 978, A.H. 367. He built the mausoleum of 'Alī at Najaf Ashraf, embellished Baghdād and other places by magnificent public buildings, and died on Monday the 27th March, A.D. 983, 8th Shawwāl, A.H. 372, aged 47 lunar years. At his death the reigning Khalīf read the prayers at the funeral of this good and great man. His name is still fondly cherished in a country over which he godfavoured during the reign of his father and his own, being a space of 34 years, to diffuse prosperity and joy. His power and possessions became from the moment of his death a subject of contest between his brothers and nephews.

'Azd-uddin (Qazi) (عبد الدين قاضي), of Shirāz, author of several works, one of which is called the Mawāqif 'Azdia, a celebrated work in Arabic on Jurisprudence. He flourished in the time of Shāh Alū Is-hāq, governor of Shirāz, to whom he dedicated the above work. He died A.D. 1355, A.H. 766.

'Azid la din-allah-bin-Yusaf-bin-

Hafiz (عاضد لدين الله بن يوسف بن حافظ), the eleventh and last Khalīf of Egypt of the Fātimite dynasty, succeeded his father, Fāez-bi-na-r-allāh Isā bin-Zāfir, in the year A.D. 1158, A.H. 553. But the state of affairs in Egypt was now tottering to its fall. The descendants of 'Alī from the death of Al-Musta'li Billāh, A.D. 1101, had become puppets in the hands of their wazīr or Amīr-ul-Jayūsh (generalissimo), who wielded all the regal authority of the state: two Amīrs, Dargam and Shāwar, had contested in arms this high dignity; and the latter, defeated and expelled from Egypt, sought refuge and aid from Nūr-uddīn, styled Malik-ul-'Adil Nūr-uddīn Mahmūd, the celebrated ruler of Syria. The sovereign of Damascus eagerly embraced the opportunity of obtaining a footing in Egypt, and in A.D. 1163, A.H. 558, despatched a force under Asad-ud-dīn Shirakoh (the brother of Aiyūb) and his nephew Sālāh-uddīn to reinstate Shāwar, whose rival called in the Christians of Palestine to his support; but ere Amaury (the brother and successor of Baldwin III.) could enter Egypt, Dargam had been overpowered and slain by Shirakoh, who replaced Shāwar in his former power. But Shāwar, faithless alike to friend and foe, now entered into arrangements with the Franks in order to elude the fulfilment of his engagements with Nūr-uddīn; and Shirakoh, after maintaining himself for some time in Belbes against the joint forces of Jerusalem and Egypt, was compelled to enter into a convention with Amaury and evacuate the country. But he was soon recalled by Shāwar to deliver him from the vengeance of his new allies, to whom he had proved as perfidious as to those of his own faith; Cairo was closely besieged by the Franks, and the Fātimite Khalīf, 'Azid la-din-allah, sent the hair of his women, the extreme symbol of Oriental distress, to implore the succour of Nūr-uddīn (A.D. 1168). Shirakoh again entered Egypt with an army, forced Amaury to retreat, and after beheading the double traitor Shāwar, installed himself in the twofold office of wazīr to the Fātimite Khalīf and lieutenant of Egypt in the name of Nūr-uddīn; but dying the same year, was succeeded in his dignities by his famous nephew Sālāh-uddīn, who, after the death of Nūr-uddīn in May, A.D. 1173, Shawwāl, A.H. 569, became the sole master of Egypt and Syria. The Khalīf 'Azid died in A.D. 1171, A.H. 567, and the name of the Abbaside Khalīf Mustazī was substituted in the public prayers till the death of Nūr-uddīn.

'Azim (عظيم), the son of Mullā Qaidī, and a nephew of Mullā Nazīri, was a Persian poet of Nuishāpūr. He flourished about the year A.D. 1663, A.H. 1074, and is the author of a Dīwān, and a Masnawī called Fauz Azim.

'Azim Humayun Shirwani (اعظم هماون شرواني), a nobleman of the court of Sultān Sikandar Shāh Lōdī. He was imprisoned by Sultān Ibrāhīm and died in prison.

'Azim Jah (جاده اعظم), Nawāb of Arkat, died 14th January, 1874, aged 74. He was the second son of Azim Jah, one of the Nawābs of the Carnatic, and the uncle of the late Nawāb Ghulām Muḥammad Ghāus Khān. He received a pension of 2500 rupees from the Government.

'Azim Jah (Nawab) (اعظم جاده نواب), Sirāj-ul-Umrā, the son of Azīm-ul-daula, Nawāb of the Karnatic, was installed by the British Government as Nawāb on the 3rd February, 1820. He died on the 12th November, 1825, aged 34 years.

'Azim Khan (اعظم خان), or Khān

'Azim, an officer of state in the time of Humāyūn and Akbar, emperor of Dehli. He was commonly called Anka Khān, surnamed Shams-uddīn Muḥammad, and was the father of Mirzā Aziz Kōka, who also afterwards held the title of 'Azim Khān. He was a native of Ghazni, and formerly served under Prince Kānurān Mirzā. It is said that he saved the life of Humāyūn, or had been of some service to him after his defeat by Sher Shāh at Kanauj; for which service he was handsomely rewarded by that emperor after his having recovered the kingdom. He accompanied the emperor to Persia, and as his wife, Jijī Begam, became the wet-nurse of Akbar, the emperor's son, he was consequently called Atyak Khān. He was the first person that was honoured with the rank of "Haft Hazāri," or Seven Thousand, by Akbar. The office of Wakil Mutlaq, which was taken away from Māham Anka, was also conferred on him; on which account, Adham Khān Kokaltāsh (q.v.), the son of Māham Anka, took offence, and assassinated Khān 'Azim on Monday the 18th May, A.D. 1562, 12th Rāmzan, A.H. 969, in a room adjoining to that occupied by the emperor. Adham Khān was immediately bound hand and foot by order of the emperor, and thrown down headlong from a window of the court at Āgra, where this circumstance had taken place, and crushed to death. The remains of Khān 'Azim were sent to Dehli, and buried in the vicinity of the Dargāh of Nizām-uddīn Auliā, where a mausoleum was erected over his grave by his son Mirzā Aziz Kōka, which is still to be seen at Dehli. Māham Anka died with grief one month after the death of his son Adham Khān. The tomb of Adham Khān, who is also buried at Dehli, is called Bhāl Bhulān.

'Azim Khan (اعظم خان). The inhabitants of the town of Azimgarh, which is near Jaunpūr, say that the fortress and town of Azimgarh was founded by a person who belonged to the family of the Rājās of that place, and who was forced by the emperor Jahāngir to become a Muḥammadan, and received the title of Azim Khān.

'Azim Khan (اعظم خان) commonly called Mirzā Aziz Kōka or Kokaltāsh, was the son of 'Azim Khān or Khān 'Azim. He was called Kōka or Kokaltāsh on account of his being foster-brother and playmate of Akbar; for his mother, whose name was Jijī Begam, was Akbar's wet-nurse. He was one of the best generals of the emperor, who, in the 16th year of his reign, conferred on him the title of 'Azim Khān. He held the government of Gujrāt for several years together, and being absent from the presence for a long period, was summoned to court by Akbar in A.D. 1592, A.H. 1001, but as that chief had always entertained the wish to proceed on a pilgrimage to Mecca, and his friends representing to him that the king was displeased with him, and merely sought an opportunity to imprison him, he placed his family and treasure on board a vessel, and on the 13th March, O.S. 1594, 1st Rajab, A.H. 1002, set sail for Hejaz without leave or notice. In a short time, however, he found his situation irksome in that country, and returned to India, where he made his submission, and was restored at once to his former place in the emperor's favour and confidence. He died at Ahmadābād Gujrāt in the 19th year of the reign of Jahāngir, A.D. 1624, A.H. 1033. His remains were transported to Dehli and buried close to his father's mausoleum, where a splendid monument was erected over his tomb all of marble. It consists of sixty-four pillars, and is called by the people "Chāunsa'ih Khumbh."

'Azim Khan (اعظم خان), title of Mir

Muḥammad Bāqir, the brother of 'Asaf Khān Jāfar Beg. In the second year of the reign of the emperor Jahāngir, A.D. 1606, A.H. 1015, he was honoured with the mansab of 1000 and title of Irādāt Khān. In the first year of Shāh Jahān, A.D. 1628, A.H. 1037, the rank of 2000 was conferred on him with the office of Wizārat Kull; in the third year of his reign he received the title of 'Azim Khān. He was appointed at different times governor of Bengal, Allahābād, Gujrāt and latterly of Jaunpūr, where he died in A.D. 1649, A.H. 1059, aged 76 lunar years, and was buried there. After his death the title of 'Azim Khān was conferred on his eldest son, who was slain in the battle which took place between Dārā Shikoh and his brother Alamgir in A.D. 1658, A.H. 1068, at Agra. His second son, Mir Khalil, was honoured with the title of Khān Zaman. During the government of this emperor in A.D. 1634, the English obtained permission to trade with their ships in Bengal by the emperor Shāh Jahān, but were restricted to the port of Pipley, where they established their factory.

'Azim Khan (اعظم خان), ex-amir and a brother of Sher Ali Khān, Amir of Kabul, died at Shāh Rūd on the 6th October, 1869.

'Azim Khan Koka (اعظم خان کوه), the title of Muzaffar Husain, commonly known by the appellation of Fida'i Khān, a title conferred on him by the emperor Shāh Jahān. His elder brother held the title of Khān Jahān Bahādūr Kokaltash, and were both foster-brothers to the emperor Alamgir. Fida'i Khān was honoured with the title of 'Azim Khān by Alamgir about the year A.D. 1676, A.H. 1086, and appointed governor of Bengal in A.D. 1676, A.H. 1087, which situation he held for a whole year, and died on his way to Bihar on the 21st April, O.S. 1678, 9th Rabi I. A.H. 1089.

'Azim Nishapuri (اعظم نیشاپوری), author of a Diwān found in the Library of Tipū Sulṭān.

'Azim-ud-daula (Nawab) (عظم الیدولہ), of the Carnatic, was the son of Nawāb Amīr-ul-Umrā, the brother of Undat-ul-Umrā. On the death of Undat-ul-Umrā, the English resolved to take the functions of government into their own hands. 'Alī Husain, the next heir, refused to comply, consequently 'Azim-ud-daula, the nephew of the deceased, was placed on the musnad by the British Government on the 31st August, A.D. 1801. He died on the 2nd August, A.D. 1819. His son 'Azīm Jāh was installed as Nawāb of the Carnatic on the 3rd February, A.D. 1820.

'Azim-ul-Umrā (عظیم الامرا), minister of the Nizām of Hydarābād. He succeeded Rukn-ud-daula about the year A.D. 1794.

'Azim-ullah Khan (عظیم الله خان), says Mr. Sheppard in his Narrative of the Mutiny, was a charity boy, having been picked up, together with his mother, during the famine of 1837-1838, when they were both in a dying state from starvation. The mother being a staunch heathen, she would not consent to her son being christened. He was adopted in the Cawnpore Free School under Mr. Patan, schoolmaster. After ten years he was raised to be a teacher. After some years he attached himself to the Nāna, who sent him to England for the purpose of bringing his case before the Home Government. He became a favourite in English society, and visited the camp before Sevastopol, returning to India in 1856. He intrigued with Dehli, and persuaded the Nāna to join the mutinous Sepoys in 1857. He is believed to have instigated the Cawnpore massacre. He died on the re-occupation of the place, and his further fate is unknown.

'Azimush Shan (اعظیم انشان), second son of the emperor Bahādūr Shāh of Dehli. He was appointed by his grandfather, the emperor 'Alamgir, governor of Bengal; he made Patna the seat of his government and named it Azimābād. On the news of his grandfather's death, leaving his own son Farrukhsiar (afterwards emperor) to superintend the affairs of that country, he came to Agra, and was present in the battle which took place between his father and his uncle 'Azam Shāh, in June, A.D. 1707, A.H. 1119. He was slain in the battle which ensued after his father's death between Jahāndār Shāh and his other brothers, in the month of February, O.S. 1712, Muharram, A.H. 1124. His second son, Muhammad Karīm, was taken prisoner after the battle and murdered by order of Jahāndār Shāh, who ascended the throne.

'Aziz (عزیز), whose proper name was Abdūl Aziz Khān, was a native of Deccan. He is the author of a Diwān, also of a prose composition called Gulshān Rang.

'Aziz Koka (Mirza) (عزیز کوه مرزا), the foster-brother of the emperor Akbar. Fide 'Azam Khān, the son of Khān 'Azim, commonly called Anka Khān.

'Aziz-ullah Zahidi (عزیز الله زاهدی), author of a Masnawī, which he composed in the year A.D. 1107, A.H. 810. He is commonly called Aziz.

'Azmat-ullah (Shah) (الله شاه), author of the Mazhar-ul-Asrār, being a long dissertation on the nature of the divinity, the soul, and other abstruse subjects on Sūfism.

'Azra (عذرا), name of the celebrated mistress of Wāmiq.

Azraqi (ازرقی حکیم), commonly called

Hakīm Arzaqī or Azraqī, was a physician and a poet. He was a native of Mārs, and flourished in the reign of Tughral III. Saljūki, king of Persia, in whose name he wrote several books. Arzaqī died in A.D. 1189, A.H. 585. His Diwān contains nearly 2000 verses. He is also said to be the author of a work called Kutāb Sindbād. His proper name is Abū'l Mahāsīn Abū Bakr Zayn-ud-dīn, son of Isma'il Warrāq. He introduced himself into the society and confidence of the Saljūki prince Tughlān Shāh I. the seat of whose government was Naishapūr, by the composition of a most obscene book, which he called Alfa Shalḥa, illustrated with pictures. This book appears to be a version of the Kōk Shāshṭar. He is called Azraqī in the Jour. As. Soc. of Bengal for 1844, vol. xiii. part ii. p. 520, and stated to be the author of a history of Mecca, of which ancient work several MSS. are in Europe, especially one at Cambridge, formerly the property of Dr. Burckhardt, who in the preface to his Travels in Arabia professes to have largely made use of it.

Azur (آذر), the poetical name of Lutf

'Alī Beg, author of the Tazkira called Ataishkade Azur. He was engaged in the compilation of this work in A.D. 1765, A.H. 1179, and was alive in A.D. 1782, A.H. 1196. He never came to India.

Azuri Razi (آذری رازی), a native of Rei in Persia, was a celebrated poet who lived at the court of Sulṭān Mahmūd of Ghazni. On one occasion he received a present of 14,000 dirhams from the Sulṭān for a short panegyric.

Azuri (Shaikh) (آذری شایخ), Isfarānī, whose original name was Jalāl-uddīn Hamza, was a pious Musalmān and an excellent poet. He came to the Deccan from Persia in the reign of Sulṭān Ahmad Shāh Walī Bahmani, A.D. 1432, A.H. 835, and returned again to Khurāsān, his native country, where he died in the year A.D. 1462, A.D. 866, aged 82 lunar years. He is the author of several works, among which are Jawāhir-ul-Asvār, Tighrāe Humāyūn, and Samrāt Fruits, which consists of four books, viz., Almakri Tāma, Ajāeb-ud-dunia, Ajāeb-ul-'Ala and Sa'i-us-Safā. He also left a Diwān of 30,000 verses. He adopted the poetical name of 'Azuri, because he was born in the Persian month of Azur. His tomb is at Isfarān, and was at the time of Daulat Shāh so sacred, that convicts found an asylum there from the hands of justice. He is also the author of another poetical work, called Bahman Nāma.

'Azz-uddin Abdul Aziz (عز الدین عابد), 'Azz-uddin (العزیز).

Baba (بابا), a Turkish impostor, who announced himself in A.D. 1260 as the messenger of God; and collected a number of adherents, at whose head he laid waste Anatolia. He was at last overpowered and his sect dispersed.

Baba Afzal Kashi (بابا افضل کاشی), an author.

Bābā Fighanī (بابا فغانی), a poet of Persia who served under Sultān Yaqūb, the son of Uzzan Hasan, and died in the year A.D. 1519, A.H. 925, at Khurasān. He has left a Diwār containing 6000 verses.

Baba 'Isa (بابا عیسی), or 'Isa Langotesland. His tomb is in Tatta in Sindh. The inscription gives the year A.D. 1514, A.H. 920.

Babak (بابک), the father of Ardsher Bābūkān, which see.

Babak (بابک), an impostor, who first appeared in A.D. 816, A.H. 201, when he began to take upon him the title of a prophet. What his particular doctrine was, is now unknown; but his religion is said to have differed from all others then known in Asia. He gained a great number of proselytes in 'Azarbaijān and Persian 'Irāq, where he soon grew powerful enough to wage war with the khalif Al-Mutamīn, whose troops he often beat, so that he was become extremely formidable in the beginning of the khalif Al-Mutta'sim's reign. The general sent by the khalif to reduce him was Haidaribn-Kāūs, surnamed Afshīn (q.v.), a Turk by birth. By him Bābak was defeated with prodigious slaughter, no fewer than 60,000 men being killed in the first engagement. The next year, A.D. 835, A.H. 220, he received a still greater overthrow, losing 100,000 men either killed or taken prisoners. By this defeat he was obliged to retire into the Gordian mountains, where he fortified himself in such a manner that Afshīn found it impossible to reduce him till the year A.D. 837, A.H. 222, when he was forced to surrender to Afshīn upon that general promising him pardon. But Afshīn no sooner had him in his power, than he first caused his hands and feet, and afterwards his head to be cut off. Bābak had supported himself against the power of the khalifs for upwards of 20 years, during which time he had cruelly massacred 250,000 people, it being his custom to spare neither man, woman, nor child of the Muhammadans or their allies.

Baba Kaikhusiz (بابا کیخوسز) (Father without Anxiety), a dervish who flourished in the reign of Murād III. and was author of the 'Abdullah-Nāma.'

Baba Lal Guru (بابا لال گورو), a Hindū of the tribe of Khattris, who was a Hindi poet, and flourished in the time of Jahāngir. He was an inhabitant of Mālwa.

Baba Ratan (بابا رتن ابو رضا), surnamed Abū Razā, a pious Musalmān, who is said, by Daulat Shāh, to be one of the disciples of Jesus Christ, and that he lived to the advanced age of 1400 years, and died about the beginning of the 13th century of the Christian era.

Babar Shah (بابر شاه ظہیر الدین محمد), surnamed Zuhīr-ud-dīn Muhammad, the ancestor of the Mughal emperors of Dehli, was the sixth in descent from Amīr Taimūr (Tamerlane). His father 'Umar Shaikh Mirzā, was the son of Abū Sa'īd Mirzā, the son of Muhammad Mirzā, the son of Mirānshāh, the son of Amīr Taimūr. His mother's name was Kutlagh Nigār Khānum, daughter of Yūnas Khān, king of Mughalistan and sister to Mahmūd Khān, a descendant of the famous Chengez or Jenghiz Khān. He was born on the 15th February, A.D. 1483, 6th Muharram, A.H. 888, and succeeded his father in the government of Farghāna, the capital of which is Andjān, in June, A.D. 1494, Ramazān, A.H. 899. During eleven years he fought several battles with the Tartar and Uzbek princes, but was at last obliged to leave his country and fly towards Kābul, which place he conquered, without opposition, together with Qandahār and Badakhshān. He reigned for 22 years over those countries before his conquest of India. He then proceeded to Hindūstān, slew Ibrahim Husain Lodi, the Pathār king of Dehli, in a battle at Pānīpat on Friday the 20th April, A.D. 1526, 7th Rajab, A.H. 932, and became the founder of the Mughal dynasty of India, which ended in 1857. Babar wrote his own life—Tuzak-

i-Bābari—in the Turkish language, with such elegance and truth, that the performance is universally admired. It was translated in the reign of his grandson Akbar, by Abdūl Rahīm Khān Khānkānān into Persian, and recently into English from the Jughatai Turkī, by Dr. Leyden and Mr. W. Erskine. This monarch ascended the throne in his 12th year, and reigned 38 lunar years, viz.: at And-jān 11 years, at Kābul 22, and nearly 5 years in India, and died in Āgra on Monday the 26th December, A.D. 1530, 6th Jamād I. A.H. 937. He was at first buried in a garden on the left bank of the Jamna, then called the Nūr Afshān, and now Rāmāgh, from which place his remains were transported after six months to Kābul, where a splendid mausoleum was built over his tomb by his great-great-grandson, the emperor Shāh Jahān, in A.D. 1646. His tomb on a hill near the city, surrounded by large beds of flowers, commands a noble prospect. The chronogram of the year of his death was found to consist in the words "Bahisht-rozibād," or "May heaven be his lot." After his death, he received the title of "Firdaus-Makānī." He was succeeded on the throne of Dehli by his eldest son, the emperor Humāyūn. His three other sons were Mirzā Kāmrān, Mirzā 'Askari, and Mirzā Hādād. Firishṭā says that Bābar, who was much addicted to women and wine, on occasions when he was inclined to make merry, used to fill a reservoir in a garden in the neighbourhood of Kābul with wine, over which was inscribed a verse to this purpose :

Bright Spring blooms here, from day to day,
Young girls stand by, old wine to pour;
Enjoy them, Bābar, while you may—
Your Spring, once gone, returns no more.

Babar (Sultan) (بابر سلطان), surname Abūl Qāsim, was the son of Mirzā Baisanghar and grandson of Shāhrukh Mirzā. After the death of Mirzā Ulugh Beg and his son 'Abdūl Latīf, he succeeded in January, A.D. 1452, Zil-hijja, A.H. 855, in murdering his own brother Sultān Muhammad and establishing himself in the government of Khurāsān and the neighbouring countries. A few months before his death, the comet of A.D. 1456, A.H. 860, made its appearance and alarmed the inhabitants of Khurāsān. He died at Mashhad on Tuesday the 22nd March, A.D. 1457, 25th Rabi II. A.H. 861. After his death Khurāsān was taken possession of by Mirzā Abū Sa'īd, the grandfather of the emperor Bābar Shāh of Dehli.

Badī'-Uzzaman Mirza (بدیع الزمان میرزا) was the eldest son of Sultān Husain Mirzā, after whose death in A.D. 1506, A.H. 912, he reigned conjointly with his younger brother, Muzaffar Husain Mirzā, over Khurāsān. He was subsequently compelled by the victorious Uzbaks, and the usurpation of his brother, to take refuge in Irāq; and in the year A.D. 1514, A.H. 920, went to the court of the Ottoman Sultān, Salīm I. where, after a few months' residence, he died of the plague. He was the last of the race of Taimūr who reigned in Persia. In a work called Ship of the Time, a Persian Anthology, there are to be found verses of the royal poet's composition. The following is a translation of a few lines—

Since not for me thy cheek of roses shines,
My bosom like the fading tulip pines;
Who in his burning heart conceals its flame,
And mine, in absence, perishes the same.
Pour wine—and let me, as I drink, suppose
I see the colours of that blushing rose;
Pour wine—and let it borrow every hue
Born in the tulip's petals wet with dew;
Till I believe thou may'st e'en yet be mine—
And let me never wake, nor that sweet dream resign.

Bahadur Ali Husaini (Mir) (بهادر علی حسینی میر), chief Munshī of the college of Fort William, author of the Aḥiq Hindī, or Indian Ethics, translated from a Persian version, also of the Nasir Ibtasir, a prose translation of the enchanting fairy tale entitled Sehr-ul-Bayān, commonly called Mir Hasan's Masnawī. This latter work was written by the request of Dr. Gilchrist in A.D. 1802, A.H. 1217, and published at Calcutta in 1803.

Bahadur Khan Faruqi (بهادر خان فاروقی), succeeded his father, Rājā

Alī Khān, in the government of Khāndesh in A.D. 1596, A.H. 1005. When the emperor Akbar a few years afterwards arrived at Māndo, with the avowed intention of invading the Deccan, Bahādur Khān instead of adopting the policy of his father in relying on the honour of Akbar, and going with an army to co-operate with him, shut himself up in the fort of Asīr, and commenced preparations to withstand a siege. When Akbar heard of these proceedings he sent orders to the Khānkhānān 'Abdur Rahīm Khān and the prince Dāniāl Mirzā to continue the siege of Ahmadnagar, while he himself marched to the south and occupied Burhānpūr, leaving one of his generals to besiege Asīr. The blockade of this fortress continued for a length of time, till it surrendered, and Bahādur Khān, the last of the Farūqī dynasty, humbled himself before the throne of Akbar in the year A.D. 1599, A.H. 1008, while the impregnable fortress of Asīr with ten years' provisions and countless treasures fell into the hands of the conqueror.

Bahadur Khan Rohila (بهادر خان روهيله), son of Dariā Khān, was an amir of high rank in the reign of the emperor Shah Jahān. He accompanied prince Aurang-zib to Qandahār, and died there during the siege, on the 19th July, A.D. 1649, 19th Rajab, A.H. 1059.

Bahadur Nizam Shah (بهادر نظام شاه), the last of the Nizām Shāhī kings of Ahmadnagar in the Deccan. On the death of his father, Ibrahim Nizām Shāh, which took place in August, A.D. 1695, Zil-hijja, A.H. 1003, several factions arose in Ahmadnagar, each setting up a nominal sovereign. Miān Manjū who possessed the city, and acknowledged the title of Bahādur Nizām Shāh, then an infant, being besieged by his competitors, invited Sulṭān Murād, son of the emperor Akbar, then governor of Gujrāt, to his assistance, for which he offered to become tributary to the Mughal power. Sulṭān Murād embraced the proposal, and arrived before Ahmadnagar with a considerable army. Miān Manjū by this time, having overcome his rivals, repented of his offers, and prepared to oppose the prince. Having committed the city to the charge of Naṣir Khān, his deputy, under the care of Chānd Bibī, great aunt to Sulṭān Bahādur, he departed to raise levies and implore the assistance of Qutb Shāh of Gōlkanda and 'Adil Shāh of Bijāpūr. Sulṭān Murād besieged Ahmadnagar, on the 16th December, o.s. 1595, 23rd Rabi II. A.H. 1004, which was gallantly defended. Breaches were made, but were immediately repaired by the heroic conduct of Chānd Bibī, who, covering herself with a veil, headed the troops. At length in the month of March, A.D. 1596, Rajab, A.H. 1004, supplies growing scarce in the camp, and the allies of Bijāpūr and Gōlkanda approaching, Sulṭān Murād thought proper to accept of some offers of tribute from Chānd Bibī, and raise the siege. Some money was paid, and the districts in Berar belonging to the Nizām Shāhī government were ceded to the Mughals. In the year A.D. 1600, beginning of A.H. 1009, Ahmadnagar was taken by the Mughals, and Bahādur Shāh with all the children of both sexes of the royal family were taken prisoners and sent to perpetual confinement in the fortress of Gwalior.

Bahadur Shah (بهادر شاه افغان), an Afghān, succeeded his father, Mahmūd Khān, as governor of Bengal in the time of Sulim Shāh, and became independent and reigned five years. He was deposed in A.D. 1649, A.H. 956, and succeeded by another of the nobles of Sulim Shāh, named Sulaimān Qirānī.

Bahadur Shah (بهادر شاه بن مظفر شاه گجراتی), the second son of Muzaffar Shāh II. of Gujrāt. At the time of his father's death, he was absent at Jaunpūr, but when Mahmūd Shāh, his younger brother, ascended the throne of Gujrāt, after the murder of his eldest brother, Sikandar Shāh, Bahādur returned from thence, and having deprived Mahmūd of his kingdom, ascended the throne on the 20th August, A.D. 1626, 15th Zi-Qa'da, A.H. 932. He conquered Mālwa on the 26th February, A.D. 1631, 9th Shabān, A.H. 937, and the king of that place, Sulṭān Mahmūd II. who was taken prisoner and sent to Champanir, was put to death on the road. In the year A.D. 1636, A.H. 942, Mālwa was taken by the emperor Humāyūn, and Bahādur being defeated was obliged to fly towards Cambay, where, on his arrival, he heard that a fleet, in which there were between 4,000 or 5,000 Europeans, had arrived off the Island of Diu. He immediately repaired thither with a reinforcement of troops, and on his arrival there he ordered his burge and went to visit the admiral with the intention of killing him; but perceiving that he was betrayed he arose and was attacked on all sides by the Portuguese, when a soldier struck him over the head with a sword and threw him into the water, where he was drowned. This event took place on the 14th February, A.D. 1537, 3rd Ramazān, A.H. 943, and has been commemorated in two Persian chronograms, comprising the numerals which form the date of the year when it occurred. Their meaning is this: "The Europeans were the slayers of Bahādur," and "The king of the land became a martyr at Sen." Bahādur Shāh was 20 years of age when he ascended the throne, reigned 11 lunar years, and was slain at the age of 31. After his death his nephew Mirān Muhammad Shāh was raised to the throne of Gujrāt.

Bahādur Shah I. (بہادر شاہ قطب)

(انڈین شاہ عالم), surnamed Qutb-uddin Shāh 'Alamī, formerly called prince Mu'azzim, was the second son of the emperor 'Alamgir I. born at Burhānpūr in the Deccan on the 4th October, o.s. 1643, 30th Rajab, A.H. 1033. At the time of his father's death, which took place at Ahmadābād, on the 21st February, o.s. 1707, 28th Zi-Qada, A.H. 1118, he being then at Kābul, his younger brother, prince 'Azim, was proclaimed sovereign of all India in perfect disregard of the late emperor's will. Prince Mu'azzim, with better reason, assumed the crown at Kābul with the title of Bahādur Shāh; and both brothers prepared to assert their pretensions by force of arms. They assembled very large armies, and met at length between Dhaulpur and Agra. A bloody battle ensued on Sunday the 8th June, o.s. 1707, 18th Rabi' I. A.H. 1119, in which prince 'Azim and his two grown-up sons, Badār Bakht and Walājah, were killed. Bahādur Shāh reigned nearly five lunar years, and died at Lahore on Monday the 18th February, o.s. 1712, 21st Muharram, A.H. 1124, in the 71st lunar year of his age. He was buried in the environs of Delhi, near the tomb of Khwaja Qutb-uddin, where he had built during his life a mosque entirely of white marble named Moti Masjid. His tomb is also built of the same stone. He received the title of "Khud Manzil," i.e., "May his mansion be in paradise," after his death. He left four sons, viz., Ma'iz-uddin Jahāndār Shāh, Azim-ush-Shān, Rafi-ush-Shān, and Jahān Shāh, among whom a battle ensued, wherein the three latter brothers were killed, and Jahāndār Shāh ascended the throne.

Bahādur Shah II. (بہادر شاہ اول مظفر)

(سراج الدین محمد), the last king of Delhi, whose title in full was Abū'l Muzaffar Sirāj-uddin Muhammad Bahādur Shāh, a lineal descendant from Amīr Taimūr, the son of Akbar Shāh II. on whose death he succeeded him on the 28th September, A.D. 1837, 28th Jumāda II. A.H. 1253. He was born on Tuesday the 24th October, A.D. 1775, 28th Shabān, A.H. 1189; and Abū'l Muzaffar is the chronogram of his birth. His mother's name was Lal Bāi. A stipend of pension of one lakh of rupees monthly was allowed him by the British Government. He was an excellent Persian scholar and an elegant Urdu poet, and Zafar was his poetical name. His Diwān or Book of Odes was printed some years ago at Delhi. He was supposed to be the principal instigator of the mutiny of the native troops throughout India in A.D. 1857, and was deposed and tried, but his life was spared. In October, A.D. 1858, he was sent down to Calcutta, from which place he embarked on board H.M. ship Megara on Saturday the 4th December, A.D. 1858, for Rangoon, accompanied by two of his wives, a son and a grandson. He died there a few years later, and thus ended the royal race of Taimūr in India. His sons Mirzā Mughal and Mirzā Khwaja Sultān, and a grandson named Mirzā 'Abū Bakr, who were known to have taken a prominent part in the atrocities attending the insurrection, were captured on the 22nd September, A.D. 1857, at the tomb of Humayun, and shot on the spot by Major Hodson. During the mutiny in A.D. 1857, Bahādur Shāh had struck a new coin with the following inscription:—

بزرزد سکہ نصرت طرازی
سراج الدین بہادر شاہ غازی

Sirāj-ud-din, that hero bold,
Adorned his triumph with this gold.

Bahādur Singh (بہادر سنگہ), the only surviving son of Rājā Mān Singh Kachwaha.

Bahādur Singh Kuchwaha (بہادر سنگہ کچواہ), brother to Sakat Singh, died of hard drinking in the year A.D. 1621, A.H. 1030.

Bahādur Singh (Rao). Vide Rāo Bahādur Singh.

Bahai (بہائی). Vide Bahā-uddin 'Amili.

Bahar (بہار), poetical name of Tek Chand, which see.

Bahar Bano (بہار بانو), Daulat-un Nisa, and Begam Sultān, daughters of the emperor Jahangir. All of them died in their childhood.

Bahar Bano (بهار بانو), daughter of the emperor Jahāngīr; married to Prince Tahnūras, the son of Prince Dāniāl, in their childhood.

Bahar Bano Begam (بهار بانو بیگم), another daughter of Jahāngīr, was married to Tahnūr, a son of prince Dāniāl.

Baha-uddin (بهاء الدین), a learned Arabian, known as a favourite of Sultān Salāh-uddin (Saladdin) and the historian of that prince's life. He flourished about the year A.D. 1190, A.H. 586. An edition of his work appeared at Leyden in A.D. 1755.

Baha-uddin (بهاء الدین بن شمس الدین), the son of Shams-uddin, the son of Fakhr-uddin. His father was the first king of the second branch of the Sultāns of Ghūr. Baha-uddin was the second king, and is said to have reigned 14 years. Imām Fakhr-uddin Rāzī, who flourished in his time and died in A.D. 1210, A.H. 606, dedicated the work called Risāla Haqqat or book of geometry to him. After the death of Baha-uddin, his son Jalāl-uddin succeeded him. He was slain by Sultān Muhammad of Khwārizm, and appears to have been the last of this branch.

Baha-uddin (بهاء الدین حاکم اصفهان), governor of Isfahān, and author of the Mintakhab-ul-Akbar, an abridged history of the patriarchs and prophets, also of Muhammad and his descendants, with a good description of the cities of Mecca and Medina. He flourished about the year A.D. 1271, A.H. 670.

Baha-uddin 'Amili (Shaiikh) (بهاء الدین عاملی شیخ), a native of 'Amul in Persia, and son of Shaiikh Husain. His poetical name is Bahāi. He is the author of several works, one of which is a Masnawī or poem called Nān-wa-Halwā (bread and pudding). He flourished in the time of Shāh 'Abbās the Great, king of Persia; died at Isfahān on Tuesday the 21st August, o.s. 1621, 12th Shawwāl, A.H. 1030, and was buried agreeably to his request at Mashhad. Imād-ud-daula Abū Tālib, the prime minister of Shāh 'Abbās, found the chronogram of the year of his death in the words "Shaiikh Bahā-uddin Wāc." Besides the above-mentioned Masnawī and many Arabic works, he has left a Diwān and a Kashkōl, or Advarsaria.

Baha-uddin Muhammad (بهاء الدین محمد جلیل شیخ), Jalal or Jalil (Shaiikh) of 'Amil. This person is mentioned by H. M. Elliot, Esq., in his Historians of India, and appears to be the same with the preceding. He was a Persian mathematician, says he, and lived in the reign of Shāh 'Abbās the Great. He was celebrated among his countrymen for a supposed peculiar power which he possessed over the Imagi and writers of talismans, and was one of the most pious devotees of his time. His works on various subjects are much read in Persia, particularly one entitled Kashkōl, or the Beggar's Wallet, being an universal miscellany of literature. The Jāma'-ul-Abbāsi, a concise and comprehensive treatise on Shia law in twenty books, is generally considered as the work of Bahā-uddin Muhammad 'Amili, but that lawyer only lived to complete the first five books, dedicating his work to Shāh 'Abbās. The remaining fifteen books were subsequently added by Nizām Ibn-Husain al-Sawāi.

Baha-uddin Naqshband (Khwaja) (بهاء الدین نقشبند خواجه), a famous learned Musalmān, who died on Monday the 1st March, A.D. 1389, 2nd Rabi I. A.H. 791, and was buried at Bukhara.

Baha-uddin Naqshband (Shaiikh) (بهاء الدین نقشبند شیخ), a celebrated saint and the founder of an Order of Sūfis, distinguished by the title of Naqshbandi. He is the author of the Haqq Nama, an esteemed moral poem. He died at Harafa in Persia, A.D. 1453, A.H. 857. He appears also to be the author of a work on Sūlism called Imtil-ul-Ashghin.

Baha-uddin Sam (بهاء الدین سام), son of Ghayās-uddin Mahmūd, king of Ghūr and Ghazni. He succeeded his father in A.D. 1210, A.H. 607, at the age of fourteen years, but was, after three months, defeated by Alā-uddin Atsiz, son of Jahañ Sūz, who reigned four years in Ghūr and Ghazni, and fell in battle against Taj-uddin Elduz in A.D. 1214. Bahā-uddin Sām was, after his defeat, taken captive by the governor of Hirāt, and sent to Khwārizm Shāh, who at the time of the invasion of Chingiz Khān, threw him, along with his brother, into a river, where both were drowned.

Baha-uddin Shirazi (بهاء الدین شیرازی), a celebrated Kāzī of Shirāz, who died in the year A.D. 1380, A.H. 782.

Baha-uddin Wald (Maulana) (بهاء الدین ولد مولانا), a native of Balkh and the father of the celebrated Jalāl-uddin Maulawī Rūmī. He flourished and enjoyed distinguished honours in the time of Sultān Muhammad, surnamed Qutb-uddin of Khwārizm. He was an enthusiastic follower of the doctrine of the Sūfia, and became so celebrated as a preacher and expounder that people flocked from all parts of Persia to hear him discourse. In the latter part of his life he left his native country and went and dwelt at Qonia (Iconium) in Asiatic Turkey, where he died about the year A.D. 1230 or 1233, A.H. 628 or 631, and his son succeeded him as the head of the sect.

Baha-uddin Zikaria (Shaikh) (بہا الدین زکریا شیعخ) a Muhammadan saint of Multān, was the son of Quth-uddin Muhammad, the son of Kamāl-uddin Qureshī. He was born at Kōkhar in Multān in A.D. 1170, A.H. 565. After his studies he journeyed to Baghdād and became a disciple of Shaikh Shahāb-uddin Suharwardī. He afterwards returned to Multān, where he became intimate with Farīd-uddin Shukarganj. He died at Multān on the 7th November, A.D. 1266, 7th Safar, A.H. 665, aged 100 lunar years, and is still considered one of the most revered saints of India. He left enormous wealth to his heirs. His son Shaikh Sadr-uddin died at Multān in A.D. 1309, A.H. 709.

Baha-uddin (بہا الدین) (Badī-uddin or Bogo-neddin, a Muhammadan saint whose tomb is in the neighbourhood of Bukhāra, called Mazārī Bogo-neddin. During the invasion of the Russians at that place, it is said that a book, written in verse in the Persian language, was found in the tomb of this saint. It is said in this book that in the 82nd year of the Hīrah, A.D. 1865, the Christians will rush upon Tashkend like a river. In the 84th year, A.D. 1867, they will occupy Samarkand, and sweep it away like a prickly thorn. In the 88th year, A.D. 1871, the Christians will take Bukhāra, and convert it into a level like the steppe. In the year 90th but one, A.D. 1872, the Khwārizmians will run out of their own accord to meet them like children.

Bahishti (بہشتی), poetical name of Shaikh Ranzān, the son of 'Abdul Muhsin, an author, who died A.D. 1571, A.H. 979.

Bahjat (بہجت), or Bēhjat, author of a Diwān which contains chiefly Ghazals, and at the end a very silly Qasida in praise of Europeans. He was living in Lucknow in A.D. 1797, A.H. 1212.

Bahlol (بہلول), who lived during the reign of the Khalīf Hārūn-al-Rashīd, was one of those people who pass amongst the Muslims either for saints or madmen. Although surnamed Al-Majnūn, or the Fool, he was possessed of a great deal of wit.

Bahloli (بہلولی), a poet, whose Diwān was found in the Library of Tipū Sulṭān.

Bahlol Lodi (Sultan) (بہلول لودی)

(سلطان), a king of Dehlī of the tribe of Afghāns called Lōdī. His father, Mālik

Kālā, was the son of Ibrāhīm Khān or Mālik Bahrām, governor of Multān. In the year A.D. 1450, A.H. 854, Bahlōl, during the absence at Badāon of Sulṭān Alā-uddin, son of Muhammad Shāh, took possession of Dehlī. He, however, gave place to the name of the Sulṭān for some time in the khutba; but when that prince promised to give to him the empire, upon condition that he would permit him to live quietly in the possession of Badāon, Sulṭān Bahlōl immediately threw the name of 'Alā-uddin out of the khutba and caused himself to be crowned on the 18th January, A.D. 1452, 25th Zil-hijja, A.H. 855. Bahlōl reigned 38 lunar years, 7 months and 7 days, and died on the 1st July, A.D. 1489, 2nd Sha'bān, A.H. 894. He is buried at Dehlī near the tomb of Nasir-uddin Mahmūd, surnamed Chirāgh Dehlī, a Muslim saint, and was succeeded by his son Nizām Khān, who assumed the title of Sikandar Shāh.

The following is a list of the kings of Dehlī of the tribe of Lodi Afghāns:

Bahlōl Lōdī.

Sikandar Shāh, son of Bahlōl.

Ibrāhīm Husain, son of Sikandar, who was the last of this race, and was defeated and slain by Bābar Shāh.

Bahman (بہمن), an ancient king of Persia, better known in history by his title of Ardāshir Darāzdest, which see.

Bahmani, name of a dynasty in the Deccan, founded by an Afghān adventurer, 'Ala-ud-din Hasan Gāngū, (q.v.), A.D. 1347, A.H. 748.

Bahman Yar Khan (بہمن یار خان), son of Shāista Khān and grandson of Āsaf Khān, a nobleman of the court of the emperor 'Alangīr.

Bahram I. (بہرام) (Varanes of the Greeks), the fourth king of the Sasānian race, was the son of Hormuz (Hormisdas), whom he succeeded to the Persian throne in the year A.D. 273. He was a mild and munificent prince, and much beloved by his subjects. The most remarkable act of his reign was the execution of the celebrated Mānī (Manes), the founder of the sect of the Manichæans.

[Vide Mānī. Bahrām reigned only three years and three months, after which he died and left the crown to his son Bahrām II. about the year A.D. 276.]

term him the fourth of that name), was the son of Bahrām I. whom he succeeded to the crown of Persia in A.D. 276. He reigned 17 years, and after his demise was succeeded by his son Bahrām III. about the year A.D. 293.

Bahram III. (بهرام) succeeded his father, Bahram II. to the Persian throne about the year A.D. 293, reigned only four months, and was succeeded by his brother, Narsi or Narses.

Bahram IV. (بهرام), the twelfth king of Persia of the Sasānian race, succeeded his brother Shāhpūr (Sapores) (q.v.) about the year A.D. 390, and is distinguished from other princes of the same name by his title of Kirmān-shāh, which he received from having, during the reign of his brother, filled the station of ruler of the province of Kirmān; and he has perpetuated it by founding the city of Kirmān-shāh. He reigned, according to some accounts, eleven years; and to others fifteen. He was killed by an arrow when endeavouring to quell a tumult in his army, and was succeeded by Yazdijard I. who is called Isdigerdes by the Greek authors.

Bahram V. (بهرام) (or Varanes V.), the fourteenth king of Persia of the Sasānian dynasty, who is known, in Persian history, by the name of Bahram Gōr. He was the son of Yazdijard I. whom he succeeded to the throne of Persia in A.D. 420. The word Gōr signifies a wild ass: an animal to the chase of which this monarch was devoted; and it was in pursuit of one of these that he lost his life; having suddenly come upon a deep pool, into which his horse plunged, and neither the animal nor his royal rider were ever seen again. The first rhythmical composition in the Persian language is recorded to have been the production of Bahram and his mistress Dilārām. Bahram visited India, was contemporary with Theodosius the emperor of Constantinople, and ruled Persia eighteen years. He died in A.D. 438, and was succeeded by his son Yazdijard II.

Bahram (بهرام), an author who wrote the History of the Persis of Bombay in A.D. 1599, entitled Qissai Surjān.

Bahram Chobin (بهرام چوبین), or Jovian, a general of Hormuz III. king of Persia, whom he deposed; he reigned eight months, about the year A.D. 590.
[Vide Hormuz III.]

Bahram Mirza (بهرام مرزا), son of Shāh Sam'āl Safawī. He was a good poet and died in the prime of youth in A.D. 1650, A.H. 957.

Bahram Saqqa (بهرام سقّه), a poet, was of Turkish extraction and belonged to the Bayāt tribe. It is said that the prophet Khizr appeared to him, and a divine light filled him. He renounced the world and became a water-carrier.

[Vide Ain Translation, i. p. 581.]

Bahram Sarakhsi (بهرام سرخسی), a Prosodian of Sarakhs, a town between Naishāpūr and Marv.

Bahram Shah (بهرام شاه), son of Sultān Mas'ūd III. ascended the throne of Ghazni by the assistance of Sultān Sanjar his uncle, after his brother Arsalān Shāh, who was put to death in A.D. 1118, A.H. 512. Bahram Shāh, after a prosperous reign of 35 lunar years, was deposed in A.D. 1152, A.H. 547, by 'Alā-uddin Hasan Ghōri, and fled to Lāhore, where he died the same year, and his son Khusrō Shāh succeeded him in the government of Lāhore. The poets Shaikh Sa'nāi and Abū'l Majd-bin-'Adam-al-Ghaznawī flourished in the time of Bahram Shāh.

Bahram Shah (بهرام شاه), surnamed Ma'iz-uddin, was the son of Sultān Rukn-uddin Firōz. He was raised to the throne of Delhi after the murder of Sultāna Razia the queen, on Monday the 21st April, A.D. 1240. He reigned little more than two years, and was slain by the instigation of Mahzab-uddin wazīr, about the 15th May, A.D. 1242, when Sultān 'Alā-uddin Mas'ūd, another son of Sultān Altīmish, was raised to the throne. Firishṭa erroneously says that Bahram was the son of Altīmish and brother of Sultāna Razia.

Bahramand Khan (بهرامند خان), son of Mirzā Bahram, and one of the emperor 'Alamgir's oldest nobility and his friend. After the death of Rūh-ullāh-Khān; he was raised to the post of Mir Bakshī or chief paymaster by the emperor in A.D. 1692, A.H. 1103, and died in the Decan on the 17th October, O.S. 1702, 5th Junāda II. A.H. 1114. He was buried at his own request in a small tomb at Bahādurgūb. He was succeeded in his office by Zulfikār Khān Nasrat Jang, who notwithstanding this appointment continued in the command of the army against the Marhattas in the Decan.

Bahr-ul Hifz (بحر الحفظ), (or the Sea of Memory,) is the title of Abū Usmān-bin-'Amrū, who wrote a book on the manners and qualities of princes. He died A.D. 869, A.H. 255.

Bahu Begam (بہو بیگم), the mother of Nawāb Asī-ul-daula of Lucknow. She died on the 28th December, 1815. She was one of the "Begams" on whose ill-treatment was based a charge in the impeachment of Warren Hastings.

Baian (بیان), the poetical name of Khwāja Ahsan-uddin or Ahsan-ullah Khān of Āgra, who was living at Delhi in A.D. 1760, A.H. 1174.

Baiazid I. (Sultan) (بایزید سلطان), whom we call Bajazet, surnamed Ilderin, or Lightning, succeeded his father, Murād I. (Amurath) in A.D. 1389, A.H. 791, as Sultan of the Turks. He caused his elder brother Ya'küb, his rival for the throne, to be strangled, an act of barbarity which since his time prevailed as a custom at the Turkish court. He conquered Bulgaria, Macedonia, and Thessaly; and after he had made the emperor of Constantinople tributary to his power, he marched to attack Tamerlane in the east. He was, however, totally defeated near Angora on Friday the 21st July, A.D. 1402, 19th Zil-hijja, A.H. 804, and taken prisoner; and when the proud conqueror asked him what he would have done with him if he had obtained the victory, Bāiazid answered that he would have confined him in an iron cage. "Such then shall be thy fate," rejoined Tamerlane, and ordered him to be carried about with his camp in an iron cage. Bāiazid died on the 8th March, A.D. 1403, 13th Shu'ban, A.H. 805, at Antioch in Pisidia during his confinement in Taimūr's camp. His son Mūsā, who was with his father at the time of his death, brought his remains to Brusa and buried them there. During his (Mūsā's) absence in the camp, his brother Sulaimān had ascended the throne.

Baiazid II. (Sultan) (بایزید سلطان), emperor of Turkey, succeeded his father Muhammad II. to the throne of Constantinople in May, A.D. 1481, Rabi I, A.H. 886. He extended the boundaries of his kingdom; and obliged the Venetians to sue for peace. His reign was distracted by intestine discord, and he fell by the perfidy of his son Salīm I. who caused him to be poisoned in A.D. 1512, A.H. 918, in the 60th year of his age and 31st of his reign. He was a man of uncommon talents, and did much for the improvement of his empire and the promotion of the sciences.

Baiazid Ansari (بایزید انصاری), the Afghān Apostle, called Pīr Rōshan, founder of the Sūfī sect called "Rōshania," or "the enlightened." He had established amid the mountains of Afghanistan a temporal power upon the authority of his spiritual character, which enabled him and his successors to disturb the tranquility of the empire of Delhi, when, under the celebrated Akbar, it had reached the very zenith of its power.

Baiazid Bustami (Khawja) (بایزید)

(بسطامي خواجه), the famous ascetic of Bustām, whose original name was Taifūrī: he is therefore sometimes called Bāiazid Taifūrī-ul-Bustāmī. His father's name was 'Isa-ibn-Ādam-ibn-'Isa-ibn-'Alī. His grandfather was a Gabr or magian, but became a convert to Islāmism. These two brothers, Ādam and 'Alī, were, like himself, devout ascetics, but in an inferior degree.

He was born in the year A.D. 777, A.H. 160, lived to a great age, and died between the years A.D. 845 or 848, A.H. 231 or 234, but according to Ibn-Khalikān his death took place in A.D. 875 or 878, A.H. 261 or 264. He is said to have been a contemporary of Ahmad Khizroya, who died A.H. 240.

Baiazid Khan (بایزید خان), Faujdār

of Sarhind, who was commanded by the emperor Farrukh-siyar to punish the Sikhs, who had risen in rebellion; he took the field, but was assassinated in his tent when alone at evening prayers, by a Sikh commissioned for that purpose by Banda their chief, and the murderer escaped unhurt. This circumstance took place about the year A.D. 1714, A.H. 1126.

Baiazid (Sultan) (بایزید سلطان).

There is a cenotaph at Chatigāon (Chittagong), called the Rauza of Sultān Bāiazid. It is related that he was born at Bustām in Khurāsān, of which country he was king; but abandoning regal pomp and cares for the tranquility of the ascetic life, he came with twelve attending disciples to Chatigāon. Their arrival was promptly opposed by the king of the fairies and the attendant genii, who desired them forthwith to depart. Sultān Bāiazid, with feigned humility, entreated to be allowed to remain that night and to occupy only as much ground as could be illumined by a single lamp, called in Bengālī chaṭi or chaṭ; on obtaining their consent, he kindled from his urine a lamp of such radiance, that its light extended to Tik Naof, a distance of 120 miles, and scorched the terrified genii, who fled from its flame in dismay. In commemoration of this event, the place was named Chatigram, in common parlance, Chatgāon, signifying the village of the lamp. This insult and breach of confidence led to implacable war on the part of the genii, whom Sultān Bāiazid, in various conflicts, drove from the field; and in his strenuous exertions dropped a ring where the cenotaph now stands - his Karanphūl, or ear-ring, fell in the river, which thence was named the "Karanphūli"; and a sankh, or shell, dropped from his hand into the other stream, from which it derived the name of Sankhauti. Sultān Bāiazid then became a Gorchela (i.e. did penance in the tomb) for 12 years; after endowing it with lands to keep it in repair and defray the expenses of pilgrims and the twelve disciples, he proceeded to Makanpūr, and was succeeded by his disciple Shah, who, in the hope of an eternal reward, performed the penance of standing for 12 years on one leg, after which he also proceeded to Makanpūr; leaving the cenotaph under the charge of Shah Pīr, an attending disciple of Bāiazid. This place was therefore in after ages held in great repute, and visited by numerous pilgrims from distant parts. It is situated on a hill, ascended by a flight of steps, inclosed by a wall about 30 feet square and 15 high, with mitred battlements, and a pillar rising two feet above them at each angle, similar to the buildings of the time of Akbar. The tomb, about 12 feet by 9, is in the centre of the area, with some shells and corals deposited at its head.

Baiqara Mirza (سُلطان), the son of Umar Shaikh

Mirzā, the second son of Amīr Taimūr. Baiqara succeeded his brother as governor of Persia in A.D. 1391, A.H. 796. His eldest brother, Pīr Muhammad Jahāngir, was slain in A.D. 1405, A.H. 808. Baiqara, Mirzā was slain by his uncle Shāhrukh Mirzā in A.D. 1416, A.H. 819; he left a son named Mansūr, who became the father of Sultān Husain Mirzā, surnamed Abū'l Ghāzī Bahādur.

Bairam (بیرام), sometimes erroneously written by us for Bahrām. It is the T. name of the planet Mars.

Bairam Beg (بیرام بیگ) was father of Munim Khān. The latter was a grandee in Humāyūn's Court.

[Vide Ain Translation, vol. i. p. 317.]

Bairam Khan (بیرام خان), styled

Khān Khānān, or Lord of lords, was one of the most distinguished officers of the Mughal court. He was a Turkmān and descended from a line of ancestors who served for many generations in the family of Taimūr. Bairām accompanied the emperor Humāyūn from Persia to India, and on the accession of his son Akbar, he was honoured with the title of Khān Khānān and the office of prime minister; and had the whole civil and military powers vested in his hands. When Akbar in A.D. 1558, A.H. 965, thought he was capable of acting for himself, he dismissed Bairām Khan from the wizarat. Bairām at first had recourse to rebellion, but being unsuccessful, was compelled to throw himself on the clemency of his sovereign, who not only pardoned him but assigned to him a pension of 50,000 rupes annually for his support. Bairām soon after took leave of the emperor with the design of making a pilgrimage to Mecca, and had proceeded to Gujrāt in order to embark for Mecca, but was slain by one Mubārū: Khān Lohānī, whose father Bairām Khān had slain in battle with his own hand during the reign of the emperor Humāyūn. This event took place on Friday the 31st January, A.D. 1561, 14th Jumāda I. A.H. 968. He was at first buried near the tomb of Shaikh Hisām at Gujrāt, but afterwards his remains were transported to Mashhad and buried there. He is the author of a Diwān.

Baji Rao I. (Peshwa) (باجی راؤ پیشوا), the son of Bālājī Rāo Bishwanāth Peshwā, whom he succeeded in October, A.D. 1720. He was the ablest of all the Brāhman dynasty, and perhaps of all the Marhatta nation, except Sewājī. He died on the 28th April, o.s. 1740, 12th Safar, A.H. 1153, and left three sons, viz. Bālājī Bājī Rāo, who succeeded him as Peshwā; Rāghunāth Rāo, commonly called Rāghoba, who was at one time much connected with the English, and was the father of the last Peshwā Bājī Rāo II.; and Shamsar Bahādur, to whom (though an illegitimate son by a Muhammadan woman, and brought up in his mother's religion), he left all his possessions and pretensions in Bundelkhand.

Baji Rao II. (باجی راؤ پیشوا), the last Peshwā, was the eldest son of Rāghoba or Rāghunāth Rāo of ambiguous memory. He succeeded Mādho Rāo, the infant Peshwā, who died suddenly in October, A.D. 1795. During the reign of Mādho Rāo he and his brother Chinnājī were confined in the fort of Juncir, near Pāna, and after his death Chinnājī was furtively invested, but he was soon afterwards deposed and Bājī Rāo was publicly proclaimed Peshwā by Daulat Rāo Scindhia on the 4th December, A.H. 1796. In May, A.D. 1818, a proclamation was issued by Government deposing him for rebellion; and the Rāja of Sitāra, Partāp Singh Nārāyan released from confinement, had a part of the Pāna territories assigned for his support, and was vested with the reality of that power of which his ancestors in latter times had enjoyed only the name. Bājī Rāo was compelled to surrender himself to the English, and was pensioned on the 3rd June, A.D. 1818. The pension allowed him by Government was 800,000 rupees per annum. He died at Bithūr, near Cawnpore, in December, A.D. 1852, and was succeeded by his adopted son Bhondū Pant, commonly called Nāna Sāhib (q.v.), who became a rebel in the disturbances of 1857.

Banda (بندہ). Vide Razi (Maulānā).

Banda (بندہ), a gurū or chief of the

Sikhs, and successor of Gurū Gobind. This man obtained great power, and committed great depredations in the province of Lāhore, in the reign of Bahādur Shāh I. and while the emperor was in Deccan against his brother Kām Bakhsh, Banda collected his followers, to revenge the death of his predecessor's sons, who were taken prisoners and had been put to death some time before. He committed the greatest cruelties on the Musalmāns, in every advantage shewing no quarter to age or sex, and even ripping up women with child. The emperor found it necessary to march in person against him, and he was besieged in the fortress of Lohgarh, which was taken, but Banda found means to escape, and raise new insurrections. In the reign of the emperor Farrukhsīar, 'Abdus Samad Khān, governor of Kashmir, was sent against the rebels with a great army. After many severe engagements, he forced Banda to take refuge in a fortress, which was blockaded so effectually as to cut off every supply. The garrison was reduced to the necessity of eating cows, horses, asses, and other animals forbidden by their laws, when at length, having no provision of any sort left, and being reduced to the extremity of famine and disease, they begged for quarter. 'Abdus Samad Khān, having planted a standard on the plain, commanded them to come out and lay their arms under it, which they did. He then divided the meager sort among his chiefs, who cut off their heads; and threw their bodies into a river near the fortress. Banda and many other captives were sent to Delhi, through which he was carried in an iron cage upon an elephant, dressed in a robe of gold brocade. The Sikhs bore the insults of the populace with the greatest firmness, and steadily refused the emperor's offers of life if they would embrace the Muhammadan faith. They were put to death, a hundred each day, on the ensuing seven days. On the eighth day Banda and his son were put to death without the city. A dagger was put into his hands, and he was commanded to kill his infant son; but refusing, the child was slain by the executioner, his heart torn out, and forced into the father's mouth. Banda was then put to death by the tearing of his flesh with red hot pincers and other tortures, which he bore with the greatest constancy. This event took place in the year A.D. 1715, A.H. 1127.

Bauwab (بواب) (or Bouwāb), surname of Abū'l Hasan 'Alī Kālā, who is better known under the name of ibn-Bouwāb. It is he who improved the form of the Arabic Alphabet after Ibn-Maḡḡla. He died in A.D. 1022, A.H. 413, or as some say in A.D. 1032, A.H. 423. After him Yā'kūb, surnamed Mastā'simī, reduced it to its present form.

Baz Bahadur (باز بهادر) whose original name was Mālik Bāizīd, succeeded his father Shujā'a Khān to the government of Mālwa in A.D. 1554, A.H. 962, and having taken possession of many towns in Mālwa which were previously almost independent, he ascended the throne under the title of Sultān Bāz Bahādur. His attachment to Rūpmatī, a celebrated courtesan of that age, became so notorious, that the loves of Bāz Bahādur and Rūpmatī have been handed down to posterity in song. He reigned about 17 years, after which the kingdom of Mālwa was taken, and included among the provinces of the empire of Dehli, by the emperor Akbar in the year A.D. 1570, A.H. 978. Bāz Bahādur afterwards joined Akbar at Dehli and received a commission as an officer of 2000 cavalry. Bāz Bahādur and Rūpmatī are both buried in the centre of the tank at Ujjain.

[Vide Rupmatī.]

Baz Khan (باز خان), an amir in the service of the emperor Bahādur Shāh. He was killed in the battle against Avīm Shah (q.v.) on the 8th June, o.s. 1707, 18th Rabi' I, A.H. 1118, near Dhaulpūr.

Baziri (بازري), author of a poem entitled Konkab-al-Jawrat or the Brilliant Star, in praise of Muhammad, who cured him, as he said, of the palsy in a dream. Every line of the poem ends with an M, the initial of the prophet's name, and it is so highly valued that many of the Muhammadans learnt it by heart, on account of its maxims. (Lempriere's Universal Dictionary under Bausirri.) Bārizī and Bāziri appear to be the same person.

Bazmi (بزمي), author of the Padmāwat

in Persian verse. He was a native of Karkh and resided for some time at Shirāz. He came to Gujrāt during the reign of the emperor Jahāngīr, and composed the above-mentioned poem in A.D. 1619, A.H. 1028. He was living at Dehli in the time of Shāh Jahān about the year 1634. His proper name was 'Abdul Shakūr.

Bhaskar Acharya (بهسکر اچاریا), a most celebrated astronomer of the Hindūs, who was born at Bidar, a city in the Deccan, in the year of Salivāhana, 1036, corresponding with the year A.D. 1114, A.H. 508. He was the author of several treatises, of which the Lilāwati and the Bijā Ganita, relating to arithmetic, geometry and algebra, and the Sironamī, an astronomical treatise, are accounted the most valuable authorities in those sciences which India possesses. The Sironamī is delivered in two sections, the Gōla-Adhyāya, or the Lecture on the Globe, and the Ganita Adhyāya, or the Lecture on Numbers, as applied to Astronomy. The Lilāwati was translated into Persian by Faizi in the reign of Akbar, and an English translation has also been lately made by Dr. Taylor and published at Bombay. Bhaskar died at an advanced age, being upwards of 70 years. Lilāwati was the name of his only daughter who died unmarried.

Bhan (بهاو), a Mahratta chief. Vide Sadāshah Bhāū.

Bhau Singh (بهاو سنگه), also called Mirzā Rāja, was the second son of Rāja Bhagwān Dās Kachhwāhā, Rāja of Amber (now Jaipur). He succeeded to the rāj after his father's death in A.D. 1614, A.H. 1023, was raised to the rank of 5000 by the emperor Jahāngir, and died of drinking A.D. 1621, A.H. 1030. Two of his wives and eight concubines burnt themselves on his funeral pyre. Among Jahāngir's courtiers the Rājas of Amber were the most addicted to drinking. His eldest brother Jagat Singh, and Muka Singh his nephew, had likewise paid with their lives for their drunken habits, but their fate was no lesson for Rāja Bhāū.

Bhim Singh (بهیم سنگه), rānā of Udaipur, was living in A.D. 1750.

Bhim (بهیم راجه), Rāja of Gujrāt, in whose time Sulṭān Mahmūd Ghaznawī took the famous temple of Somnāth in A.D. 1027.

Bhim Singh Rathour (بهیم سنگه راتھور). He usurped the throne of Jodhpūr in A.D. 1793, on his grandfather's Bhoj (Raja) (بهوج راجه). Vide Rāja Bhoj.

Bhori Rani (بھوری رانی), the last of the wives of Maharājā Ranjit Singh; she died childless at Lāhore on the 6th April, 1872. Her adopted son Kūwar Bhūp Singh distributed large sums of money before and after her death as alms to the poor. The funeral was very grand. Her remains were burnt near the samādī of the late Maharājā, and the ashes were sent to be thrown into the Ganges at Hardwār. She drew a pension of 800 rupees per mensem from our Government and held jāgirs of upwards of 60,000 rupees per annum.

Bhuchehu (بھچو). Vide Zarra.

Bhuya (بھویہ میان), a nobleman of the court of Sulṭān Sikandar Lodī, who built the ma-jid Math in Delhi, but was afterwards assassinated by that prince without any crime, only because people used to assemble at his place.

Bibi Bai (بی بی بائی), the sister of Muhammad Shāh 'Adil, king of Delhi, married to Salim Shāh Sūr, by whom she had a son named Firōz. After the death of Salim Shāh, when Firōz, then an infant, was being murdered by his uncle Muhammad Shāh, she defended her son for some time in her arms, presenting her body to the dagger, but her cruel brother tore the young prince from her embrace, and in her presence severed his head from his body. This event took place in May, A.D. 1554.

Bibi Daulat Shad Begam (بی بی دولت شاد بیگم), one of the wives of the emperor Akbar, and the mother of Shakrunnisa Begam,* who survived her father, and died in the time of Jahāngir.

Bibi Marwarid (بی بی مروارید), wife of the late Amir Afzal Khān, died in September, A.D. 1874.

Bibi Zinda Abadi (بی بی زنده ابدی), commonly called Bibi Jind Wadi by the people of Uchcha, was one of the descendants of Spyvad Jalāl. She is buried at Uchcha in Multān. The dome in which she rests is erected of burnt bricks and ornamented by various hues, and lapis lazuli of the celebrated mines of Badakhshān. The size of this grand building may be estimated at 50 feet high, and the circumference 25.

Bihari Lal (بهاری لعل), a celebrated

Hindi poet, called by Gilchrist the Thomson of the Hindūs, and much admired among them; he appears to have flourished about the beginning of the 18th century. Being informed that his prince Jaisūh of Jaipur was so infatuated with the beauty of a very young girl he had married (so as to neglect entirely the affairs of his country, for he never came abroad, having shut himself up to contemplate the fascinating charms of his beautiful, though immature bride), Bihārī boldly ventured to admonish him by bribing a slave girl to convey a couplet, which he had composed, under his pillow; the translation of which is thus given by Gilchrist, "When the flower blooms, what will be the situation of the tree, that is now captivated with a bud, in which there is neither fragrance, sweets, or colour." This had not only the desired effect of rousing the prince from his lethargy, but excited in his breast a generous regard for the man, whose advice came so seasonably and elegantly disguised. Bihārī received, over after, a pension from court, with a present of more than one thousand pounds, for a work he published under the name of Satsai, from its consisting of seven hundred couplets.

Bihari Mal (بهاری مل), also called

Bharamal and Pūramal, a Rājā of Amber or Amcīr, now Jaipur, was a rājput of the tribe of Kachhwāha. He paid homage to Bāhar about the year A.D. 1527, and was on friendly terms with the emperor Akbar, and had at an early period given his daughter in marriage to him, of whom was born the emperor Jahāngīr. Both he and his son Rājā Bhagwān Dās were admitted at the same time to a high rank in the imperial army by the emperor. Bhagwān Dās gave his daughter in marriage to Jahāngīr in A.D. 1585, who was married next year (1586) to the daughter of Rājā Udai Singh, son of Rao Maldeo Rathor.

Bija Bai (بیجا بائی), or Biza Bāi, the wife of Mahārāja Daulat Rao Scindhiā of Gwalīār. After the death of her husband, who died without issue, she elected Jhankō Rao Scindhiā as his successor on the 18th June, 1827. She was expelled by him in 1833, and went over to Jhansi, where she had a large estate. She died at Gwalīār about the middle of the year 1863.

Bijaipal (بجی پال), a famous or fabulous Rājā of Bayāna, regarding whose power, riches, and extent of dominion, many curious tales are still current among the Bhartpūr Jāts, who assert their (spurious) descent from him. In the Bijaipāl Rasa, a metrical romance or ballad (written in the Birj Bhākhu) the Hindū scholar will find a full and particular account of this great Hindū monarch, who is fabled to have conquered Rājā Juneswar, the father of Pirthī

Rāj, the celebrated chauhān king of Dehlī, and to have ruled despotically over the whole of India. The Karaulī Rājā too boasts his descent from Bijaipāl, and if any faith can be placed in a "Bansāoli or genealogical tree," he has a fair claim to the benefits, real or imaginary, resulting therefrom.

Bijai Singh (بجی سنگه), son of Rājā

Ashai Singh, the son of Mahārāja Ajit, Singh, Rājhor of Jodhpūr, succeeded to the rāj in A.D. 1752, A.H. 1167. He became infatuated with fondness for a young concubine; after having fought the Mughols for 40 years he organised a confederacy against them in 1787 and was defeated by de Boigne (g.e.) at Pātān and Nirta in 1790; his chiefs rebelled, his family were in hostility with each other, and he left at his death the throne itself in dispute. Rājā Mān Singh at length succeeded, in 1804, to the honours and the feuds of Bijai Singh.

Bikramajit (بکرامجیت), or more properly Vikramāditya, a mythical sovereign of Mālwa and Gujrat, whose capital was Ujain. His era, called the Sambat is still used in the north of India. Bikramajit died (or ascended the throne) in the Kālī Jug year, 3044, according to Wilford, whose essays in the 9th and 10th volumes of the Asiatic Researches contain information on the history of the three supposed princes of this name and of their common rival Salivāhana. The first Sambat year, therefore, concurs with the year 3045 of the Kālī Jug year, or 57 years before the birth of Christ. This prince was a great patron of learned men; nine of whom at his court are called nine gems, and are said to have been Dhanwantari, Kshapanaka, Amera Sīnha, Sanku, Vṛtābhhatta, Ghatakarpara, Kālidāsa, Virahamihira, and Virā-ruchi. His real date is still an open question. "To assign him to the first year of his era might be quite as great a mistake as placing Pope Gregory XIII. in the year one of the Gregorian Calendar."—Holtzmann.

Bikrami (بکرامی), the poetical name of Mir 'Abdur Rahmān Wizārat Khan, brother of Qāsim Khān, the grandfather of Samsam-uddaula Shāhnawāz Khān. He was promoted in the reign of the emperor 'Alamgir to the Diwāni of Mālwa and Bijāpūr. He was an excellent poet, and has left a Diwān composed in a most beautiful style.

Bilal (بلال), the name of the crier, who used to announce to the people when Muhammad prayed. He was an African, and a freed slave of Muhammad. He died in the time of Umar, the second Khalīf after Muhammad, in the year A.D. 641, A.H. 20.

Bilal Kunwar (بلال کنور), the wife of the emperor Alamgir II. and mother of Shāh 'Akam, king of Delhi. Her title was Zauat Mahal.

Bilqaini (بلقینی), whose proper name was Abū Hafs, is the author of the works called Mahāsīn-ul-Isṭilāḥ, Sharah Bukhārī, and Tarandī. He died in A.D. 1402, A.H. 805. See Sirāj-uddīn, son of Nūr-uddīn, and Abū Hafs-ul-Bukhārī.

Binai (Maulana) (بنائی). His father was a respectable architect at Herāt, the birth-place of the poet, and his takhallus or poetical name is derived from Binā or Banna, a builder. He is the author of a work called Bukhrānma - Bahrōz, a story which he dedicated to the Sultān Ya'qūb the son of Uzzan Husan. His conceit had roused the jealousy of Amīr Alisher; Bināi tried to conciliate his favour by writing a Qasīda in his praise, but receiving no reward, he therefore substituted the name of Sultān Ahmad Mirzā for that of Alisher, saying that he would not give away his daughters without dowry. Alisher was so enraged at this, that he obtained a death-warrant against him. Bināi fled to Māwarannahr. He was killed in the massacre of Shāh Isma'il in A.D. 1512, A.H. 918. He has also left a Diwān consisting of 6,000 verses.

Bindraban (بندرابن), a Hindū author who flourished in the reign of the emperor 'Alamgir, and wrote a work called Lubhat-Tawārīkh, a summary history of Hindustān.

Birbal (بیربل), or Bīrbal, was a Brāhman of the tribe of Bhāj. His proper name was Mahes Dās. He was a man of very lively conversation, on which account he became one of the greatest personal favourites of the emperor Akbar, who conferred on him the title of Rājā and the rank of 5000. He was also an excellent Hindī poet, and was honored with the title of Kabīrā or the royal poet. He was slain, together with Mulla Sherī and other officers of note, in a battle fought against the Yūsufzai Afghāns of Sawād and Bijor (places between Kabul and Hindustān) in February, A.D. 1586, Rabi I. A.H. 994. Akbar was for a long time inconsolable for the death of Bīrbal, and as the Rājā's body was never found, a report gained currency that he was still alive among the prisoners, and it was so much encouraged by Akbar, that a long time afterwards an impostor appeared in his name; and as this second Bīrbal died before he reached the court, Akbar again wore mourning as for his friend. Many of Bīrbal's witty sayings are still current in India.

Birbhan, founder of the sect of Sādhus (Hindust. "Quakers") born near Narnaul at A.D. 1640. Date and place of death unknown.

Bir Singh (بیر سنگه راجه), a Rājā of the Bundelā tribe of Rājput. He was the founder of this family, and from him the family of the Urrha chief is descended. The greater part of his dominions was wrested from him by Rājā Chatar Sal, who was the last sole possessor of the Bundelkhand province. At that period its capital was Kalanger, but the residence of the Rājā was Panna, celebrated for its diamond mines.

Birgili (برگلی), surname of Mullā

Muhammad-bin-Pir 'Alī, a celebrated Arabian author, who wrote the Sharah 'Irba'in, and died A.D. 1573, A.H. 981. He is by some called Barkali.

Birjis Qadar (برجیس قدر), whose original name was Ramzān 'Alī, was son of Wajid 'Alī, the ex-king of Lucknow. His mother's name was Ma'shūk Begam. At the outbreak, he was crested king with the unanimous consent of the rebel soldiery in 1857 at the instance of Barkat Ahmad, Risaladād, late 15th Regiment Irregular Cavalry, who subsequently fell in battle. Birjis Qadar was then 10 years of age. Before his accession, his uncle Sulaimān Shikoh was much persuaded by the rebels to accept the crown, but refused. Birjis Qadar was driven out of India and took refuge with his mother at Katmandū in Nepal.

Bir Singh Rao (بیر سنگه راور), otherwise written Nar Singh, a Bundela chief suborned by Sultān Salim, eldest son of Akbar, to slay Abul Fazl, the emperor's favourite minister. The Rao was hotly pursued for his crime but escaped. On Salim's accession he was rewarded.

Bukhari (بخاری). Vide Al-Bukhārī.Bulbul (بلبل). Vide Mirzā Muhammad surnamed Bulbul.Burandaq (برندق), the poetical name of Maulāna Bahā-uddīn. He was a native of Samarqand, and a sprightly satirical poet; much dreaded by his contemporaries, on account of his wit and caustic humour. He was the especial panegyrist of Sultān Bāiqara Mirzā, the son of 'Umar Shaikh and grandson of Amīr Taimūr. When Prince Bāiqara ascended the throne in A.D. 1394, he ordered that the sum of five hundred ghuats (in Turki bish yūs altūn) should be paid to Burandaq. By a mistake of the Secretary, he received only two hundred; and therefore addressed the following lines to the Sultān:—

"The Shāh, the terror of his foes,
Who well the sound of flattery knows,
The conqueror of the world, the lord
Of nations vanquish'd by his sword,
Gave, while he prais'd my verso, to me
Five hundred ducats as a fee.
Great was the Sultān's generous mood,
Great is his servant's gratitude,
And great the sum; but strange to say!
Perhaps the words in Turkish tongue Convenient meaning may derive;
Or else my greedy ear was wrong,
That turn'd two hundred into five."

The Sultān was extremely entertained at the readiness of the poet; and sending for him, assured him that the words "bish yūs altūn" signified in Turkish a thousand ducats, which he ordered to be immediately paid (Dublin University Magazine for 1840). The year of Burandaq's death is unknown. He was contemporary with Khwāja Asmat-ullah Bukhārī who died in A.D. 1426, A.H. 829.

Burhan 'Imad Shah (برهان عماد شاه), one of the princes of the 'Imād Shāhī dynasty. He succeeded his father, Darā 'Imād Shāh, in the government of Beḡar when but a child. His minister Taulfāl Khān became regent; and before the prince was of an age to assume the reign of his empire, Taulfāl Khān, assisted by the ruler of Khāndesh and by the Nizām Shāhī court, usurped the government. He eventually confined his sovereign in irons in the fort of Parnāla, and assumed the title of king. In the year A.D. 1568, A.H. 980, Nizām Shāh marched against Taulfāl Khān, under the pretence of releasing the imprisoned prince from his confinement. He took the fort of Gāwal by capitulation, defeated Taulfāl Khān and made him prisoner with his son; but instead of placing the captive monarch on the throne of Beḡar, sent him with the usurper and his son to be confined in one of the Nizām Shāhī forts, where they were all subsequently strangled by the king's order. Thus the family of 'Imād Shāh and that of the usurper Taulfāl Khān became extinct.

Burhan Naqid (برهان ناقد), a poet who is the author of the poem entitled Dil Ashob, dedicated to the emperor Shāh Jahān.

Burhan Nizam Shah I. (برهان نظام)

ascended the throne of Ahmadnagar in the Deccan after the death of his father, Ahmad Nizām Shāh, in A.D. 1508, A.H. 914, in the seventh year of his age. He reigned 47 lunar years and died at the age of 64 in A.D. 1554, A.H. 961, and was buried in the same tomb with his father.

Burhan Nizam Shah II. (برهان نظام)

brother of Murtazā Nizām Shāh, ascended the throne of Ahmadnagar in the Deccan on the 15th May, O.S. 1591, 1st Sha'bān, A.H. 999, after deposing and confining his own son Ismā'il Nizām Shāh, who had been placed on the throne during his absence at the court of the emperor Akbar. He was advanced in years; but notwithstanding his age, gave himself up to pleasures unbecoming his dignity. His reign was marked by an unsuccessful war with the king of Bijāpūr, and a disgraceful defeat from the Portuguese, who had seized the sea coasts of his dominions. He died after a reign of four years and sixteen days, on the 18th April, A.D. 1595, 18th Sha'bān, A.H. 1003, in the 40th year of the reign of Akbar, and was succeeded by his son Ibrahim Nizām Shāh. Maulāna Zahūrī dedicated his Sāqināma to Burhān Nizām Shāh, containing nearly 4,000 verses.

Burhan - ul - Mulk Sa'adat Khan (برهان الملک سعادت خان). Idē Sa'adat Khān, and Mirzā Nasir.

Burzu (برزوی), a Persian physician who lived under Naushirwān the Just. He was sent by that prince to India to procure a copy of the book called the Wisdom of all Ages; which he afterwards translated into Persian. That which now exists is greatly altered from the original version.

Bus-haq (بوسحاق), the abbreviated poetical name of Abū Is-hāq Atma', which see.

Buzarjimehr (برزجمهر), the celebrated minister of Naushirwān the Just, king of Persia. He is said to have imported from India the game of Chess and the Fables of Pilpay. Such has been the fame of his wisdom and virtues, that the Christians claim him as a believer in the gospel; and the Muhammadans revere him as a prefigure Musalmān. He lived to a great age, and died in the time of Hurmuz III. son and successor of Naushirwān the Just, between the years A.D. 580 and 590.

Buzarjimehr Qummi (برزجمهر قمی), a celebrated Persian Prosodian of Qumm, who lived before the time of Saifi, the author of the Urūz Saifi.

Buzurg Khānam (بزرگ خان), the daughter of Saif Khan, by Malika Bāno Begam, the daughter of Asaf Khān Wazir, and wife of Zafar Khān, a nobleman of the reign of the emperor 'Alamgir. She died before her husband in the month of May, A.D. 1659, Shawwāl, A.H. 1069.

Buzurg Umaid Khan (بزرگ امید خان), son of Shāista Khān an officer of rank in the time of the emperor Alamgir. At the time of his death, which took place in A.D. 1694, A.H. 1105, he was governor of Behār.

Buzurg Umaid (بزرگ امید), or Kaia Buzurg Umaid, one of the Ismailis, who succeeded Husan Sabbāb, the Old Man of the Mountains, in June, A.D. 1124, Rabi II. A.H. 518, and reigned 24 years. After his death his son Kaia Muhammad succeeded him and reigned 25 years.

CARA

Caragossa. Vide Qara Ghuz.

Chaghtai Khan (چغتای خان), or

Qān, the most pious and accomplished of all the sons of Changez Khān; and although he succeeded, by the will of his father, to the kingdoms of Transoxiana, Balkh, Badakhshān, and Kāshghar in A.D. 1227, A.H. 624, he governed these countries by deputies, and remained himself with his eldest brother, Oqta Qān, by whom he was regarded with the reverence which a pupil gives to his master. He died seven months before his brother in the month of June, A.D. 1241, Zi-Qadda, A.H. 638. Qarāchar Nawān, who was the fifth ancestor of Amīr Taimūr, was one of his Amīgs, and, at length, captain-general of all his forces. The dynasty that founded the so-called "Moghul, or Mughol Empire" of India was named after Chaghtai. [Vide Keene's Turks in India. Chap. i.]

Chaghta Sultan (چغتای سلطان), a handsome young man of the tribe of the Mughols and favourite of the emperor Bābar Shāh. He died at Kābul in A.D. 1546, A.H. 953. •

Chait Singh (چیت سنگھ), Rāja, son of Balwant Singh, zamindār of Banāras. He succeeded his father in A.D. 1770. In August, 1781, demands were made upon him, by the Governor-General, for additional tribute to be paid to the Company, as the sovereign power now requiring assistance in its exigency. The Rāja declined, pleading willingness, but inability. He was arrested by Mr. Hastings' order, at Banāras: a revolt took place in his behalf on the 20th August; nearly two companies of Sepoys and their officers were destroyed, — and the Rāja escaped in the confusion. The Governor-General immediately assumed control of the province; and troops were called in to oppose the Rāja, who now headed the numbers flocking to his support. He was defeated at Latipūr, in Bundelkhand, where he had taken refuge; and lastly, his stronghold of Bijaigūrh was seized, and his family plundered by a force under Major Popham. His post was declared vacant, and the zamindari bestowed on the next heir, a nephew of the Rāja, a minor. After these transactions at Banāras, the Governor-General proceeded to Aūd, to obtain an adjustment of the heavy debts due to the Company by the Wazīr 'Asaf-ud-daula. The territories of the Bogams (one, the mother of Shuja'-ud-daula, the late Nawāb—the other, the mother

Chand (چاند), or Chānd, called also

Trikala, from his supposed prophetic spirit, was a celebrated Hindū poet or bard. He flourished towards the close of the twelfth century of the Christian era. He may be called the poet laureate of Prithirāj, the Chauhān emperor of Dehli who, in his last battle with Shuhāb-uddin Ghōrī, was taken prisoner and conveyed to Ghazni, where his bard, Chānd, followed him. Both perished by their own hands, after the death of their implacable foe, Shuhāb-uddin. Like the Greek bard, Homer, countries and cities have contended for the honour of having been the place of birth of this the most popular poet of the Hindūs. Dehli, Qanauj, Mahōba, and the Panjāb, assert their respective claims, but his own testimony is decisive, whence it appears that he was a native of Lāhore. In his Prithvirāj Chauhan Rāsa, when enumerating some of the heroes, friends and partizans of his hero, he says, "Niddar was born in Qanauj. Suluk and Jait, the father and son, at Abū; in Mundava the Parihār, and in Kurrik Kāngra the Huoli Rāo, in Nāgor, Bulbaddar, and Chānd, the bard, at Lāhore."

Chand Saudagar (چاند سوداگر), a Bangali merchant.

Chanda Kunwar (چندا کنور), also called Jindan Kōr; the wife of Mahārāja Ranjit Singh, of Lāhore, and mother of Mahārāja Dilip Singh (q.v.). She died at Kensington, 1863.

[Vide Griffith's Ranjit Singh, "Rulers of India," also Lady Logan's Sir John Logan and Duleep Singh.]

Chanda (چندا ماء لقا), also called

Māh-liqā, a dancing girl, or queen of Haidarābād, was a poetess of much taste and merit. She is the author of a Divān, which was revised by Sher Muhammad Khān Imān. In the year A.D. 1799, in the midst of a dance, in which she bore the chief part, she presented a British officer with a copy of her poems, accompanied with the following complimentary observations, in the form of the usual gazal:—

 Since my heart drank from the cup of a fascinating eye,
 I wonder beside myself, like one whom wine bewilders.

* Thy searching glances leave nothing unscented;
 Thy face, bright as flame, consumes my heart.
 Thou soughtest a Nazar: I offer thee my head;

Albeit thy heart is not unveiled to me.

My eyes fixed on thy lineaments—emotion agitates my soul,

Fresh excitement beats impatient in my heart.
 All that Chandā asks is, that, in either world,
 Thou wouldst preserve the ashes of her heart by thy side.

[Garcin de Tassin informs us that there is a copy of her Diwān in the East India House Library, which she herself presented to Captain Malcolm on the 1st October, A.D. 1799.]

Chanda Sahib (چندا صاحب), surname of Husain Dost Khān, a relation of Dōst 'Alī Khān, Nawāb of Arcot, whose daughter he had married. He had made his way to the highest offices of the government by the services of his sword, and was esteemed the ablest soldier that had of late years appeared in the Carnatic. He cajoled the queen of Trichinopoly, and got possession of the city in A.D. 1736. He was taken prisoner by the Mahrattas on the 26th March, A.D. 1741, and imprisoned in the fort of Sitāra, but was released by the intervention of Duplex in 1748, and appointed Nawāb of the Carnatic by Muzaffar Jang. He was put to death in A.D. 1752, 1st Sha'bān, A.H. 1165, by the Mahrattas, and his head sent to Muḥammad 'Alī Khān, made Nawāb of Arcot by the English, who reigned for over 40 years.

Chandar Bhan (چندر بہان برہمن), a Brahman of Patāla, well-versed in the Persian language, was employed as a Munshī in the service of the prince Dārā Shikōh, the eldest son of the emperor Shāh Jahān. He is the author of several Persian works, i.e., Guldasta, Tuhfat-ul-Awṣar, Tuhfat-ul-Fur-hā, Majma'-ul-Fuqrā, one entitled Chār Chaman, another called Munshat Brāhman being a collection of his own letters written to different persons, and also of a Diwān in which he uses the title of Brāhman for his poetical name. After the tragical death of his employer, he retired to Banāras where he died in the year A.D. 1662, A.H. 1073. He had also built a house at Agra, of which no traces now remain.

Chand Bibi (سولطانہ بی بی) was the daughter of Husain Nizām Shāh I. of Ahmadnagar in the Deccan, sister to Murtaza Nizām Shāh, and wife of 'Alī 'Adil Shāh I. of Bijāpūr. After the death of her husband in A.D. 1580, A.H. 988, she had been queen and dowager-regent of the neighbouring kingdom of Bijāpūr during the minority of her nephew Ibrāhīm 'Adil Shāh II. and was one of the most able politicians of her day. The Mughols under prince Murād, the son of Akbar, proceeded in November, A.D. 1565, Rabi' II, A.H. 1004, and besieged Ahmadnagar for some months, while Chānd Sultāna defended the place with masculine resolution. At the same time, there being a scarcity of provisions in the Mughol camp, the prince and Khān-Khānān thought it advisable to enter into a treaty with the besieged. It was stipulated by Chānd Bibi that the prince should keep possession of Bejūr, and that Ahmadnagar and its dependencies, should remain with her in the name of Bahādūr, the grandson of Burhān Shāh. She was put to death by a faction in the year A.D. 1599, A.H. 1008.

Chandragupta (چندرگپتا), called by the Greeks Sandracottus. He seized the kingdom of Magadha, after the massacre of the survivors of the Nanda dynasty, whose capital was the celebrated city Patāliputra, called by the Greeks Palibothra. Married a Greek Princess, daughter of Seleucus Nikator, and was grandfather to Asoka (q.v.).

Chandu Lal (چندر لال رائی), a Hindū, who was appointed Diwān to the Nizām of Haidarābād in A.D. 1808. His poetical name is Shādān. He died in the year A.D. 1863.

Changez Khan (چنگیز خان), also called by us Gengis, Jengis, and Zingis, surnamed Tamūjin, was the son of Yesuki a Khān or chief of the tribe of Mughols. He was born in A.D. 1154, A.H. 549, and at the age of 13 he began to reign, but the conspiracies of his subjects obliged him to fly for safety to Avant Khān, a Tartar prince, whom he supported on his throne, and whose daughter he married. Their ties were not binding. Avant Khān joined against Changez, who took signal vengeance on his enemies, and after almost unexampled vicissitudes he obtained, at the age of 49, a complete victory over all those who had endeavoured to effect his ruin, and received from the Khāns of Tartary the title of Khāqān in A.D. 1206, A.H. 602, and was declared emperor of Tartary. His capital was Qaraqum. In the space of 22 years he conquered Corea, Cathay (part of China) and the noblest provinces of Asia, and became as renowned a conqueror as Alexander the Great. He died on Sunday the 29th August, A.D. 1227, Ramazān, A.H. 624, aged 75 lunar years, leaving his dominions (which extended 1800 leagues from east to west, and 1000 from north to south) properly divided among his four sons, Jūji, Oqtāi, Chaghtāi and Tāli Khān.

Char Bagh (چار باغ), name of a garden constructed by the emperor Bābar on the bank of the Jamna, which it is said was also called Hasht Bahisht; it bore all sorts of fruits; no traces of this famous garden are left now.

Chatrapati Appa Sahib (چترپتی ابا صاحب), Rāja of Sitae, who died in, or a year before, A.D. 1874, whose adopted son was Rāja Rām.

Chatr Sal (چتر سال), or, according to the author of the Māsir-ul-Umrā, Satar Sāl, was the son of Chait Singh, chief of the Bundelas or inhabitants of Bundelkhand, of which province he was Rāja. To secure the independence of his posterity against the encroaching power of the Marhattas, he entered into a close alliance with the Peshwā Bājī Rāo I. about the year A.D. 1733, A.H. 1146, and at his demise he bequeathed him a third of his dominions, under an express stipulation that his posterity should be protected by the Peshwā and his heirs. Chatr Sāl died A.D. 1735, leaving two sons, Hirde Sāl and Jagat Rāj. The division of the dominions of Bundelkhand, bequeathed to the Peshwā, comprised the Mahāls of Kālpī, Sirounj, Kūnch, Garra Kofī, and Hirdainagar. Gangadhar Bāla was nominated by the Peshwā as his uāib to superintend the collections. Afterwards the principal leaders in Bundelkhand having fallen in battles, and the ruin of the country having been completed by the subsequent conquest of the Rāja of Panna by Nanā Arjūn, the grandson of Bakhat Singh, a descendant of Chatr Sāl, it hence became the object of Nanā Faruqī, the Puna minister, notwithstanding the stipulations by which the former Peshwā obtained from Chatr Sāl one-third of his dominions, to annex the whole of Bundelkhand to the Marhatta States. For this purpose he gave the investiture of it to 'Ali Bahādur, son of Shamsher Bahādur, an illegitimate son of the Peshwā Bājī Rāo, whose descendants became Nawābs of Banda.

[Vide Muhammad Khān Bangash.]

Chatur Mahal (چتر محل), one of the Begams of the ex-king of Oudh. One Qurbān 'Alī, who had held a subordinate position, and was latterly a Shariatadār under the British Government, suddenly became a rich man by marrying her. He formed the acquaintance of this young and beautiful woman, and they resolved to be married. But the Begam did not wish the union with a man so inferior to herself to take place where she was known, and so obtained the permission of the Chief Commissioner to leave Oudh on the pretence of making a pilgrimage to Mecca. Once clear of Lucknow, she was joined by Qurbān 'Alī, and made for his home at Bijnaur in Bundelkhand.

Chimnaji 'Apa (چمناجی ابا), the younger son of the Mahrattā chief Raghunāth Rāo (Raghōba) was furtively raised to the mansab at Puna some time after the death of Mūlho Rāo II. the son of Narāyan Rāyo II. on the 26th May, A.D. 1796; but was deposed afterwards, and succeeded by his elder brother Bājī Rāo II. who was publicly proclaimed on the 4th December following.

Balwant Singh, the son of Baldeo Singh.

Jaswant Singh, the son of Balwant Singh and present Rāja of Bhartpūr.

Dabir-ud-daula Amin-uf-Mulk (Nawab) (دبیرالدوله امین الملک نواب), title of Khwāja Farid-uddīn Ahmad Khān Bahādur Muslah Jang, the maternal grandfather of Sayyid Ahmad Khān, Munsif of Delhi. Whilst the British were in Bengal, and the Wakil of the king of Persia was killed in Bombay in an affray, it became urgent for the British Government to send a Wakil on deputation to Persia. Dabir-ud-daula was selected for this high office. On his return, after fully completing the trust, he was appointed a full Political Agent at Ava. After this, in latter times, he held the office of Prime Minister to Akbār Shāh II.

Daghistani (داغست), a poet of Dāghistān in Persia, who is the author of a Persian work called Ragūz-ush-Shu'arā. [I'ide Wālih.]

Dahan (داهان), whose proper name is Abū Muhammad Sa'id, son of Mubārīk, better known as Ibn Dāhān-al-Bughdādī, was an eminent Arabic grammarian and an excellent poet. He died in A.D. 1173, A.H. 569.

Dai (داعي), whose full name is Nizāmuddīn Muhammad Dāī, was a disciple of Shāh Na'mat-ullāh Wālī, and is the author of a Diwān which he completed in the year A.D. 1460, A.H. 865.

Daqiqi (دقیقی), a famous poet at the court of Amīr Nūh II. son of Amīr Mansūr Sāmānī, by whose request he had commenced to write the Shāh Nāma, but before he could finish a thousand verses of the story of Gashtasp, he was slain by one of his slaves. The year of his death is not known, but this event appears to have taken place during the reign of his royal master, who reigned in Khurāsān twenty years, and died in A.D. 997, A.H. 387. His proper name, according to the Aitāshkada, was Mansūr bin-Ahmad.

Dalpat (دلپت), Rāja of Bhojpūr near Buxar, was defeated and imprisoned, and when he was at length set at liberty by Akbar, on payment of an enormous sum, he again rebelled under Jahāngīr, till Bhojpūr was sacked, and his successor Rāja Partāb was executed by Shāh Jahān, whilst the Rānī was forced to marry a Muhammadan courtier.

DANI

Dalpat Sah (دلپت ساد), the husband of Rānī Durgawātī, which see.

Damad (داماد), poetical name of Muhammad Bāqir, which see.

Damaji (داماجی), the first Gaeqwār of Baroda. His successor was Pelāji.

Damishqi (دمشقی), an illustrious Persian poet, named Muhammad Damishqi, who flourished in the time of 'Kāzī, the son of Abū or Yabū, the Barmecid or Barmakī.

Danial Mirza (سultan) (دانیال میرزا), the third son of the emperor

Akbar. He was born at Ajmir on Wednesday the 10th September, A.D. 1572, and received the name of Dāniāl on account of his having been born in the house of a celebrated Darwesh named Shaiikh Dāniāl.

His mother was a daughter of Rāja Bihārī Mal Kachhwāha. After the death of his brother, prince Sultān Murād, he was sent to the Deccan by his father, accompanied by a well appointed army, with orders to occupy all the Nizām Shāhī territories. Ahmadnagar was taken in the beginning of the year A.H. 1009, or A.D. 1600; Sultān Dāniāl died on the 8th April, A.D. 1605, 1st Zil-lajja, A.H. 1013, in the city of Burhānpūr, aged 33 years and some months, owing to excess in drinking. His death and the circumstances connected with it so much affected the king his father, who was in a declining state of health, that he became every day worse, and died not long after. From the chronogram it would seem that the prince Dāniāl died in the year A.H. 1012, or A.D. 1604, a year and six months before his father.

Danish (دانش), poetical name of Mīr Rāzī who died in A.D. 1665, A.H. 1076.

Danishmand Khan (دانشمند خان), whose proper name was Muhammad Shafi or Mullā Shafi, was a Persian merchant who came to Sūrat about the year A.D. 1646, A.H. 1056, from which place he was sent for by the emperor Shāh Jahān. He was soon after raised to the mansab of 3000 and paymastership of the army, with the title of Dānīshmand Khān. In the reign of 'Alamgir he was honored with the mansab of 4000, and after some time to that of 5000, appointed governor of Shāh Jahānābād, where he died in the month of July, A.D. 1670, 10th Rabi I. A.H. 1081. He used to speak much about the Christian religion. Bernier, the French Traveller, who accompanied 'Alamgir to Kashmir in 1664, was attached to his suite, and has mentioned him in his Travels.

Danishmand Khan (دانشمند خان),

whose original name was Mirzā Muḥammad, and poetical, Ālī, was a native of Shirāz. In the year A.D. 1693, he was honored with the title of Na'mat Khān, and the superintendence of the royal kitchen by the emperor 'Alamgir. After the death of that monarch, the title of Nawāb Dānīshmand Khān Ālī was conferred on him by Bahādūr Shāh, by whose order he had commenced writing a Shāhnāma or history of the reign of that emperor, but died soon after in the year A.D. 1708, A.H. 1120.

Dara Bakht (Mirza) (دارا بخت مرزا), son of Bahādūr Shāh, the ex-king of Dehli. His poetical title is Dārā, and he is the author of a Diwān.

Darab Beg (Mirza) (داراب بیگ مرزا).

[Vide Jōyā.

Darab Khan (داراب خان) commonly called Mirzā Dārāb, was the second son of Abdul Rahīm Khān, Khān Khānān. After the death of his eldest brother Shāhnawāz Khān in A.D. 1618, A.H. 1027, he was honored with the rank of 5000 by the emperor Jahāngir and was appointed governor of Berār and Ahmadnagar in the Deccan. He was also governor of Bengal for some time, and on his return to the Deccan the emperor, being displeased with him on some account, ordered Mahābat Khān to strike off his head, which he did, and sent it to the king. This circumstance took place A.D. 1625, A.H. 1034.

Darab Khan (داراب خان), son of Mukhtār Khān Subzwārī, a nobleman in the service of the emperor 'Alamgir. He died on the 24th June, A.D. 1679, 25th Jumādī I. A.H. 1090.

Dara Shikoh (دارا شکوه), the eldest and favourite son of the emperor Shāh Jahān, was born on the 20th March, o.s. 1615, 29th Safar, A.H. 1024. His mother, Mumtāz Mahal (v. Arjumand), was the daughter of 'Asaf Khān, wazīr, the brother of Nūr Jahān Begam. In the 20th year of his age, i.e., in the year A.D. 1633, A.H. 1043, he was married to the princess Nādira, the daughter of his uncle Sulṭān Parwez, by whom he had two sons, viz., Sulaimān Shikōh and Sipahr Shikōh. In A.D. 1658, during the illness of his father, a great battle took place between him and his brother Aurangzib 'Alamgir for the throne, in which Dārā being defeated, was at last obliged to fly towards Sindh, where he was captured by the chief of that country and brought to the presence of Aurangzib, loaded with chains, on a sorry elephant without housings; was exposed through all the principal places and then led off to a prison in old Dehli, where after a few days, in the night of the 29th August, o.s. 1659, 21st Zil-hijja, A.H. 1069, he was murdered by the order of Aurangzib; his body exhibited next morning to the populace on an elephant, and his head cut off and carried to the emperor, who ordered it to be placed on a platter, and to be wiped and washed in his presence. When he had satisfied himself that it was the real head of Dārā, he began to weep, and with many expressions of sorrow directed it with its corpse to be interred in the tomb of the emperor Humāyūn. Sipahr Shikōh, his son, who was also taken captive and brought with his father, was sent away in confinement to Gwāliar. Sulaimān Shikōh, his eldest son, who, after the defeat of his father had taken refuge in Srinagar for some time, was subsequently, in A.D. 1670, A.H. 1071, given up by the Rājā of that place to the officers of Aurangzib and conveyed to Dehli. He was then sent to Gwāliar, where he and his brother Sipahr Shikōh both died within a short space. Dārā Shikōh is the author of the work called Safinat-ul-Aulia, an abridgement of the life of Muḥammad, with a circumstantial detail of his wives, children, and companions, etc., also of a work entitled Majma'-ul-Bahrain (i.e., the uniting of both seas), in which he endeavours to reconcile the Brāhmaṇ religion with the Muḥammadan, citing passages from the Qurān to prove the several points. In 1656 he likewise, with the same intent, caused a Persian translation to be made by the Brāhmaṇs of Banāras, of the Amṛikhat, a work in the Sanskrit language, of which the title signifies "the word that is not to be said," meaning the secret that is not to be revealed. This book he named Sarr-i-Aṣrār, or Secret of Secrets; but his enemies took advantage of it to traduce him in the esteem of his father's Muhammadan soldiers, and to stigmatize him with the epithets of Kafir and Rāfiẓī (unbeliever and blasphemer), and finally effected his ruin; for Aurangzib's brother made a pretence of that, and consequently had all his bigoted Muhammadans to join him. Anquetil du Perron has given a translation of this work, in two large volumes in quarto, on which a very good critique may be found in the Second Number of the Edinburgh Review. There is also a copy of the Persian version of this work in the British Museum, with a MS. translation, made by N. B. Halhed. The authorship of other works has been ascribed to this prince. His poetical name was Qādirī. Catrou says that Dārā died a Christian.

Dard (Mir) (درمیر) is the poetical name of Khwāja Muhammad Mir of Delhi, a son of Khwāja Nāsir who was one of the greatest Shaikhs of the age. Dard was the greatest poet of his time. He was formerly in the army, but he gave up that profession on the advice of his father and led the life of a devotee. When during the fall of Delhi everybody fled from the city, Dard remained in poverty contented with his lot. He was a Sūfī and a good singer. A crowd of musicians used to assemble at his house on the 22nd of every month. Some biographers say that he was a disciple of Shāh Gulshan, meaning Shaikh Sa'd-ullāh. Besides a Diwān in Persian and one in Rekhta, he has written a treatise on Sūfism called Risāla Wāṣidāt. He died on Thursday the 3rd January, A.D. 1785, 24th Šafar, A.H. 1199.

Dardmand (دردمند), poetical name of Muhammad Taqīh ōf Delhi, who was a pupil of Mirzā Jān Jānān Mazhar, and the author of a Sāqimāma and of a Diwān. He died at Murshidābād in the year A.D. 1762, A.H. 1176.

Daria Imdad Shah (دریا عماد شاد), the son of 'Alā-uddīn 'Imād Shāh, whom he succeeded on the throne of Berūr in the Deccan about the year A.D. 1532, A.H. 939. In A.D. 1543, A.H. 950, he gave his sister Rabi'a Sultāna in marriage to Ibrāhīm 'Adil Shāh, and the nuptials were celebrated with royal magnificence. In A.D. 1558, A.H. 966, he gave his daughter in marriage to Husain Nizām Shāh, and reigned in great tranquillity with all the other kings of the Deccan until his death, when he was succeeded by his son Burhān 'Imād Shāh.

Daria Khan Rohela (دریا خان روهيله), a nobleman in the service of prince Shāh Jahān, who, on his accession to the throne, raised him to the rank of 5000. He afterwards joined the rebel Khān Jahān Lodi. In a battle which took place between him and Rāja Bikarmājī Bundela, son of Rāja Chhajjar Singh, he was killed, together with one of his sons and 400 Afghāns, A.D. 1630, A.H. 1040. His head was sent to the emperor.

Dastam Khān (دستم خان), son of Rustam Khān Turkistāni, was an Amīr of 3000 in the service of the emperor Akbar. He died in A.D. 1580, A.H. 988, of his wounds which he had received in battle against the three nephews of Rājā Jihāri Māl, who had rebelled against the emperor and were also killed.

Data Ram Brahman (داتا رام براهمن),

a poet who wrote beautiful Persian verses.

Dattaji Sindhia (دتاجی سیندھیه), son of Rānāji and brother of Jaiāpā Sindhia, a Mahrattā chief who had a cavalry of 80,000 horse under him, and was slain in battle against Ahmad Shāh Abdālī in the month of January, A.D. 1760, Jumādā II. A.H. 1173, a year before the death of Bhāū, the famous Mahrattā chief.

[Vide Rānāji Sindhia.]

Daud Bidari (داؤد بیدری),

a native of Bidar in the Deccan. When twelve years of age, he held the office of page and seal-bearer to Sultān Muhammad Shāh Bahmanī I. king of Deccan about the year A.D. 1368, A.H. 770. He is the author of the Tahfut-us-Salātin Bahmanī.

Daud Khan Faruqi (داؤد خان فاروقی) succeeded his brother Mirān Khān to the throne of Khāndesh in September, A.D. 1503, 1st Jumādā I. A.H. 916, reigned seven years and died on Wednesday the 6th August, A.D. 1510. He was succeeded by 'Adil Khān Farqū II.

Daud Khan Qureshi (داؤد خان قریشی) son of Bhikan Khān, was an officer of 5000 in the reign of the emperor 'Alamgīr. In the year A.D. 1670, A.H. 1081, he was appointed governor of Allahābād.

Daud Khan Panni (داؤد خان پنی)

son of Khizir Khān Pannī, a Pathān officer, was renowned throughout India for his reckless courage, and his memory still survives in the tales and proverbs of the Deccan. He served several years under 'Alamgīr, and when Bahādūr Shāh, on his departure from the Deccan, gave the vicereignty of that kingdom to the Amīr-al-Umrā, Zulfikār Khān, as that chief could not be spared from court, he left the administration of the government to Dāūd Khān, who was to act as his lieutenant. In the reign of Farrukh-siyar, when the Amīr-ul-Umrā Husain 'Alī Khān marched towards Deccan, Dāūd Khān received secret orders from the emperor to oppose and cut him off. Accordingly when the Amīr-ul-Umrā arrived at Burhānpūr, Dāūd Khān, who regarded himself as the hero of his age, prepared to receive him. The engagement was very bloody on both sides; a matchlock ball struck Dāūd Khān, and he fell down dead on the seat of his elephant. This event took place in the year A.D. 1715, A.H. 1127.

Daud Qaisari (Shaikh) (داؤد قیسری)

(شیخ), author of another commentary called Sharah Hadis-ul-Arba'in, besides the one written by Birgili. He died A.D. 1530, A.H. 751.

Daud Shah Bahmani (Sultan) (داؤد شاہ بہمنی)

(شاه بہمنی سلطان), the son of Sultān 'Alā-uddin Hasan, ascended the throne of Deccan, after assassinating his nephew Mujāhid Shāh on the 14th April, A.D. 1378, 21st Muharram, A.H. 780. He reigned one month and five days, and was murdered on the 19th May, the same year in the mosque at Kulbarga where he went to say his prayers. He was succeeded by his brother Mahmūd Shāh I.

Daud Shah (داؤد شاہ گجراتی), a king of Gujrāt, who was placed on the throne after the death of his nephew Qutb Shāh in A.D. 1439, and was deposed after seven days, when Mahmūd Shāh, another nephew of his, a youth of only 14 years of age, was raised to the throne.

Daud Shah (داؤد شاہ), the youngest son of Sulaimān Qirāni, succeeded to the kingdom of Bengal after the death of his eldest brother Bāiazid in the year A.D. 1673, A.H. 981. This prince was much addicted to sensual excesses; and the propensity was rendered more degrading by his inclination to associate with persons of low origin and mean connections, by whom he was induced to attack the frontiers of the kingdom of Dehlī. He had several skirmishes with Munaim Khān, Khān Khānān, governor of Jaunpūr, who was subsequently joined by his master, the emperor Akbar, when an obstinate battle took place on the 30th July, A.D. 1575, 21st Rabi II. A.H. 983, in which Dāūd Shāh was defeated and obliged to retire to a fort on the borders of Kafak. After this a peace was concluded, by which Dāūd Shāh was invested with the government of Orisa and Kafak, and the other provinces of Bengal were occupied by Munaim Khān in the name of the emperor. The year of this event is commemorated in a Persian Hemistich. After the death of Munaim Khān, which took place the same year at Lakhnaūtī, Dāūd Khān re-took the provinces of Bengal, but was soon attacked by Khān Jahān Turkman, who was appointed governor, when after a severe engagement Dāūd Khān was taken prisoner, and suffered death as a rebel. From that period, the kingdom of Bengal was subdued, and fell under the subjection of the emperor Akbar. Thus ended the rule of the Pūrbi or independent eastern kings of Bengal.

Daud Tai (داؤد طائی), a Musalmān

doctor who was master of several sciences. He had served Abū Hanifa for 20 years, and was one of the disciples of Idris Rāi. He was contemporary with Fazail Aiaz, Ibrāhīm Adham and Ma'rūf Karkhi, and died in the reign of the Khalīf 'Al-Mahdī, the son of Al-Manṣūr, about the year A.D. 781 or 782, A.H. 164 or 165.

Daulat Rao Sindhia (داؤل راء), son of Anandi Rao, nephew to Madhoji, by whom he was adopted. Made war against the British, 1803, but was beaten in one campaign; died A.D. 1827.

Dawal Devi (داؤل دیوی), or Dewal Devi.

[Vide Kaulā Devī.]

Dawani (داوانی), the philosopher, whose proper name is Jalāl-uddin Muḥammad Asa'd Aldawānī, the son of Sa'd-uddin Asa'd Dawānī. He flourished in the reign of Sultān Abū Sa'id and died, according to Iḥājī Khalfa, in the year A.H. 908 (corresponding with A.D. 1502.) He is the author of the Sharah Hai'kal, Akhlaq Jalālī, Isbat Wajib (on the existence of God), Risala Zaura (on Sūfiism), Hāshia Shamsia, and Anwar Shafa. He also wrote the Sharah 'Aqaid, and marginal notes on Sharah Tajrid. The Akhlaq Jalālī is a translation from the Arabic, the original of which appeared in the 10th century under the name of Kitāb-ut-Taharat, by an Arabian author, minister of the imperial house of Bōyā. Two centuries after, it was translated into Persian by Abū Nasr, and named Akhlay Nāsiri, or the morals of Nāsiri, being enriched with some important additions taken from Abū Sina. In the 15th century it assumed a still further improved form, under the present designation, the Akhlay Jalālī or morals of Jalāl. This book, which is the most esteemed ethical work of middle Asia, was translated into English by W. F. Thompson, of the Bengal Civil Service, London, 1839.

Dawar Bakhsh (Sultan) (داور بخش)

(سلطان), surnamed Mirzā Bulāqī, was the son of Sultān Khusrō. When his grandfather, the emperor Jahāngīr, died on his way from Kashmir to Lāhore in October, o.s. 1627, Šafar, a.h. 1037, ‘Asaf Khān, wazīr, who was all along determined to support Shāh Jahān, the son of the late emperor, immediately sent off a messenger to summon him from the Deccan. In the meantime, to sanction his own measures by the appearance of legal authority, he released prince Dāwar Bakhsh from prison, and proclaimed him king. Nūr Jahān Begam, endeavouring to support the cause of Shāhriār, her son-in-law, was placed under temporary restraint by her brother, the wazīr, who then continued his march to Lāhore. Shāhriār, who was already in that city, forming a coalition with two, the sons of his uncle, the late Prince Dāniāl, marched out to oppose ‘Asaf Khān. The battle ended in his defeat; he was given up by his adherents, and afterwards put to death together with Dāwar Bakhsh and the two sons of Dāniāl, by orders from Shāh Jahān, who ascended the throne. Elphinstone in his History of India says that Dāwar Bakhsh found means to escape to Persia, where he was afterwards seen by the Holstein ambassadors.

of Muhammad Husain, an amir of 2,500, who served under the emperor Shāh Jahān, and died at Ahmadnagar in the Deccan A.D. 1630, A.H. 1040.

Daya Ram (دیا رام), Pattha, a hero, renowned in the west of Hindūstān for extraordinary strength of body, extraordinary courage, and extraordinary achievements. He was a Gwāla by caste, and flourished in the reign of the emperor Farrukh-siyar. The wonderful feats of this man are sung or recited accompanied by the beat of a dhol throughout Hindūstān. A full and affecting account of this hero is given in the Bengal Annual, published at Calcutta in 1833, p. 169.

Daya Ram (دیا رام), a chief of Hātras, tributary to the East India Company, who, about the year A.D. 1814, confiding in the extraordinary strength of his fort, showed a spirit of contumacy and disobedience. A train of Artillery was brought against this place from Cawnpore, under Major-General Dyson Marshall; and a few hours of its tremendous fire breached the boasted fortification. Dayā Rām effected his escape by a sally-port, and was never heard of after.

the Kachhwaha Rājas of Āmbūr or Jaipūr; he lived about the year A.D. 967.

Dhundia Wagh (دهوندیه واگه), the free-booter, who had for several years with a formidable band, pillaged and laid waste the frontiers of Mysore. This robber assumed the lofty title of king of the two worlds, and aimed, doubtless, at carving out for himself some independent principality, after the example of Haidār ‘Alī, in whose service he originally commenced his adventurous career. Subsequently he incurred the displeasure of Tipū Sultān, who chained him like a wild beast to the walls of his dungeons in Srangapatam, from which “durance vile” he was liberated by the English soldiers after the taking of Srangapatam. He proceeded to threaten Mysore with 5,000 cavalry. The Government of Madras instructed Colonel Wellesley to pursue him wherever he could be found and to hang him on the first tree. His subjugation and subsequent death (in 1800) with the extirpation of his formidable band of free-booters, relieved the English Government from an enemy who, though by no means equal to Haidar and Tipū, might eventually have afforded considerable annoyance.

Dil (دل), poetical name of Zorawar

Khān of Sirkar Kol. He is the author of a Dīwān and a few Masnawīs.

Dilami (دلامی) and Sāmānī were two dynasties which divided between them the kingdom of Persia towards the beginning of the 10th century. They both rose to power through the favour of the Khalīfs of Baghdād, but they speedily threw off the yoke. The Dilāmi divided into two branches, exercised sovereign authority in Kirmān, Irāq, Fāris, Khuzistān, and Laristān, always acknowledging their nominal dependence on the Khalīfī, and during the whole period of their rule, one of the southern branch of this family was vested with the dignity of Amīr-ul-Umra, or vizir, and managed the affairs of the Khalīfate. Several of the Dilāmi were able and wise rulers, but Mahmūd of Ghazni put an end to the rule of the northern branch in A.D. 1029, and the Suljūqs subjugated the southern one in A.D. 1056, by the capture of Baghdād, their last stronghold. Their more powerful rivals, the Sāmāni, had obtained from the Khalīf the government of Transoxiana in A.D. 874; and to this, Ismā'il the most celebrated prince of the family, speedily added Khwārizm, Balkh, Khurāsān, Sīstān, and many portions of northern Turkistān. Rebellions of provincial governors distracted the Sāmānī monarchy towards the end of the 10th century; and in A.D. 999 their dominions north of Persia were taken possession of by the Khān of Kāshghar, the Persian provinces being added by Mahmūd of Ghazni to his dominions. See Sāmāni.

Dilawar Khān (دلوار خان), founder of the dynasty of the Muhammadan kings of Mālwa. The Hindū histories of the kingdom of Mālwa go back as far as the reign of Rāja Bikramājī, whose accession to that kingdom has given rise to an era which commences 57 years before Christ. After him reigned Rāja Bhūj and many others who are all mentioned among the Rājas of Hindūstān. During the reign of Fīrūz-uddīn Balban, king of Delhi in the year A.D. 1310, A.H. 710, the Muhammadans first invaded and conquered the provinces of Mālwa; after which it acknowledged allegiance to that crown until the reign of Muhammad Shāh Tughlaq II. A.D. 1387, A.H. 789. At this period Dilāwar Khān, a descendant on his mother's side from Sultān Shahāb-uddīn Ghōri, was appointed governor of Mālwa, previously to the accession of Muhammad Tughlaq, and he subsequently established his independence. In the year A.D. 1398 A.H. 801, Mahmūd Shāh, king of Delhi, being driven from his throne by Amīr Taimūr (Tamerlane), made his escape to Gujrāt, and then to Mālwa, where he remained three years, after which, in A.D. 1401, A.H. 804, he, at the instance of the Delhi nobles, quitted Mālwa, in order to resume the reins of his own government. Dilāwar Khān shortly afterwards assumed royalty and divided his kingdom into estates among his officers whom he ennobled. Dilāwar Khān on assuming independence, took up his residence in Dhār, which place he considered as the seat of his government, but he frequently visited the city of Mandu, remaining there sometimes for months together. He only survived his assumption of the royal titles a few years; for in the year A.D. 1406, A.H. 808, he died suddenly, and his son Alp Khān ascended the throne under the title of Sultān Hōshang Shāh. Including Dilāwar

Khān eleven princes reigned in Mālwa till the time of the emperor Humāyūn, whose son Akbar eventually subdued and attached it to the Delhi government. Their names are as follow:

1. Dilāwar Khān Ghōṣi.
2. Hōshang Shāh, son of Dilāwar.
3. Sultān Muhammad Shāh.
4. Sultān Mahmūd I. Khilji, styled the Great, son of Malik Mughis.
5. Ghāyās-uddīn Khilji.
6. Nāsir-uddīn.
7. Mahmūd II.
8. Bahādūr Shāh, king of Gujrāt.
9. Qadar Shāh.
10. Shujāa' Khān, and
11. Bāz Bahādūr, son of Shujāa' Khān.

Dilawar Khan (دلوار خان), a nobleman of the reign of the emperor Shāh Jahān, was the son of Bahādūr Khān Rohila. He died at Kābul in the year A.D. 1658, A.H. 1068.

Dildar Aga (دلدار آغا), one of the wives of the emperor Babar, and mother of Mirzā Hāndal.

Diler Himmat Khan (دلیر همت خان), original name of Nawāb Muzaffar Jang of Farrukhābād, which see.

Diler Khan (دلیر خان), a Dāūdzaī

Afghān, whose proper name was Jalāl Khān. He was the younger brother of Bahādūr Khān Rohila, and one of the best and bravest generals of the emperor 'Alangīr. He held the rank of 5,000, and died in the year A.D. 1683, A.H. 1094, in the Deccan.

Diler Khan (دلیر خان), title of

'Abdul Raūf, the son of 'Abdul Karīm, formerly in the service of the king of Bijāpūr. After the conquest of that country, he joined 'Alangīr and received the title of Diler Khān and the mansab of 7,000. He died in the reign of Bahādūr Shāh in the Deccan, where he held a jāgīr.

Dilip Singh (دلیپ سنگه), Mahārājā, often miscalled by Europeans "Dhuleep Sing," the son of Rāni Chanda Kunwar (q.v.). He became titular ruler of the Panjāb A.D. 1843, but was deposed by Dalhousie 1849; became a Christian and settled for some years in England. Married an Egyptian lady, by whom he had issue. Went to India, alleging grievances against the Government, but was not allowed to land. Abjured Christianity and declared himself a foe to the British race. Was living on the Continent in 1890.

Dilraś Bano Begam (دلرس بانو بیگم), daughter of Shahnawāz Khān Safwī, the son of Mirzā Rustam Kundharī, and wife of the emperor 'Alangīr. She had another sister who was married to Murād Bakhsh, brother of 'Alangīr.

Dilshad Khatun (دلشاد خاتون), daughter of Amīr Damīshq, the son of Amīr Juban or Jovian, and wife of Sultān Abū Sa'īd Khān. Amīr Hasan Buzurg, after the death of the Sultān in A.D. 1335, took possession of Baghdād and married her, but the reigns of government remained in her hands.

Dilsoz (دلسوز), poetical title of Khairātī Khān, a poet who lived about the year 1800.

Din Muhammad Khan (دين محمد خان), the son of Jānī Beg Sultān, and 'Abd-ullāh Khān Uzbek's sister, was raised to the throne of Samarqand after the death of 'Abdul Mōmin Khān, the son of 'Abd-ullāh Khān, in A.D. 1598, A.H. 1006. He was wounded in a battle fought against Shāh 'Abbās the Great, king of Persia, and died shortly after.

Muhammad Jān, who died in the year A.D. 1737, A.H. 1150.

Diwana (ديوانه), poetical name of Rāc

Sarabsukh, a relation of Rājā Mahā Narāyan. He wrote two Persian Diwāns of more than 10,000 verses; most poets of Lucknow were his pupils. He died in A.D. 1791, A.H. 1208.

Diwana (ديوانه), poetical name of Mirzā Muhammad 'Alī Khān of Jahanabad. He was employed at the office of Mr. Colebrooke at Jahanabad.

Diwanji Begam (ديوانجي بيگم). She was the mother of Arjumand Bano Begam Mumtaz Mahal, and the wife of 'Asaf Khān, wazīr. On a spot of fifty bigas of land on the bank of the river Jamun, close to Tajganj, is to be seen her tomb of white marble.

Dost 'Alī (دوست علي), Nawāb of Arkat and a relative of Murtaza Khān. Under him the atrocious seizure of Trichinopoly was perpetrated by Chanda Sahib. He was succeeded by his son Saīdar 'Alī, who, after overcoming the effects of poison prepared for him by Murtaza Khān, fell by the poniard of a Pathān assassin, hired for the work by the same person. A storm was raised which he had not the courage to encounter; and disguising himself in female attire, he escaped from Arkat to his own fort of Vellore.

Dost Muhammad Khan (دوست محمد), ruler of Kābul and Qandahār, was one of the brothers of Fatha Khān, the celebrated wazīr of Mahmūd, ruler of Hirat and chief of the Bagakzai clan. He was the most powerful chief in Afghānistan, and had for some years previous to the restoration of Shāh Shujā'-'ul-Mulk by the British in 1838, ruled that country. He was taken to Calcutta during the war, as related below; but his son Akbar Khān (q.v.) defeated and for a time expelled the invaders and killed Shujā' (q.v.). The following is a summary of the Dost's career:—

On the death of this prince, Dost Muhammad again assumed the reins of government. On the base and cruel murder of Fatha Khān by Mahmūd, at the instigation of Prince Kāmran, his brothers revolted from their allegiance under the guidance of Azīm Khān, the governor of Kashmir, and drove Mahmūd and his son Kāmran from Kābul. Azīm Khān in the first instance offered the vacant throne to Shāh Shujā', but offended by some personal slight withdrew his support, and placed in his room, Aiyūb, a brother of Shāh Shujā', who was content to take the trappings with the power of royalty. On Azīm Khān's death, his brothers dissatisfied with their position conspired against his son, Habib-ullāh Khān, and seizing his person, by threats of blowing him from a gun, induced his mother to deliver up the residue of Azīm Khān's immense wealth. Aiyūb's son was killed in these disputes, and he himself, alarmed by these scenes of violence, fled to Lahore. Dost Muhammad Khān, the most talented of the brothers, then took possession of the throne and became de facto king of Kābul. Sher Dil Khān, accompanied by four brothers, carried off about half a million sterling of Azīm Khān's money, and seated himself in Kandahār as an independent chieftain. He and one of his brothers died some years ago; and Kandahār was until lately ruled by Kohan-Dil Khān, assisted by his two surviving brothers Rahim Dil and Mir Dil. In the year 1830 the British army entered Kābul and placed Shāh Shujā'-'ul-Mulk on the throne on the 8th May, and Dost Muhammad Khān surrendered to the British Envoy and Minister in Kābul on the 4th November, after having defeated the 2nd Bengal Cavalry, who were disbanded for their behaviour in the action of Parwān Darra. He was subsequently sent down to Calcutta, where he arrived, accompanied by one of his sons, on the 23rd May, 1841. He was set free in November, 1842, and returned to Kābul, where he reigned as before till his death, which took place on the 9th June, A.D. 1863, 31st Zil-hijja, A.H. 1279; his youngest son Amīr Sher Ali succeeded him.

Doulat Khan Lodi (دولت خان لودي),

who, according to Firishī, was an Afghān by birth, originally a private Secretary, who after passing through various offices was raised by Sultān Mahmūd Tughlaq, and attained the title of 'Aziz Mumālīk. After the death of Mahmūd, the nobles raised him to the throne of Delhi in April, A.D. 1413, Muharram, A.H. 816. In March, 1414, 16th Rabī I. A.H. 817, Khizir Khān, governor of Multān, invaded Dehli, and after a siege of four months obliged Doulat Khān on the 4th June, 1414, Jamāda I. A.H. 817, to surrender. He was instantly confined in the fort of Fīrōzābād, where he died after two months.

Doulat Khan Lodi (دولت خان لودي), who invited Bābar Shāh to India, was a descendant of the race of that name, who heretofore reigned at Dehli. He was a poet and a man of learning. He died a short time before Bābar conquered Dehli, i.e. in the year A.D. 1526, A.H. 923.

Doulat Khan Lodi Shahu Khail

(دولت خان لودي. شاهو خيل) was the father of the rebel Khān Jahān Lodi. He served under Mirzā 'Aziz Kōka, 'Abdul Rahīm Khān Khānān, and Prince Dāniāl for several years, and was raised to the rank of 2,000. He died in the Deccan A.D. 1600, A.H. 1009.

Doulat Rao Sindhia (Maharaja)

(دولت راو سيدهيه. مهاراجه), of Gwāliar, a Mahrattā chief, was the grand-nephew and adopted son of Madhoji Sindhia, whom he succeeded to the Rāj of Gwāliar in March, A.D. 1794, A.H. 1208. His violence, rapacity and lawless ambition, were the main causes of the war in 1802 with the confederate Mahrattā chieftains. Hostilities having broken out with the British, Sir Arthur Wellesley (afterwards Duke of Wellington) defeated Doulat Rāo at Assaye in 1803, while Lord Lake drove the Mahrattas from the whole of the Deccan. He married Baiza Bāid, daughter of Sherji Rāo, Ghatgai, reigned 33 years, and died on the 21st March, 1827, 21st Shrahān, A.H. 1242. He was succeeded by Jhanko Rāo Sindhia.

Doulat Shah (دولت شاه), son of Bakht Shāh of Samarcand, and author of the Biography of Poets called Tazkira Doulat Shāhi. He flourished in the reign of Sulṭān Husain Mirzā of Herāt, surnamed Abūl Ghazī Bahādur, and dedicated the work to his prime minister, the celebrated Amīr Nizām-uddin 'Alisher. This work was written in A.D. 1486, A.H. 891, and contains the Lives or Memoirs of ten Arabian, and one hundred and thirty-four Persian poets, with various quotations from their works, and anecdotes of the princes at whose courts they resided. It also gives an account of six poets then residing in Herāt; two of whom were principal ministers of the Sulṭān; viz. 'Alisher and Amīr Shaiikh 'Ahmad Suheli. He died in A.D. 1495.

Dundi Khan (دوندی خان روهيله), a Rohila chief, and son of Ali Muhammad Khān, the founder of the Rohila Government.

In the partition of lands which were assigned to the chiefs, in the time of Hāfiz Rahmat Khān, Dūndey Khān obtained the districts of Bisauli, Murādābād, Chāndpūr and Sambhal in Rohilkhand. He died previous to the Rohila war which took place in A.D. 1774, leaving three sons, the eldest of whom, Muhib-ullah Khān, succeeded to the largest portion of his territories.

Dunyaṣat Singh (Raja) (دنياسات)

(سنگه راجه). His father died in

A.D. 1790, at which time he was only seven years of age. He inherited from his grandfather Rūp Rāo the Chaklas of Kōrā, Fathpūr and Kara, but was dispossessed by the Nawāb Wazīr, and a Nānkar allowance of 24,000 rupees granted to the Rāja on his exclusion. This was subsequently reduced to 7,500 rupees. The original grant amounted to 52,000 per annum, payable from 14 mahāls, but in A.D. 1770, the Nawāb Najaf Khān acquiring unlimited dominion over these provinces, dispossessed his father of eleven of the villages, by which his income was reduced to 20,000 rupees. In 1787 his father was dispossessed of the remaining three villages by Zain-ul-'Abidin Khān, the 'Amil, but as the Rāja was about to proceed to hostilities, the 'Amil agreed to allow him 10,000 rupees for the first year, and 20,000 thereafter, but failed in the fulfilment of his promise. In A.D. 1792, Zain-ul-'Abidin died, and was succeeded by his son Bāqar, 'Alī Khān, and from that period up to 1802 the Rāja Dunyaṣat Singh was allowed 8,000 rupees per annum, which was confirmed by Government in 1805 in perpetuity.

Dupleix, Joseph François, a French officer, governor of Pondicherry. In A.D. 1750 he was elevated to the rank of a Haft Hazārī, or Commander of seven thousand horse, and permitted to bear an ensign, assigned to persons of the highest note in the empire, by Muzaḥfar Jang, viceroy of the Deccan, after his victory over his brother Nāsir Jang, who fell in battle on 15th December of that year. But the ambitious plans of Dupleix were not approved by the French Government. He was suspended and sent home in 1754; and died in disgrace and poverty Nov. 10th, 1764.

Durgawati (Rani) (درگاوتی رانی),

daughter of Rana Sarika.

[Vide Silhaddi.]

Durgawati (Rani) (درگاوتی رانی),

the daughter of the Gond Rāja of Mahōba, who was much celebrated for her singular beauty. Overtures had been made for an union with Dalpat Sāh, Raja of Singalgurh (which is situated on the brow of a hill that commands a pass on the road about halfway between Gardā and Sangar); but the proposal was rejected on the ground of a previous engagement, and some inferiority of caste on the part of the Garha family, who were of the race of the Chandeil rājapūts. Dalpat Sāh was a man of uncommonly fine appearance, and this, added to the celebrity of his father's name and extent of his dominions, made Durgāwatī as desirous as himself for the union, but he was by her given to understand, that she must be relinquished or taken by force, since the difference of caste would of itself be otherwise an insurmountable obstacle. He marched with all his troops he could assemble, met those of her father and his rival,—gained a victory and brought off Durgāwatī as the prize to the fort of Singalgurh. Dalpat Sāh died four years after their marriage, leaving a son named Bir Narāyan about three years of age, and his widow as regent during his minority. Asaf Khān, the imperial viceroy at Kara Mānikpūr on the Ganges in the province of Allahābad, invited by the prospect of appropriating so fine a country and so much wealth as she was reputed to possess, invaded her dominions in the year A.D. 1564, at the head of 6,000 cavalry and 12,000 well disciplined infantry, with a train of artillery. He was met by the Rānī at the head of her troops, and an action took place in which she was defeated. She received a wound from an arrow in the eye; and her only son, then about 18 years of age, was severely wounded and taken to the rear. At this moment she received another arrow in the neck; and seeing her troops give way and the enemy closing round her, she snatched a dagger from the driver of her elephant, and plunged it in her own bosom. Her son was taken off the field and was, unperceived by the enemy, conveyed back to the palace at Chūrāgarh, to which Asaf Khān returned immediately after his victory and laid siege. The young prince was killed in the siege; and the women set fire to the palace under the apprehension of suffering dishonour if they fell alive into the hands of the enemy. Two females are said to have escaped, the sister of the queen, and a young princess, who had been betrothed to the young prince Bir Narāyan; and these two are said to have been sent to the emperor Akbar. In this district of Jabalpūr the marble rocks and the palace called Madan Mahal are worth seeing. There is some doggrel rhyme about this palace which is not generally known, though of some interest. This building stands on a single granite boulder, and was constructed by the Gond princess Rānī Duragāwatī at the time of the Muhammadan invasion of Central India. Years after the cession of the country to the British, a vag of a Pandit wrote on the entrance door of the palace the following lines:

Madan Mahal kē chhain mē,
Do tāngōn kē bich,
Garā nau lakh rupi,
Aur sonē kā do int.

Translation—

In the shade of Madan Mahal,
Between two boulders,
There are buried nine lakhs of rupees
And two bricks of gold.

It did not take long for the news of the appearance of this writing on the door to spread abroad, and the very person to fall a dupe to the Pandit's trick was Captain Wheatley, at that time a Political Assistant at Jabalpūr. He mustered some peons and labourers, and having proceeded to the spot commenced digging for the treasure on the part of Government. The native lady, in whose possession were the village lands on which the palace stood, came rushing down to the Agent to the Governor-General and represented that she was being plundered of her treasure by Captain Wheatley. "Pagli" replied Sir Wm. Sleeman, "he is as mad as you are; the Pandit would not have divulged the secret were it of much value." Many years have since elapsed, and many others not possessed of Sir William's wisdom have fallen dupes to the Pandit's poetical trick; and, but for the very durable nature of the murtas, there have been enough excavations made in and about the building to raze it to the ground.

Faghfur (فغفور), the general name of the kings of China.

Faghfur Yezdi (فغفور یزدی حکیم),

(Hakīm), a physician and poet of Persia, born at Yezd. He is the author of a Diwān or Book of Odes, and has written several panegyrics in praise of the kings of Persia. He came to India in A.D. 1603, A.H. 1012, and was employed by prince Parwez, and died at Allahābād about the year A.D. 1619, A.H. 1028.

Fahmi Kirmani (Maulana Sadr-uddin Muhammad) (فہمی کرمانی مولانا)

(صدرالدین محمد), a poet who is the author of a Masnawī called Sūrat-ṣa-Maʿanī, and also of some Qasīdas, Ghazals, Satires, etc. He died in the year A.D. 1584, A.H. 993, in the fort of Tabrez, during the time it was besieged by the Turks.

Faiq (فایق), or Fāyeq, poetical name of Moulwī Muhammad Fāiq, author of the work called Makhṣuṣ-ul-Fawaed.

Faiz (فایض) or Fāyez, poetical name of Shaikh Muhammad Faiz, a pupil of Muhammad Saʿd Ayāz. He is the author of a short Diwān, and was probably living in A.D. 1724, A.H. 1136.

Faiz (فیض), the distinguished mystical philosopher and theologist, Mullā Muhsin of Kāshān, commonly called Akhūnd Faiz. He flourished under Shāh ʿAbbās II. of Persia, who treated him with great respect. He has written a great number of books, of which Kitāb ʿAsafī, and Kitāb Safī are two Commentaries on the Qurān. He died at Kāshān in the time of Shāh Sulaimān of Persia, and his tomb is a place of pilgrimage.

Faiz (فیض), poetical title of Mīr Faiz ʿAlī, an Urdū poet of Dehli. His father, Mīr Muhammad Taqī, was also an elegant poet, and had assumed the title of Mīr for his poetical name. Both Faiz ʿAlī and his father were living at Dehli in the year A.D. 1785, A.H. 1196.

FAIZ

Faiz (فیض), a pupil of Mīrzā Qatīl, and author of a poetical work containing amorous songs in Persia, called Diwān Faiz. He was living in the time of Muḥammad ʿAlī Shāh, king of Lucknow, about the year A.D. 1840, A.H. 1256.

Faiz (فیض), poetical title of Faiz-ul-Ḥasan of Sahāranpūr, author of the Rauzat-ul-Faiz, a poem composed in A.D. 1847, A.H. 1263.

Faizi (فیزی), of Sarhind. Vide Alahdad.

Faizi Kirmani (فایزی کرمانی), a poet who rendered the Tazkira of Doulat Shāh in Persian verses in the time of the emperor Akbar, and altered the division of the original, making ten periods instead of seven.

[Vide Lutfullah Muḥammad Muḥaddis.]

Faizi (Shaikh) (فیضی شیع), whose proper name was Abū'l Faiz, was the son of Shaikh Muḥarrīk of Nāgōr, and eldest brother or Shaikh Abū'l Faiz, prime-minister and secretary to the emperor Akbar Shāh. He was born on the 16th September, A.D. 1647, 1st Shāban, A.H. 954, and was first presented to Akbar in the 12th year of his reign, and introduced his brother Abū'l Faiz six years later. After the death of the poet laureate Ghizālī of Mashhad, about the year A.D. 1572, or some years after, or, according to the Māṣir-ul-Umrā, in the 33rd year of the emperor, Faizi was honoured with the title of Malik-ush-Shuaʿrā, or king of poets. In history, philosophy, in medicine, in letter writing, and in composition, he was without a rival. His earlier compositions in verse bear his titular name of Faizi, which he subsequently dignified into Fayyāzī, but he survived to enjoy his last title only one or two months, and then met his death. Being desirous of rivalling the Khamṣa or the five poems of Nizāmī, he wrote in imitation of them his Markaz Adwār, Sulaiman and Bilkais, Nal Daman, Haft Kiskwār, and Akbar Nama. The story of Nal Daman is an episode of the Mahābhārat, which he translated into Persian verse at the command of the emperor Akbar. He was the first Muslim that applied himself to a diligent study of Hindū literature and science. Besides Sanskrit works in poetry and philosophy, he made a version of the Bija Ganitā and Lilāvatī of Bhaskar Achārya, the best Hebrew works on Algebra and Arithmetic. He was likewise author of a great deal of original poetry, and of other works in Persian. He composed an elaborate Commentary upon the Qurān, making use of only those 13 out of the 28 letters of the Alphabet which have no dots, and which he named Sawāta'-ul-Illām; a copy of this extraordinary monument of wasted labour (says Elliot) is to seen in the Library of the East India House. There is also another book of the same description which he wrote and called Mawarid-ul-Kalam. Faizī suffered from asthma and died at Agra on Saturday the 4th October, o.s. 1595, 10th Safar, A.H. 1004, aged 49 lunar years and some months; and, as many supposed him to have been a deist, several abusive chronograms were written on the occasion, of which the following is one—"The Shaikh was an infidel." There is also an Insha or collection of letters which goes after his name. His mother died in January, A.D. 1590, A.H. 998, and his father in August, A.D. 1593, Zeqād, A.H. 1001. He was a profound scholar, well versed in Arabic literature, the art of poetry and medicine. He was also one of the most voluminous writers that India has produced and is said to have composed 101 books. Faizī had been likewise employed as teacher to the princes; he also acted as ambassador. Thus in A.H. 1000 he was in the Deccan, from whence he wrote the letter to the historian Budāonī, who had been in temporary disgrace at Court.

Faiz-ullah Anju (میر فیض الله انجو)

(میر), a Qāzī who presided on the seat of justice in the reign of Sultān Mahmūd Bahmanī, king of Deccan, who reigned from A.D. 1378 to 1397, A.H. 780 to 799. He was a good poet, and a contemporary of the celebrated Khwāja Hafiz. Once presenting the Sultān with an ode of his own composition, he was rewarded with a thousand pieces of gold, and permitted to retire, covered with honours, to his own country.

Faiz-ullah Khan (میر فیض الله خان), chief of the Rohelas and Jagirdar of Rāmpūr, was the son of 'Alī Muhammad Khān Rohela. After the battle of Kutra in A.D. 1774, he retired to the Kamaon hills. By the treaty under Colonel Champion, he had a territory allotted to him of the annual value of 14 lakhs of rupees. He chose the city of Rāmpūr as the place of his residence, and after an uninterrupted and prosperous administration of 20 years, he died in September, A.D. 1794, Safar, A.H. 1209, and was succeeded by his eldest son Muhammad 'Alī Khān. This prince, in the course of a few days, in 1794 was imprisoned and assassinated by his younger brother Ghulām Muhammad, who forcibly took possession of the government. The English, having espoused the cause of Ahmad Ali, the infant son of the murdered prince, defeated and took Ghulām Muhammad prisoner at Bihourā. He was conveyed to Calcutta, where, under pretence of going on a pilgrimage to Mecca, he embarked on board a ship, probably landed at one of the ports in Tipū Sultān's dominions, and thence made his way to the court of Kābul in A.D. 1797, A.H. 1212, where, united with the agents of Tipū in clamours against the English, he urged Zaman Shāh, the son of Taimūr Shāh, to invade Hindustān, promising that, on his approach to Dehli, he should be joined by the whole tribe of Rohelg. The Nawāb Ahmad Ali Khān died about the year A.D. 1839, A.H. 1255. After the death of Ahmad Ali Khān, Muhammad Sa'id Khān ascended the Masnad in 1840; after him Muhammad Yusuf Ali Khān succeeded in 1855, who was living in 1872.

Fakhri (فخری), son of Maulana Sultān

Muhammad Amiri of Herāt. He is the author of the Jawāhir-ul-Ajāib, Gems of Curiosities, being a biography of poetsesses. He informs us that with the intention to perform the pilgrimage to Mecca, he came during the reign of Shāh Tahmasp Husaini to Sind; the ruler of that country was then Isa Turkhān (who died about the year A.D. 1566, A.H. 974). Hāhī the poet calls the above-mentioned work Tazkirat-ul-Nisā. He is also the author of the Tuhfat-ul-Habīb, a collection of Ghazals from the best authors.

Fakhri (فخری), a Persian poet who wrote a Dīwān of 10,000 verses in which he imitated most of the ancient masters, but as he had not much education he was not acknowledged by other poets. He dug a grave for himself outside the Isfahān Gate and made himself a tombstone, and visited his grave every Friday. He was living in A.D. 1585, A.H. 993.

Fakhr-ud-daula (فخرالدوله), title of Abū'l Hasan 'Alī, a Sultān of the race of Bōya, was the son of Sultān Rukn-ud-daula. He was born in A.D. 952, A.H. 341, and succeeded his brother Mowaiyad-ud-daula to the throne of Persia in January, A.D. 984, Sha'hān, A.H. 373. He was a cruel prince, reigned 14 years, and died in August, A.D. 997, Sha'hān, A.H. 387. He was succeeded by his son Majid-ud-daula.

Fakhr-ud-daula (فخرالدوله), a nobleman who was governor of Patna in the reign of Muhammad Shāh, emperor of Dehli; he held that situation till the year A.D. 1735, A.H. 1148, when it was taken away from him and conferred upon Shuja'auddin Nāwāb of Bengal, in addition to that government, and of the province of Orissā.

Fakhr-uddin (فخرالدین), one of the princes of the Druses, who, early in the 17th century, conceived the idea of rendering himself independent of the Porte. He was betrayed, carried a prisoner to Constantinople, where he was strangled by order of Sulṭān Murād IV. in A.D. 1631, A.H. 1011.

Fakhr-uddin Abu Muhammad-bin-Ali az-Zallai (فخرالدین ابو محمد), (بن علی زلیعی), author of a Commentary on the Kanz-ul-Daqāeq entitled Tuḥfa'in-ul-Haqāeq, which is in great repute in India, on account of its upholding the doctrines of the Hanafī sect against those of the followers of Shāfi'ī. He died in A.D. 1342, A.H. 743.

Fakhr-uddin Bahman (Malik) (فخر الدین بهمن ملک), third Sulṭān of the dynasty of Kart or Kard, was the son of Mālik Shams-uddin Kart II. whom he succeeded to the throne of Herāt, Balkh and Ghazni in September, A.D. 1305, A.H. 705. He was contemporary with Sulṭān Aljaitū, surnamed Muhammad Khudā Banda, king of Persia, who sent an army against him which he defeated. He died about the beginning of the year A.D. 1307, A.H. 706, and was succeeded by his brother Mālik Ghayās-uddin Kart I. who died in A.D. 1329.

Fakhr-uddin Ismat-ullah Bukhari (فخرالدین عصمت الله بخاری). He died in A.D. 1426, A.H. 829. [Iḍe Asmat.]

Fakhr-uddin Jūnan (Malik) (فخر الدین مجنون ملک), eldest son of Sulṭān Ghayās-uddin Tughlaq Shāh I. On the accession of his father to the throne of Delhi, he was declared heir-apparent, with the title of U'lugh Khān, and all the royal ensigns conferred upon him. The names of his other brothers were Bahrām Khān, Zafar Khān, Mahmūd Khān and Nasrat Khān. After the death of his father in A.D. 1325, A.H. 725, he succeeded him with the title of Muhammad Shāh Tughlaq I.

Fakhr-uddin Kha'ldi (Maulana) (فخرالدین خالدي مولانا), who was commonly called "Bihishtī," is the author of a work called Sharah-Farūz. He was the master of Maulānā Mo'in-uddin Jawānī.

Fakhr-uddin Mahmud Amir (فخر الدین محمد امیر), son of Amīr Yemin-uddin Muhammad Mustūfi. He is generally known by his Takhallus or poetical name, Ibn Yemin, i.e. the son of Yemin-uddin. According to Dr. Sprenger's Catalogue, he died in A.D. 1344, A.H. 745, and left panegyrics on the Sarabdal princes and some ghazals, but it is particularly his Qita's which are celebrated.

[Iḍe Amīr Mahmūd.]

Fakhr-uddin Malik (فخرالدین ملک). [Iḍe Malik Fakhr-uddin, king of Bengal.]

Fakhr-uddin Mirza (فخرالدین مرزا), the eldest son of Bahādur Shāh II. ex-king of Delhi. He died before the rebellion, on 10th July, 1856.

Fakhr-uddin (Maulana) (فخرالدین مولانا), son of Nizām-ul-Haq, was styled Saiyad-ush-Shu'arā, or chief of the poets. He is the author of several works, among which are the following: Nizām-ul-Aqā'id, Risāla Marjia and Fakhr-ul-Hasn. He died in the year A.D. 1785, A.H. 1199, aged 73 years, and lies buried close to the gate of the Dargāh of Quth-uddin Bakhtiyār Kākī in old Delhi. His tomb is of white marble and has an inscription mentioning his name and the year of his demise. His grandson Ghulām Nasir-uddin, surnamed Kālī Sahib, was a very pious and learned Musalmān; he too was a good poet and died in the year A.D. 1852, A.H. 1268.

Fakhr-uddin Muhammad Razi (فخرالدین محمد رازی امام) (Imam) was a doctor of the Shāfi'ī sect. He surpassed all his contemporaries in scholastic theology, metaphysics and philosophy. He is the author of several instructive works, among which is one called Hadāyik-ul-Anwar, a book on different subjects which he dedicated to Sulṭān 'Alā-uddin Takashī, ruler of Khwarizm; and another called Risāla Haiyat, or Geometry, dedicated to Sulṭān Bahā-uddin Ghori. He was born at Rei on the 26th January, A.D. 1150, 25th Rāmāzān, A.H. 544, and died at Herāt on Monday the 29th March, A.D. 1210, 1st Shawwāl, A.H. 606, aged 62 lunar years. His father's name was Ziyā-uddin-bin-Umar. The title of Rāzī attached to his name is because he was born at Rei in Tabristan. He is the father of Khwāja Nasir-uddin Tūsī.

His father's name was Shaikh Jalâl-uddin Sulaimân, a descendant of Farrukh Shâh of Kâbul. He was a disciple of Khwāja Qutb-uddin Bakhtiyâr Kâkî, and was contemporary with Shaikh Sa'd-uddin Hamwî, Saif-uddin Makharrî, and Bahâ-uddin Zikaria, all of whom died successively a short time after one another. He was born in A.D. 1173, A.H. 569, died on Saturday the 17th October, A.D. 1265, 5th Muharram, A.H. 661, aged 95 lunar years, and is buried at Ajlûdhan, a place commonly called Patan or Lâk Patan in Multân. The anniversary of his death is celebrated every year on the 5th of Muharram, when a great crowd of Muhammadans assemble together to pray at his tomb.

Farid-uddin (فرید الدین کاتب), commonly called Farid Katib, was a pupil of Anwarî, a good poet and secretary to Sulhân Sanjar. When that prince was defeated by the monarch of Qara Khatâi in A.D. 1140, A.H. 535, and fled with a few followers to Khurâsan, Farid consoled him by composing an ode upon the occasion, in which he says, "that every thing must change, but that the condition of God alone was not liable to vary."

Farid-uddin Attar (Shaikh) (فرید)

(الدین عطار شیخ), surnamed Muhammad Ibrâhîm, was a dealer in perfumes, from which he took his poetical name "Attar." He afterwards retired from the world, became a disciple of Shaikh Majd-uddin Baghlâdî, and lived to a great age, namely, that of 114 lunar years. He was born at Shâdvâkh, a village in Naishâpûr in the reign of Sulhân Sanjar in November, A.D. 1119, Sha'ban, A.H. 513, and, when at the siege of Naishâpûr, the son-in-law of Chingiz Khân, the Tartar, was killed, a general massacre of the inhabitants of that place was made by the Mughals, among the number that were slain being Farid-uddin. This circumstance took place on the 26th April, A.D. 1230, 10th Jamad II. A.H. 627. He is the author of 40 poems and several prose works, amongst the latter Tazkirat-ul-Aulia.

The following are his poems:—

Asrâr Nâma.	Ilâhî Nâma

Besides the above, he is also the author of a Diwân containing 40,000 verses.

Faridun (فریدون), an ancient king of Persia, the son of Abtin, an immediate descendant of Tahmurs, king of Persia. He had escaped, it is said in a miraculous manner, from Zuhāq, when that prince had seized and murdered his father. At the age of 16 he joined Kāwa or Gāwa, a blacksmith, who had collected a large body of his countrymen; these fought with enthusiasm under the standard of the blacksmith's apron, which was afterwards converted into the royal standard of Persia, called the Dūrāsh Kāwānī. Zuhāq, after numerous defeats, was made prisoner, and put to a slow and painful death. Faridūn, who was a very just and virtuous king, had three sons, viz., Salm, Tūr, and Iraj, among whom he divided his kingdom; but the two elder, displeased that Persia, the fairest of lands and the seat of royalty, should have been given to Iraj their junior, combined to effect his ruin, and at last slew him, and sent his head to Faridūn. The old man fainted at the sight, and when he recovered he called upon Heaven to punish the base penetrators of so unnatural and cruel a deed. The daughter of Iraj was married to the nephew of Faridūn, and their young son Manuchehr proved the image of his grandfather. When he attained manhood, the old king made every preparation to enable him to revenge the blood of Iraj. A war commenced; and in the first battle Salm and Tūr were both slain. Faridūn soon afterwards died and was succeeded by Manuchehr. Persian authors assure us that Faridūn reigned 500 years.

Faridun (فریدون), a Turk who wrote a Commentary in the Turkish language on the Ghazals of Hafiz.

Farigh (فارغ), author of the poem who flourished in the time of Sultān Mahmūd of Ghaznī, was a pupil of Unsari the poet, and a descendant of the royal race of the kings of Sistān. He is the author of a work called Tarjūmān-ul-Balighat, and of a Diwān in Persian. He wrote several panegyrics in praise of Abū'l Muzaffar, the son of Amīr Nasr and grandson of Nāsir-uddīn, ruler of Balkh.

Farrukh Fa'l (فرخ قال), a son of the emperor Humāyūn by Māh Chūchūk Begum, born at Kābul in A.D. 1555, A.H. 962.

Farrukh-siyar (Muhammad) (فرخ سیر)

(محمد), emperor of Dehli, born on the 18th July, o.s. 1687, 18th Ramazān, A.H. 1098, was the son of Azīm-ush-Shāh, the second son of Bahādūr Shāh I. and great-grandson of the emperor Alungir. His father was killed in the battle fought against Jahāndār Shāh, his uncle and predecessor. One of Jahāndār Shāh's first acts on his accession to the throne had been to put all the princes of the blood within his reach to death; among those whom he could not get into his power was Farrukh-siyar, who was in Bengal at the time of his grandfather Bahādūr Shāh's death. But when the information of his father's death reached him, he threw himself on the compassion and fidelity of Saiyad Husain Alī Khān, the governor of Behār, who warmly espoused his cause, and prevailed on his brother, Saiyad Abdullah Khān, governor at Allahābād, to adopt the same course. By the aid of these noblemen, Farrukh-siyar assembled an army at Allahābād, marched towards Agra, defeated Jahāndār Shāh, took him prisoner, and having murdered him, ascended the throne in the fort of Dehli on Friday the 9th January, o.s. 1713, 23rd Zil-hijja, A.H. 1124. The former Amīr-ul-Umrā Zulfiqār Khān and many other nobles and dependants of the late emperor were put to death by the bow-string and other punishments. Rāja Subhchand, Diwān to the late Amīr-ul-Umrā, had his tongue cut out; Aziz-uddīn, son of Jahāndār Shāh, 'Alī Tabār, the son of 'Azīm

Shāh, and Humāyūn Bakht, younger brother to Farrukh-siyar were deprived of their sight by a red hot iron drawn over their eyes. On Farrukh-siyar's accession, Abdullah Khān, the eldest brother, was made Wazir with the title of Qutb-ul-Mulk, and Husain Ali Khān raised to the rank of Amīr-ul-Umrā (Commander-in-Chief) which was the second in the State. The emperor's nuptials with the daughter of Rāja Ajit Singh of Mārwar were celebrated with unprecedented splendour in the year A.D. 1716, A.H. 1128. Farrukh-siyar had not long enjoyed the throne, when a jealousy arose between him and the Wazir Qutb-ul-Mulk; and upon the emperor trying to form schemes for the recovery of his independence, he was deposed, blinded and imprisoned by the two brothers. This event took place on the 18th February, o.s. 1719, 8th Rabi' II. A.H. 1131, and not long after he was murdered on the 16th May, A.D. 1719, 9th Rajab, A.H. 1131, following, and buried in the court of the mausoleum of the emperor Humāyūn at Delhi. He had reigned 6 years 3 months and 15 days. After his deposal the Saiyids set up a prince of the blood to whom they gave the title of Rafi-ud-Darjāt. It was from Farrukh-siyar that the East India Company obtained their Farmān of free trade, with leave to purchase thirty-seven districts in Bengal, besides various privileges; little attention was however paid to it by the Subahdār till the English acquired force to give it weight.

Fatha Khan (فتح خان), the son of Malik 'Ambar, the Abyssinian chief of Ahmad-nagar in the Deccan, who had the Nizām Shāhī dominions under his control for some years. After his father's death in A.D. 1626, A.H. 1035, he succeeded to his authority; but Murtaza Nizām Shāh II. being weary of his control, took him prisoner by treachery, and confined him in the fort of Khybar. Having made his escape, he rebelled, but was again taken, and confined in Daulat-ābād. He was released in time, and appointed generalissimo by the influence of his sister, mother to Nizām Shāh. He shortly, to prevent another removal from office, confined the Sultān under pretence of insanity, and put to death twenty-five of the principal nobility in one day, writing to the emperor Shāh Jahān that he had thus acted to prevent them from rebelling against him. The emperor in reply commended his attachment, and ordered him to put the captive prince to death, which he did about the year A.D. 1628, A.H. 1038, and placed his son Husain, an infant of ten years, on the throne. Fatha Khān, by offering a present of eight lacs of rupees, and agreeing to pay tribute, was allowed to keep what territory yet remained to the Nizām Shāhī sovereignty. In the year A.D. 1634, A.H. 1044, Fatha Khān was forced to surrender; and the fall of this place put a final period to the Nizām Shāhī dynasty, which had swayed the sceptre for 150 years. Husain Nizām Shāh was confined for life in the fortress of Gwāliar, but Fatha Khān was received into favour, and was allowed to retire to Lāhore on a pension of two lacs of rupees, which he enjoyed till his death.

Firdausi or Firdausi Tusi (فردوسی یا فردوسی توسی), the poetical title of Abū'l Kāsim Hasan-bin-Sharaf Shāh, a famous Persian poet, sometimes called the Homer of Persia, whose epic poem, called Shāhnāma, written by order of Sultān Mahmūd of Ghazni, is justly celebrated. It contains the legendary annals of the ancient kings of Persia, from the reign of the first king, Kaiomurs, to the death of Yazdijard III, the last monarch of the Sāsānian race, who was deprived of his kingdom A.D. 641, by the invasion of the Arabs during the Khilāfat of 'Umar, the second Khālif after Muhammad. It was the labour of 30 years, and consists of 60,000 verses, each of which is a distich. The following circumstances respecting the origin of the poem and the life of the poet are chiefly derived from the preface to the copy of the Shāhnāma, which was collated A.D. 1426, A.H. 829, by order of Bāisanghur Mirzā the grandson of Amīr Taimūr. It appears from that preface, that Yazdijard, the last king of the Sāsānian race, took considerable pains in collecting all the chronicles, histories, and traditions connected with Persia and the sovereigns of that country, from the time of Kaiomurs to the accession of the Khusrōs, which by his direction were digested and brought into one view, and formed the book known by the name of Star-ul-Majuk, or the Bāstān Nāma. When the followers of Muhammad overturned the Persian monarchy, this work was found in the plundered library of Yazdijard. In the tenth century one of the kings of the then dynasty, directed Daqiqi (q.v.) the poet to versify that extensive work, but the poet only lived to finish a thousand distichs, having been assassinated by his own slave. Nothing further was done till the reign of Sulṭān Mahmūd, when a romantic accident furnished the Sulṭān with a copy of the Bāstān Nāma, the existence of which was till then unknown to him. From this work, he selected seven stories which he delivered to seven poets to be composed in verse, that he might be able to ascertain the merits of each competitor. The poet Unsari gained the palm, and he was accordingly engaged to arrange the whole in verse. Firdausi was at this time at Tus, his native city, where he cultivated his poetical talents with assiduity and success. He had heard of the attempt of Daqiqi, and of the determination of the reigning king Mahmūd, to patronize an undertaking which promised to add lustre to the age in which he lived. Having fortunately succeeded in procuring a copy of the Bāstān Nāma, he pursued his studies with unremitting zeal, and soon produced that part of the poem in which the battles of Zuhāq and Faridun are described. The performance was universally read and admired, and it was not long before his fame reached the ears of the Sulṭān, who immediately invited him to his court. It is related that when Firdausi, on the invitation of the Sulṭān, reached the capital Ghazni, he happened to pass a public garden where the three royal poets, Unsari, Asjadi and Farrukhi were enjoying themselves. The poets observed him approach and at once agreed that if the stranger chanced to have any taste for poetry, which they intended to put to test, he should be admitted to their friendship, and in order to decide as to his merits they settled among themselves to repeat each in turn a hemistich, and leave to Firdausi to complete the fourth, but at the same time satisfied in their own minds that there was no other word in the Persian language that would rhyme with the three which they had taken care to pre-occupy. Firdausi joining them and hearing the proposal, promised to exert his powers. They then commenced each with an extemporaneous line:—

Unsari ... The light of the moon to thy splendour is weak, Asjadi ... The rose is eclipsed by the bloom of thy cheek;
Farrukhi ... Thine eyelashes dart through the folds of the Joshan, Firdausi ... Like the javelin of Geo in the battle with Pushan.

The poets were astonished at the readiness of the stranger, and ashamed at being totally ignorant of the story of Geo and Pushan, which Firdausi related as described in Bāstān Nāma. They immediately treated him with the greatest kindness and respect, and afterwards introduced him to Mahmūd, as a poet capable of undertaking the Shāhnāma. Mahmūd considered himself never so much honoured as when Firdausi set his foot at Ghazni; he was never more proud than that Firdausi was by his command, composing, in his faultless verse, a history of the monarchs of Persia, his predecessors. No reward then appeared to him too great to offer, to induce the poet to undertake the task, no promise too splendid to excite him. "Write, unequalled one," cried he, "and for every thousand couplets a thousand pieces of gold shall be thine." Firdausi obeyed, but resolved to accept no reward till he had completed the work he had undertaken, and for thirty years he studied and laboured that his poem might be worthy of eternal fame. In this he succeeded, and presented an elegant copy of his book to Mahmūd, but the patience of the Sulṭān was exhausted, his enthusiasm was gone, his liberality had faded away, and when the 60,000 couplets of the Shāhnāma were ended, there was a pause, which brought to the poet disappointment and to the monarch such everlasting disgrace as has obliterated all his triumphs. Mahmūd received the book, coldly applauded his diligence and dismissed him. Many months elapsed, and Firdausi heard no more of his work; he then took occasion to remind the king of it by the following epigram:

'Tis said our monarch's liberal mind
Is like the ocean unconfined, Happy are they who prove it so,
'Tis not for me that truth to know.
I've plunged within its waves, 'tis true,
But not a single pearl could view.

Shamed, piqued, and offended at this freedom, the Sulṭān ordered 60,000 pieces of silver dirhams to be sent to the author, instead of the gold which he had promised. Firdausi was in the bath at the time the money arrived, and his rage and amazement exceeded all bounds when he found himself thus insulted. He immediately distributed the paltry sum amongst the attendants of the bath and the slave who brought it. The excited poet then relieved his mind by a satire full of stinging invective, and caused it to be transmitted to the favourite Wazir who had instigated the Sulṭān against him; it was carefully sealed up, with directions that it should be read to Mahmūd on some occasion when his mind was perturbed with affairs of State, as it was a poem likely to afford him entertainment. Firdausi having thus prepared his vengeance, quitted the court and was safely arrived in Māzandarān, where news reached him that his lines had fully answered the purpose he had intended they should do. Mahmūd had heard and trembled, and too late discovered that he had ruined his own reputation for ever. After his satire had been read by Mahmūd, the poet feared to remain too long in one place; he sought shelter in the court of the Khalif of Baghlād, in whose honour he added a 1000 couplets to the Shāhnāma, and who rewarded him with the 60,000 gold pieces which had been withheld by Mahmūd. Mahmūd pretended to have discovered that his Wazir had deceived him in attributing impiety to Firdausi, and he at once sacrificed that favourite, dismissing him with disgrace. Thinking, by a tardy act of liberality, to repair his former offences, Mahmūd dispatched to Firdausi the 60,000 pieces he had promised, a robe of State, and many apologies and expressions of friendship; but the poet was dead, having expired in his native town full of years and honours, surrounded by his friends and kindred. Firdausi died at Tūs (now called Mashhad) his native country in A.D. 1020, A.H. 411, aged 89 years, but Ifāji Khālfa says he died in A.D. 1025, A.H. 416. Besides the Shāhnāma, he was the author of other poems called Abūt Firdausi.

Firdausi-al-Thihal (فردوسی التمهیل), a Turkish historian, and author of the Turkish work called Shāhnāma, which comprises the history of all the ancient kings of the East. Bavazid or Bajazet II. to whom the book was dedicated, ordered the author to reduce it from its original bulk of 300 volumes to 80. Firdausi however, felt so mortified at this proposal, that he preferred leaving the country altogether, and emigrated to Khurāsān, in Persia. Firdausi flourished in A.D. 1500.

Firishta (فرشته), whose proper name was Muhammad Qāsim, and who was the author of the history called Tārīkh-i-Firishta, was born at Astrabad on the borders of the Caspian Sea, between the years A.D. 1570 or 1550, A.H. 978 or 958. His father, a learned man, by name Ghulām 'Alī Hindū Shāh, left his native country when our author was very young and travelled into India. He eventually reached Ahmadnagar in the Deccan during the reign of Murtazā Nizām Shāh I. and was appointed by the Sultān to instruct his son Mirān Husain in the Persian language, but he soon died after his selection, and Firishta was left an orphan in early youth. After the death of Murtazā Nizām Shāh, in A.D. 1589, A.H. 996, he proceeded to Bijpūr, and was presented by Dilawar Khān, minister to Ibrāhīm 'Adil Shāh II. by whose request he wrote the history which goes by his name, in the year 1023 Hijri (A.D. 1614). The year of his death is altogether unknown. Briggs supposes that it occurred in A.D. 1612, A.H. 1021, making him only 41 years of age. M. Jules Mohl supposes him to have revised his work up to at least A.D. 1623, A.H. 1033, making his age not less than 73, as he supposes him to have been born in A.D. 1550. Firishta styles his work Gulshan-i-Ibrāhimi and Nauras Nāma. Its former name is derived from the king to whom it was dedicated; and hence it is frequently quoted under the name of Tārīkh Ibrāhimi. The latter name was given to it in commemoration of the new capital, Nauras, which his patron Ibrāhīm 'Adil Shāh, commenced building in the year A.D. 1599. The first and second books, giving an account of the Dohli emperors down to Akbar, were translated into English by Colonel Dow in 1768; the history of the Deccan by Captain Jonathan Scott. But the translation of the entire work by General Briggs in four volumes 8vo., 1829, has (according to Elliot) thrown others into the shade, and is by far the most valuable store-house of facts connected with Muhammadan dynasties of India.

Firoz (فیروز), a celebrated Sūfi of Agra, author of a Persian work on Theology called 'Aqaid Sufia, written in A.D. 1620, A.H. 1036.

Firoz I. (فیروز) (the Peroses of the Greeks), a king of Persia of the Sāsānian race, was the eldest son of Yazdijard II. He succeeded his younger brother Hormuz, whom he dethroned and put to death in A.D. 458. He lost his life in a battle against the king of Transoxiana, after a reign of 26 years, in A.D. 484. Balās or Pulus or Balasus, his son, succeeded him; and after his death his brother Qubād mounted the throne.

Firozabadi (فیروزآبادی), surname of Majd-uddīn Muhammad-bin-'Yaqūb bin-Muhammad, a learned Persian, so called from his birth-place Firozabād, a village in Shīrāz. The stupendous work called Qāmūs or Qāmūs-ul-Lughāt, renowned as the most perfect Arabic Dictionary, was written by him. Those who are acquainted with the peculiarities of the Arabic language cannot open this work without feeling amazed at the literary services rendered by this learned man. He died A.D. 1414, A.H. 814.

Firoz Shah (فیروز شاہ), the son of Salīm Shāh, was raised to the throne of Dehlī at Gwāliar after the death of his father when he was only about 12 years old. He had scarcely reigned three months (or only 3 days) when his mother's brother Mubārīk Khān murdered him on the 2nd May, A.D. 1554, 29th Jumādā I. A.H. 961, and ascended the throne with the title of Muhammad Shāh 'Adil. See Bibi Bāt.

Firoz Shah Bahmani Sultan (فیروز شاہ بہمنی سلطان), king of the Deccan, was the son of Sultān Dāūd Shāh. After having deposed and confined Sultān Shams-uddīn, he ascended the throne on the 16th November, A.D. 1397, A.H. 800, with the title of Sultān Firoz Shāh Rōz Afzūn. He excelled his predecessors in power and magnificence, and in his reign the house of Bahmani attained its greatest splendour. On ascending the throne, he appointed his brother Ahmad Khān, Amīr-ul-Umūrā, with the title of Khankhānān, and raised Mir Faizullah Anjū, his preceptor, to the office of Wazīr-us-Sultānat, with the title of Malik Nāeb. He reigned 25 years 7 months and 16 days, and died on the 25th September, A.D. 1422, 15th Shawwāl, A.H. 825, ten days after resigning his crown in favour of his brother Ahmad Khān, who ascended the throne with the title of Sultān Ahmad Shāh Walī Bahmanī.

Firoz Shah Khilji Sultan (فیروز شاہ خلجی سلطان), surnamed Jalāluddīn, son of Qēm Khān, ascended the throne of Dehlī after the murder of Sultān Muiz-uddīn Kaiqubād in A.D. 1282, A.H. 688. He reigned about 8 years, after which he was obliged to go down to Karā Mānikpūr in the province of Alāhābād to punish his nephew and son-in-law 'Alā-uddīn, the governor of that place, who had rebelled against him. 'Alā-uddīn, hearing of the king's departure from Dehlī, crossed the Ganges and encamped near Mānikpūr upon the opposite bank. When the king reached the landing place, 'Alā-uddīn appeared upon the bank with his attendants, whom he ordered to halt. He advanced alone, met his uncle and fell prostrate at his feet. The king, taking him by the hand, was leading him to the royal barge, when 'Alā-uddīn made a signal to his guards, and one of his officers struck his head off. 'Alā-uddīn caused it to be fixed on the point of a spear and carried through the camp and city. This circumstance took place on the 19th July, A.D. 1296, 17th Ramazān, A.H. 695, and

'Alā-uddīn ascended the throne of Dehlī with the title of Sikandar Sānī ("second Alexander"). Firoz Shāh was the first Sultān of the second branch of the Turko-Afghān dynasty called Khiljī.

2. 'Alā-uddīn Khiljī.
3. Shāhab-uddīn Umar.
4. Mubārīk Shāh Khiljī, the last of this dynasty, was murdered in A.D. 1321, by Mālik Khusrō, a favourite slave, who ascended the throne, but was soon afterwards slain by Ghaiās-uddīn Tughlaq Shāh, the first of the 3rd branch of Afghān kings of Dehlī.

Firoz Shah Purbi (فیروز شاہ پوری), a king of Bengal, whose former name was Mālik Audāl, an Abyssinian chief, who after killing the eunuch Sultān Shāhzāda, was elevated to the throne of Bengal in A.D. 1491, A.H. 896, with the title of Firoz Shāh. He repaired the city of Gour, commonly called Lakhnautī, where he gave universal satisfaction to all classes of his subjects. He died in A.D. 1491, A.H. 899.

Firoz Shah Tughlaq Sultan (فیروز شاہ تغلق سلطان), called Firoz Shāh

Bārbak, was the son of Sipah-sālār Rajab, the brother of Sultān Ghaiās-uddīn Tughlaq, and cousin to Sultān Muhammad Tughlaq, whom he succeeded to the throne of Dehlī on the 20th March, A.D. 1351, 21st Muharram, A.H. 752, at Thatta. He was a just and learned prince. His soldiers and his subjects were equally happy under his administration, nor did anyone dare to exercise oppression in his time. He was himself the author of the work called Fatāwat Firoz Shāhī, i.e. the conquests of Firoz Shāh. In August, A.D. 1387, he abdicated the throne and resigned the reins of government to his son Nasir-uddīn Muhammad, but the prince giving himself up entirely to pleasure, was soon after expelled and obliged to fly with a small retinue to the mountains of Sirhind, and Firoz Shāh again resumed his full authority. He constructed numerous buildings and canals, as also the fort of Firozābād at old Dehlī, and after a reign of 38 lunar years and eight months, died on the 21st September, A.D. 1388, 18th Ramazān, A.H. 790, aged upwards of 80 years. The words "Wafat Firoz" (the death of Firoz) comprise the numerical letters of the year of his demise. He was buried on the banks of the Hauz Khāś, a tank built by him in old Dehlī; and was succeeded by his grandson Ghaiās-uddīn (the son of Fathā Khān) who was slain after five months. After him another grandson of the late king, named Sultān Abū Bakr, the son of Zatar Khān, was raised to the throne. He had reigned one year and six months, when his uncle Nasir-uddīn Muhammad Shāh, the son of Firoz Shāh, deposed him and ascended the throne of Dehlī in August, A.D. 1390.

Firoz Shah (فیروز شاه), one of the sons of the ex-king Bahādur Shāh II. king of Dehli, and one of the chief rebels in the outbreak of 1857. He fought the British boldly, and for a time acted with Tantia Topi in 1858; so that the British Government offered a reward of 10,000 rupees for his apprehension. It was reported in 1864 that he had made his appearance in the Seronj Jangles. Some Arabs who arrived at Haidarābād in 1866 reported that they had seen him in Arabia, and supporting himself by begging among the rich merchants. [Since this was written nothing more has been heard of this Prince.]

Fitrāt (فطرت), the poetical name of Mir Mōiz-uddīn Muhammad Mūsū Khān, a mansabdār in the time of 'Alamgīr employed as Diwān of Sūba Behār. He was a Sayyad and lineal descendant of 'Alī Mūsī Razā. He subsequently chose for his poetical name, Mūsū. He was born in Persia in A.D. 1640, A.H. 1050, and came to India, where he was much esteemed for his talents as a poet and a critic. He is the author of a Tazkirah or biography called Gulshan-i-Fitrāt, also of a Diwān. He died in A.D. 1690, A.H. 1100.

Garshasp (گرشاسب), an ancient king of Persia. Vide Karshāsp.

Gashtasp (گشتاسب) was, according to Persian history, the son of Lohrāsp, and the fifth king of the Kaianian dynasty of Persia. In his time flourished Zardāst or Zoroaster, who converted the Persians to the worship of fire. Gashtāsp, it is said, reigned 60 years, and was succeeded by Bahman his grandson, whose father Isfandaiār (q.v.) was a great warrior and was killed by Rustam some time before. He is supposed to have been the Darius Hytaspes of the Greek writers.

George Thomas (جارج ٹامس). The district of Harriana was once the field of the exploits of this famous adventurer. The Jats are a stalwart and brave race, and showed what they could do under his leadership, though when left to themselves they were so divided by factions, that Harriana has always yielded to every adventurer who had been able to attack them. Thus it was overrun by the Mahrattas, under Messrs. Bourquin and Perron, by the Rohillas under Amīr Khān, and another leader, and finally by the British. George Thomas came out to India as a common seaman, and having deserted his ship first took service with Madho Rao Sindhia about the year A.D. 1782. The famous Begam Samru of Sirdhana was then in the zenith of her power, and he left Sindhia to serve her. Shortly after, having collected a body of men, he left her, and marched down to Harriana, and in no time carved out a kingdom for himself. He made the city of Hansi his capital and built a strong fort in it. He built another fort about 20 miles to the south of the town of Rohtak, and called it after his own Christian name Georgegarh, which (perhaps from his maritime origin) the natives call Juhājgarh, or "ship-castle." After a few years the Mahrattas under Louis Bourquin invaded his territories. He listened to give them battle, and throwing himself into the small fort of Juhājgarh, he fought them for three days, though his force was infinitely smaller than theirs. His cavalry, which was composed principally of Rāghars, having gone over to the enemy, and his lieutenant, an Englishman of the name of Hopkins being killed, his troops at length gave way, and he fled on a favourite Arab horse to Hansi, a distance of about 60 miles. Bourquin assaulted the city and Thomas, after a defence of some weeks, gave himself up, and was allowed to join the British Brigade at Anupshahr. Departing thence, in charge of a Capt. Francklin, he died on his way down the river, as he was seeking to return to Europe by way of Calcutta. His great-granddaughter was the wife of a writer on a humble salary (1867) in one of the Government offices in Agra.

There is a Life of George Thomas, written by Franklin, of which a copy is to be seen in the Delhi Institute Library. [See Keene's Fall of the Mughal Empire, part iii. ch. ii. iii.]

Ghani (غنی), the poetical name of Mirzā Muhammad Tāhīr. He is commonly called Ghani Kashmīrī on account of his being a native of Kashmīr. He was a pupil of Shaikh Muhsin-Fānī, whom he excelled in his learning and became an elegant poet. He wrote a book of Odes called Diwān Ghani, and died in Kashmīr two years before his master A.D. 1668, A.H. 1079. It is said that the emperor 'Alamgīr wrote to Saif Khān the governor of Kashmīr to send Ghani to his presence. Ghani refused to go, telling him at the same time to inform the emperor that Ghani had become insane and was not worthy to be sent to his presence.

Saif Khān said that he could not call a wise man like him mad; upon which Ghani immediately really went mad, tore his clothes, and died after three days. He was a young man at the time of his death, having enjoyed a brilliant reputation for poetical excellence for about eighteen years. He sometimes uses Tahir for his poetical name.

Ghaus-ul-'Azim (غوث الاعظم), a title of the Muhammadan saint 'Abdul Qādir Gilāni.

Ghauwasi (غواصی یزدی), of Yezd, a poet, whose proper name is Izz-uddin. He is said to have composed 100,000 verses. This fertile poet, in a work which he wrote in A.D. 1543, A.H. 950, says: "The poetry which I have written amounts to 1,950 books." He made 500 verses a day, and it would appear that he put the Rauzat-ush-Shohada, the history of Tabari, the legends of the Prophets, Kaleila-wa-Damna, and the Medical work called Zakhira Khwārizm Shāhi, and many other works into verse. He died in A.D. 1553, A.H. 960, at an age of more than one hundred years.

Ghayas Halwai (غیاث حلوائی), of Shirāz, was blind and died by a fall from the terrace of a house in the time of Shāh Safī. He is the author of a Diwān.

Ghayas-uddin (غیاث الدین), author of a Persian Dictionary called Ghayās-ul-Lughāt. Vide Muhammad Ghayās-uddin.

Ghayas - uddin Bahmani (Sultān) (غیاث الدین بہمنی سلطان), the eldest son of Sultān Mahmūd Shāh I. He ascended the throne of the Deccan in his seventeenth year, after the death of his father in April, A.D. 1397. He had reigned only one month and twenty days, when Lalchān, one of the Turkish slaves, not being appointed prime minister—to which office he had aspired—put out his eyes with the point of his dagger, and having sent him in confinement to the fortress of Sāgar, placed Shams-uddin, the late king's brother, on the throne. This circumstance took place on the 14th June, A.D. 1397, 17th Ramazān, A.H. 799.

Ghayas-uddin Balban (Sultan) (غیاث الدین بلبن سلطان), king of Dehli. In his youth he was sold as a slave to Sultān Altūsh, who raised him by degrees to the rank of a noble, and gave him his daughter in marriage. On the accession of his son Nāsir-uddin Mahmūd to the throne of Dehli, Ghayās-uddin was appointed his wazīr. After the king's deposal or death in February, A.D. 1266, A.H. 664, he ascended the throne and reigned 20 years. He died in A.D. 1286, A.H. 685, aged 80 years, and was succeeded by his grandson Mōiz-uddin Kaiqubād, the son of Nāsir-uddin Baghrā Khān, governor of Bengal, who was then absent in that province.

Ghayas-uddin Kart I. (Malik) (غیاث الدین کرت ملک), fourth king of the race of Kart or Kart. He succeeded his brother Mālik Fakhr-uddin Kart in A.D. 1307, A.H. 706, reigned more than 21 years over Herāt, Balgh, and Ghazni, and died in the year A.D. 1329, A.H. 729. He was succeeded by his son Mālik Shams-uddin Kart.

Ghayas - uddin Kart II. (Malik) (غیاث الدین کرت ملک), the eighth and last king of the dynasty of Kart or Kart. He succeeded his father or grandfather Mōiz-uddin Husain Kart in A.D. 1370, A.H. 771, and reigned 12 years over Herāt, Ghōr, Sarakhs, and Nuishāpūr, and conquered Tās and Jām. He was a great tyrant, and had several battles with the Sarbadāls of Salzwār and the chiefs of Jāni Qurbāni. In the year

A.D. 1381, A.H. 783, Amīr Taimūr (Tamerlane) conquered Herāt, when Ghayās-uddin, together with his son and brother, were taken prisoners and put to death. This dynasty lasted one hundred and nineteen lunar years and two months.

Ghayas-uddin Khilji (Sultan) (غیاث الدین خلجی سلطان) succeeded his father Sultān Mahmūd Khiljī on the throne of Gujrāt in May, A.D. 1469, Zi-Qa'da, A.H. 873. When he had reigned 33 years and arrived at an advanced age, his two sons anxiously looked for his death as an event which would secure to one of them the throne of Malwā; a jealousy arose between the two brothers, who conspired against each other, till Nāsir-uddin, the eldest, having put his brother, Shujā'at Khān to death on the 22nd October, A.D. 1500, 24th Rabī II. A.H. 906, assumed the reins of government. A few days after, his father was found dead in the Saraglio; and it was supposed that poison had been administered to him by his son.

Ghayas-uddin Mahmud (غیاث الدین محمود), the son of Ghayās-uddin Muhammad Ghōrī, succeeded his uncle Shahāb-uddin in the kingdom of Ghōr and Ghazni in A.D. 1205, A.H. 602. He reigned about four years, and was assassinated by the people of Mahmūd Alī Shāh on Saturday night, the 31st July, A.D. 1210, 7th Safar, A.H. 607. He was at first buried at Firōz Kōh, but was afterwards transported to Herāt and buried there. He was succeeded by his son Bahā-uddin Sām, who was after three months defeated by 'Alā-uddin Atsiz (son of 'Alā-uddin Hasan surnamed Jahān Sōz) who reigned in Ghōr and Ghazni for four years, and fell in battle against Mālik Nāsir-uddin Husain Amīr Shikār in the year A.D. 1214, A.H. 611. After his death 'Alā-uddin Muhammad, son of Abū 'Alī, cousin of Mālik Ghayās-uddin Muhammad, was raised to the throne by Taj-uddin Eldūz.

Ghayas-uddin Mahmud Ghori (غیاث الدین محمد غوری), the son of Ghayās-uddin Muhammad Ghōrī, and nephew of Shahāb-uddin Muhammad Ghōrī, whom he succeeded to the throne of Ghōr and Ghazni in A.D. 1206. Mahmūd being naturally indolent, remained satisfied with the throne of Ghōr, and proclaimed Taj-uddin Eldūz, king of Ghazni. He died in A.D. 1210.

Ghayas - uddin Muhammad Ghori (غیاث الدین محمد غوری), king of Ghōr and Ghazni, was the son of Bahā-uddin Sām, the youngest brother of 'Alā-uddin Hasan Ghōrī. He succeeded to the throne of Ghōr and Ghazni after the death of his cousin Mālik Saif-uddin, the son of the latter, about the year A.D. 1167, and conferred the government of Ghazni on his brother Shahāb-uddīn surnamed Mo'iz-uddīn Muhammad; this illustrious general subdued Khurāsān and a great part of India in the name of his brother Ghayās-uddīn, who annexed those countries to his own dominions. Ghayās-uddīn died on Wednesday the 12th March, A.D. 1203, 27th Jumādā I. A.H. 599, and was succeeded by his brother Shahāb-uddīn.

Ghayas-uddin Muhammad (Sultan)

- (غیاث الدین محمد سلطان), the son of Mālik Shāh of the Saljūk dynasty. In the time of his eldest brother Barkayāraq the empire was divided, Barkayāraq retaining Persia; Ghayās-uddīn Muhammad, Syria and Azurbejān; and Sultān Sanjar, Khurāsān and Mawarunnahr. He reigned about the year A.D. 1095.

[Fide Muhammad (Sultān).]

Ghayas-uddin Purbi (غیاث الدین)

(پوربی) succeeded his father Sikandar

Purbī on the throne of Bengal in A.D. 1367, A.H. 775, reigned for a period of seven years, and died in 1373. He was succeeded by his son Sultān-us-Salātīn.

Ghayas - uddin Tughlak Shah I. (Sultan) (غیاث الدین تغلق سلطان), king of Delhi (also known as Ghāzi Mālik). His father Tughlaq was a slave of Sultān Ghayās-uddīn Bultān. He ascended the throne of Delhi after murdering Khusrō Shāh on the 26th August, A.D. 1321, 1st Shabān, A.H. 721, reigned three years and some months, and was crushed to death by the fall of a temporary wooden building which his son had raised for his entertainment on his return from Jakhnaunī in February, A.D. 1325, Rabi' I. A.H. 725. His son Muhammad Tughlaq succeeded him. The celebrated poet Amir Khusrō of Delhi, who lived to the end of this king's reign and received a pension of 1000 tanguas monthly, wrote the history of this prince under the title of Tughlaq Nāma. Ghayās-uddīn was the first king of the 3rd branch of the Afghān dynasty which is called Tughlaq Shāhi. The following is a list of the Sultāns of this branch:—

1. Ghayās-uddīn Tughlaq I. Mahmūd Shāh Tughlaq, last of this family, expelled by Amir Taimur.
2. Muhammad Shāh Tughlaq I.
3. Firoz Shāh Tughlaq.
4. Ghayās-uddīn Tughlaq II.
5. Abū Bakr Shāh.
6. Muhammad Shāh Tughlaq II. Ala-uddīn Sikandar Shāh.
7. Nusrat Khān.
8. Mahmūd Shāh.
9. Ikbāl Khān Mahmūd Khān restored A.D. 1405.

Ghayas-uddin Tughlak II. (Sultan)

(غیاث الدین تغلق سلطان) was the son of prince Fatha Khān and grandson of Firoz Shāh Tughlaq. He ascended the throne in place of Firoz Shāh in Delhi on the death of his grandfather in A.D. 1388, A.H. 790, but giving loose to his youthful passions, and neglecting the affairs of the State, the chiefs together with the household troops revolted, and put him to death on the 19th February, A.D. 1389, 21st Safar A.H. 791, after he had reigned six months. He was succeeded by his cousin Abū Bakr Tughlaq the son of prince Zafar Khān, the third son of Firoz Shāh.

Ghazali (غزالی). Fide Ghazzālī.

Ghazan Khan (غزان خان), seventh king of Persia of the Tartar tribe and fourth in descent from Halūkū Khān, was the son of Arghūn Khān. He succeeded to the crown of Persia after the dethronement of Baidū Khān his uncle in October, A.D. 1295, Zil-hijja, A.H. 694. He was the second emperor of the race of Chāngēz Khān who embraced the religion of Muhammad, and with him near one hundred thousand of his followers followed their leader into the pale of Islām. He was the first of this race of kings who threw off all allegiance to the Khāqān of Tartary, by directing that the name of that monarch (whom he now deemed to be an infidel) should not in future be struck on the coins of Persia. After embracing Muhammadanism, he took the title of Sultān Malmūd. He reigned nearly nine years and died on Sunday the 17th May, A.D. 1304, 11th Shawwāl, A.H. 703, at Qazwīn; he was interred in a superb mosque which he had constructed near Tauris or Tabrez. He was succeeded by his brother Aljaitū, who took the title of Muhammad Khudā Banda.

Ghazanfar Khan (غضنفر خان), son of Alawardi Khān I. and brother of Alawardi Khān II. a nobleman of the reign of Shāh Jahān and Alamgir. He was three times at different periods appointed governor of Suharanpur and afterwards of Thatta in Sindh, where he died on the 1st May, A.D. 1666, 17th Zi-Qa'da, A.H. 1077. His remains were brought to Delhi and buried there.

Ghazi-uddin Haidar (غازی الدین) (حیدر), the eldest of the ten sons of Nawāb Sa'adat 'Alī Khān of Andh. On his father's death, which took place on the 11th July, A.D. 1814, 22nd Rajab, A.H. 1229, he succeeded to his dominions as Nawāb Wazīr, and five years after, assumed, with the concurrence of the British Government, the regal dignity. His coronation took place on Saturday the 9th October, A.D. 1829, 18th Zil-hijja, A.H. 1234, at Lucknow, when he took the title of Abū'l-Muzaffar Maiz-uddīn Shāh Zaman Ghazi-uddīn Haidar Pādshāh. On ascending the first step of the throne, the minister delivered to him a crown, studded with diamonds and jewels of great value. He then put it on his head and was congratulated on the occasion by the Resident, who saluted him as king of Andh. Jewels and pearls to the value of 80,000 rupees were then scattered over the heads of the spectators, many of which were picked up by English ladies. Ghazi-uddīn Haidar died after a reign of more than 13 years, on the 19th October, A.D. 1827, 27th Rabi' I. A.H. 1243, aged 58 lunar years, and was succeeded by his son Sulaimān Jāh Nāsir-uddīn Haidar.

Ghazi-uddin Khan I. (غازی الدین) (خان فیروز جنگ), styled Firōz

Jang, whose original name was Mīr Shuhāb-uddīn, was the son of Kulick Khān Sadr-us-Sudūr, and was raised to the rank of an Amir with the title of Firōz Jang, after his father's death, by the emperor 'Alamgir in A.D. 1687, A.H. 1098. His son was the famous Nizām-ul-Mulk 'Asaf Jāh whose descendants are known to Europeans as Nizāms of the Deccan. In the reign of Bahādur Shāh he was appointed governor of Gujrāt, and died at Ahmadābād in A.D. 1710, A.H. 1122. His remains were transported to Dehli, and interred in the yard of the college built by him outside the Ajmīri Gate.

Ghazi-uddin Khan II. (غازی الدین)

(خان امیر الامیر), Amīr-ul-Umrā, also styled Firōz Jang, was the eldest son of the celebrated Nizām-ul-Mulk 'Asaf Jāh. He was elevated to the rank of Amīr-ul-Umrā after the death of Khān Daurān, and departure of Nādir Shāh to Persia, in A.D. 1739, A.H. 1152, by the emperor Muhammad Shāh. Some years after the death of his father, when his brother Nāsir Jang, who had succeeded him, died in the Deccan, he proceeded from Dehli to regain his possessions in that country, but died on his way at Aurangābād on the 16th October, A.D. 1752, 7th Zil-hijja, A.H. 1165 (new style). His remains were brought to Dehli and buried there. After his death the office of Amīr-ul-Umrā was conferred on his son Shahāb-uddīn with the title of 'Imād-ul-Mulk Ghāzi-uddīn Khān.

Ghazi-uddin Khan III. (غازی الدین)

styled 'Imād-ul-Mulk, was the son of Ghāzi-uddīn Khān Firōz Jang, the son of Nizām-ul-Mulk 'Asaf Jāh. His original name was Shahāb-uddīn, but after the death of his father in A.D. 1752, A.H. 1165, he was, by the recommendation of Nawāb Saifdar Jang, wazīr, appointed Amīr-ul-Umrā, by the emperor Ahmad Shāh of Dehli with the title of 'Imād-ul-Mulk Ghāzi-uddīn Khān. This is that Ghāzi-uddīn Khān, who afterwards became wazīr, imprisoned and blinded his master the emperor Ahmad Shāh, and assassinated 'Alamgir II. His wife was the celebrated Ganna, or Gunna (q.r.), Begum, who died in the year A.D. 1775, A.H. 1189. The year of Ghāzi-uddīn Khān's death is unknown, but according to the biography of the poet called Gulzār Ibrāhīm, he was living in A.D. 1780, A.H. 1194, in straitened circumstances. His poetical name was Nizām. According to the work called Māsir-ul-Umrā, he went to the Deccan A.D. 1773, A.H. 1187, and received a jagir in Mālwa; subsequently he proceeded to Sūrat and passed a few years with the English, and thence on a pilgrimage to Mecca. He composed Persian and Raikhta poetry, and left Arabic and Turkish Ghazals and a thick Persian Diwān and a Musnawī in which the miracles of Maulāna Fakhr-uddīn are related. Some say he died at Kalpi, A.D. 1800.

Ghazzali (غزالی امام محمد), or

Ghazālī (Imām Muhammad), who is also entitled Hujjat-ul-Islām, is the surname of Abū Hāmid Muhammad Zain-uddin-ul-Tūsī, one of the greatest and most celebrated Muslim doctors, and author of a treatise on the different classes of science which concern religion, called, Kimīā Saʿādāt, and many other works such as the Yākut-ul-Taʿwīb, also called Tafsīr Jawāhir-ul-Qirān, Akād Ghazzālī, Ahia-ul-Ulum, and Tuhfat-ul-Filāsafā. He was born in the year A.D. 1058, A.H. 450, in a village called Ghazzālā or Ghazālī, in Tūs, whence he and his brother derived their names of Ghazzālī. He died on the 18th December, A.D. 1111, 4th Jumādā II. A.H. 505, aged 55 lunar years. Some authors say that his name should be spelt Ghuzālī and not Ghazzālī, but the following verses from the Mukhbir-ul-Wasilin confirm the latter.

احمد اکس که ماه غزالی است

در دو عالم بدرجۀ عالی است

He is said to have written ninety-nine works, mostly in Arabic, a few in Persian.

Ghazzali (Maulana) (غزالی مولانا), of Tūs or Mashhad, the royal poet. He mentions in one of his Qasidas named Rauzat-us-Safā, that he was born in the year A.D. 1524, A.H. 930. He first came from Mashhad his native country to the Deccan, where being disappointed in his prospects, he went over to Jaunpūr, and was employed for some years by Khān Zamān 'Alī Qulī Khān, governor of that province, during which time he wrote a poem called Naqsh Badī'a, for which he received from his patron a piece of gold for each couplet. After the death of Khān Zamān, who was slain in battle against the emperor Akbar in A.D. 1568, A.H. 975, he fell into the hands of that monarch, who took him into his service, and conferred on him the title of Mālik-ush-Shuʿarā, or the King of poets. He was the first poet that was honoured with this title in India. He accompanied his royal master to the conquest of Gujrāt, and died there of venereal disease, on Friday the 5th December, A.D. 1572, 27th Rajab, A.H. 980. He is buried at Ahmadābād, Gujrāt, in a place called Sarkīj. He is also the author of a Diwān, and three Masnawī or poems, containing from 40 to 50,000 verses; their titles are: Kitāb Asrār, Rishahāt-ul-Haiāt and Mirat-ul-Kānāt.

Girdhar Das (گردهر داس), of Dehli, author of the history of Rām, entitled Rāmāyan, translated from the Sanskrit in A.D. 1722. This is a very celebrated Hindi poem, containing the exploits of the famous demigod Rām, who reigned over India for many years. His capital was at Audli, and his conquests extended to Ceylon, where the chain of rocks which nearly unite that island to the continent is still called Rām's Bridge. Besides this, there are two other *Rāmāyana*s, one translated by Tulshī Dās in the Bhākhū dialect, and another by Khushtar in Urdū.

Girdhar Singh (گردهر سنگه), or Girdhar Bahādur, a Rājput chief who was governor of Mālwa in the reign of the emperor Muḥammad Shāh, and fell in battle against the Peshwā Bājī Rao's officers in A.D. 1729. His nephew, Dayā Rām, who succeeded him, and had opposed a gallant resistance for some time, was defeated by Chhinājī the Peshwā's brother, and lost his life in battle about the year A.D. 1732.

[Vide Gurū Gobind.]

Gopal or Nayek Gopal (گوپل نایک),

a celebrated singer of India, who was a native of the Deccan, and flourished during the reign of Sultān 'Alī-uddin Sikandar Sānī. He was a contemporary of Amīr Khusrō, who died in A.D. 1325. It is related that when Gopāl visited the court of Dehli, he sung that species of composition called Gīt, the beauty of which style, enunciated by the powerful and harmonious voice of so able a performer, could not meet with competition:—At this the monarch caused Amīr Khusrō to remain hid under his throne, whence he could hear the musician unknown to him. The latter endeavoured to remember the style, and on a subsequent day, sung Qaul and Tarāna in imitation of it, which surprised Gopāl, and fraudulently deprived him of a portion of his due honour.

Goshyar (گوشیار), an astronomer whose proper name is Abū'l Hasan.

Gouhar Shad Begam (گوهر شاد بیگم), the wife of Mirzā Shāhrukh, the son of Amīr Taimūr. She was slain by Sultān Abū Sa'īd Mirzā for creating disturbances, in A.D. 1467, A.H. 861, at Herāt, where she lies buried on the left bank of a stream called Anjir. The grave is covered by a very high gilt dome. She is said to have been the most incomparable lady in the world. Some erroneously say that she was the daughter of Amīr Taimūr and sister of Shāhrukh Mirzā, and that she never married, but devoted herself to the perusal of the Qurān.

[Vide Mohan Lal's Journal.]

Goya (گویا), poetical name of Hisam-uddaula Nawāb Faqīr Muḥammad Khān of Lucknow. He is the author of a Diwān.

He died 2nd August, A.D. 1857, about three months after the outbreak of the Bengal Army. He was succeeded by his son Ranbir Singh.

Gulbadan Begam (گلبدن بیگم), a daughter of the emperor Bābar Shāh, sister to Humāyūn and aunt to Akbar Shāh. She was married to Khizir Khān, a descendant of the kings of Kāshghar. Khizir Khān was made governor of Lāhore in A.D. 1555, A.H. 963, and afterwards of Behār, where he died about the year A.D. 1559, A.H. 966.

Gulbarg Begam (گلبرگ بیگم), daughter of the emperor Bābar Shāh; she is also called Gulrang Begum and Gulrukh Begam, which see.

Gulchehra Begam (گلچهره بیگم), a daughter of the emperor Bābar Shāh, and youngest sister of Humāyūn, by whom she was given in marriage to Abbās Sulṭān, an Uzbek prince, at Kābul in A.D. 1548.

Gul Muhammad Khan (گل محمد خان), a poet of Dehlī who died in the year of the Christian era A.D. 1848, A.H. 1264. His poetical name was Nāṭik, which see.

Gulrukh Begam (گلرخ بیگم), a daughter of the emperor Bābar, who was married to Mirzā Nūr-uddīn Muḥammad, a person of respectable family, by whom she had a daughter named Salma Sulṭāna Begam, who was married in the beginning of the reign of the emperor Akbar, to Bairām Khān, Khankhānān, after whose death in A.D. 1561, A.H. 968, the emperor married her himself. Gulrukh Begam is called in the Mūsir-ul-Umrā Gulbarg Begam, and by some Gulrang Begam.

Gulrukh Begam (گلرخ بیگم), a daughter of Kāmran Mirzā, the brother of the emperor Humāyūn and first cousin to Akbar. She was married to Ibrāhīm Husain Mirzā, the son of Muḥammad Sulṭān Mirzā, a descendant of Amīr Taimūr. Ibrāhīm Husain, who together with his other brothers had created great disturbances in the country, was taken prisoner in A.D. 1573, A.H. 981, and shortly after put to death and his head sent to Akbar, who ordered it to be placed over one of the gates of Agra. Gulrukh Begam survived him for several years and was living at Agra in A.D. 1614, A.H. 1023.

Gulshan (گلشن), the poetical name of Shaikh Sa'd-ullāh, a mystical poet, who resided for some years at Dehlī, and left nearly 100,000 verses of Ghazals. He was a disciple of Shāh 'Abdāl Ahad Sarhindī, and made with him a pilgrimage to Mecca. He died A.D. 1728, A.H. 1141.

Gulshani (گلشنی), the poetical title of Shaikh Sa'd-ullāh, which see.

Gunnā or Ganna Begam (گنا بیگم), a princess, celebrated for her personal accomplishments, as well as for the vivacity of her wit, and the fire of her poetical genius. Several of her lyric compositions in the Hindūstānī language are still sung and admired, one of which is to be seen in the first volume of the Asiatic Researches, p. 55. She was the daughter of Nawāb 'Alī Qulī Khān, commonly called Chhangā or Shash Angushtī (from having six fingers on each hand), a mansabdar of 6000 horse. Gannā Begam was betrothed to Shujā'-uddaula, the son of Nawāb Saifdar Jang of Andh, but afterwards married to 'Imād-ul-Mulk Ghāzī-uddīn Khān, wazīr of the empire, and this rivalry is said to have in part laid the foundation of the mortal enmity which afterwards subsisted between that wazīr and Saifdar Jang. Adjoining to the village of Nūrābād near Dholpūr, two miles from Chola Sarāe, is a pretty large garden, the work of the emperor Alamgir, built in the year A.D. 1688, A.H. 1160, over the gate of which is an inscription bearing the chronogram of the year of its erection, viz. "Dida Bāgh Jāmāl." Within this garden is the monument of Gunnā Begam. Her shrine bears the following inscription: "Ah ghannā Gunnā Begam," which is the chronogram of the year of her death, viz. A.D. 1775, A.H. 1189. The poets Sōz, Souda, and Minnat corrected her verses.

Gurdezi Fathi Ali Husaini. Vide Husaini.

Guru Gobind (گرو گوبند), the son of Tegh Bahādur, a famous chief of the Sikhs. After the death of his father, who was executed by order of the emperor 'Alamgir in the year A.D. 1673, having collected his followers, he gave them arms and horses, which till this time they had never used, and began to commit depredations, but he was soon obliged to fly, and two of his sons being taken prisoners, were put to death. Being desirous of returning to his home, he prevailed on some Afghāns to conduct him, disguised as one of their devotees, through the army stationed at Sarhind; and for the remainder of his life kept himself retired, having lost his faculties in grief for his sons. He ordered his disciples to wear blue, and leave their beards and the hairs of their heads unshaved, which they do to this day. He was succeeded by Banda, one of his followers.

Habib Ajmi, Khwaja (حبیب عجمی)

(خواجہ). He was called 'Ajmi or the Persian, on account of his not being able to read the Qurān, or that he could not pronounce the words of it distinctly. He was a pious Musalmān and disciple of Khwaja Hasan Basri. He died on the 28th August, A.D. 738, 7th Rabi'zān, A.H. 120.

Habib-ullah (حبیب الله), author of an Arabic work on philosophy called Bahr-ul-Mantiq, or the Sea of Logic.

Habib-ullah, Shaikh (حبیب الله شيخ), a celebrated poet of Āgra.

Habib-ullah, Shah or Mir (حبیب الله شاه), a descendant of Shāh

Ni'mat-ullāh Walī, and an Amīr in the service of the Bahmanī kings of the Deccan. He was imprisoned, and afterwards put to death in June, A.D. 1460, Sha'bān, A.H. 864, by Suljān Humāyūn Shāh II. Bahmanī, a tyrant, who at the same time cast his brother Hasan Khān, who had rebelled against him, before a voracious tiger, that soon tore the wretched prince to pieces.

Habshi or Habashi (حبشی), a poet who having lost an eye in a scuffle, was asked by Ibrahim Pāshā, "Where is thine other eye?" and making answer, "It grew tired of stopping at home in the socket, and flew out to see the world?" was imprisoned ten years for his wit in the tower of Hero and Leander, where he daily gave vent to his feelings in such verses as the following:—

I will groan, till every stone in this cold prison-tower shall weep,
I will cry, till earth and sky, and each dark rolling hour shall weep,
I will make, that hearts shall break, and even the dowerless flower shall weep, Yea, for me, the wronged Habshi, both Musulmān and Gabr shall weep!

[So Mr. Beale: We shall perhaps run no great risk of error if we suppose Habshi to have been an Abyssinian domiciled in Egypt.—Ed.]

Hadi (هادی), a khalif of Baghdād.
Vide Al-Hādī.

Hadi (هادی), poetical name of Mīr Muhammad Jawād 'Alī Khān, who died in the year A.D. 1800, A.H. 1215, and left a Dīwān in Urdū.

Hafī (حافی), which means barefoot, is the surname of Zain-uddin Muhammad, an author, who led an austere life, and who always walking barefoot, was thus surnamed.

Hafiz Abri (حافظ آبرو), surnamed Nūr-uddin-bin-Lutf-ullāh, author of the history called Tārīkh Hāfi' Abrū. He was born in the city of Herāt, but passed his infancy in Hamdān, where he received his education. He was fortunate enough to secure the esteem of Amīr Taimūr, who sought every occasion to do him service. After the death of that tyrant, he attended the court of his son Shāhrukh Mirzā, and received from the young prince Mirzā Bāisanghar every demonstration of kindness and regard. To him he dedicated his works under the name of Zubdat-ut-Tawārīkh Bāisanghar, which contains a complete history of the world, and an account of the institutions and religions of different people down to A.D. 1425, A.H. 829. He died five years afterwards in the city of Zanjan, about the year A.D. 1430, A.H. 834.

Hafiz Adam (حافظ آدم), a Musalmān devotee and disciple of Shaikh Ahmad Sarhindi, who about the year A.D. 1673, in conjunction with the Sikh Gurū Tegh Bahādūr, having collected his followers, levied contributions with the greatest oppression from the inhabitants of his neighbourhood and pretended to royalty. He was banished from the kingdom across the Indus by order of the emperor 'Alamgīr.

Hafiz Halwai (حافظ حلوی), a con-fessioner and poet of Herāt, who flourished in the reign of Shāhrukh Mirzā, the son of Amīr Taimūr, about the year A.D. 1430, A.H. 834.

Hafiz, Khwaja (حافظ خواجه), whose proper name is Shams-uddīn Muhammad, was the most elegant lyric poet of Persia. He was born at Shirāz in the reign of Muzaffarians, and was living at the time when Amīr Taimūr (Tamerlane) defeated Shāh Mausūr, the last Sultān of that dynasty. The language of Hafiz has been styled among the Musalmāns "Lisān-ul-Ghaib," the language of mystery. From his frequent celebration of love and wine in his odes he has very appropriately been denominated, by some Orientalists, the Anacreon of Persia. He died in A.D. 1389, A.H. 791, at Shirāz, where his tomb is yet to be seen at a place called Musalla, and is visited as a sacred spot by pilgrims of all ages. After his death a collection of 569 of his odes was made by Sayyad Qasim Anwār, entitled Divān Hafiz. A few of his poems may be understood in a literal sense; but in general they are figurative, and allude to the Sūfi doctrines; most of them have been at different times translated into some of the European languages. At the head of the English translators stand Sir W. Jones, Messrs. Richardson and Carlyle. [There have been two other Persian poets of the name of Hāfiz, one of them surnamed Halwāi, that is to say, the confectioner, who lived in the reign of Sultān Shāhrukh, the son of Tamerlane, and the other was named Ajān Rūmī.] Many zealous admirers of Hāfiz insist that by wine he invariably means devotion; and they have gone so far as to compose a dictionary of words in the language, as they call it, of the Sūfis; in that vocabulary sleep is explained by meditation on the divine perfections, and perfume by hope of the divine favour; gales are glances of grace; kisses and embraces, the rapture of piety; idolators, infidels, and libertines, are men of the purest religion, and their idol is the Creator himself; the tavern is a retired oratory, and its keeper, a sage instructor; beauty denotes the perfection of the Supreme Being; tresses are the expansion of his glory; lips the hidden mysteries of his essence; dawn on the cheek, the world of spirits who encircle his throne; and a black mole, the point of indivisible unity; lastly, wantonness, mirth, and inebriety, mean religious ardour and abstraction from all terrestrial thoughts.

Hafiz Muhammad, author of the Hawī Saghir.

Hafiz Rahmat Khan (حافظ رحمت خان), a celebrated Rohila chief.

He joined his countrymen during the administration of 'Alī Muhammad Khān, who advanced him to an important station, and Pilibhit and Bareilly were given to him and Murādābād to another chief named Dūnde Khān. Having attained his office, by military ability and genius, he at length wholly superseded the authority of Sa'ad-ullāh Khān, the son of 'Alī Muhammad Khān, and was advanced to the supreme administration of affairs. He failed in his engagement to pay forty lacs of rupees to Nawāb Shujā-uddaulā of Awdh for the protection of his country from the ravages of the Marhattas, was killed in a battle fought by the Nawāb by the assistance of the English on the 23rd April, A.D. 1774, 10th Safar, A.H. 1188. His life has been translated by Elliot.

[Vide Strachey; Hastings and the Rohila war.]

Hafiz Rakhna (حافظ رخنه) is the name of the person who planted a large garden at Sirhind in the reign of the Emperor Akbar and called it "Bāgh Noulakh." He died in A.D. 1592, A.H. 1000, and a beautiful chronogram was written on the occasion.

Hafiz-uddin Ahmad, Moulwi (حفیظ الدین احمد مولوی), author of the Khirad Afrōz, an Urdu translation of the Ayār Danush, or Pilpay's Fables, which he translated for the use of the College of Fort William in A.D. 1803, A.H. 1218.

Hafiz - uddin Nasafi - bin - Ahmad

(حفیظ الدین نسفی بن احمد),

Haibat Jang (هیببت جنگ), title of Zain-uddin Ahmad, the youngest son of Hājī Ahmad, and nephew and son-in-law of Alahwardī Khān Mahābat Jang, governor of Bengal. He was the father of Nawāb Sirāj-uddaula, who succeeded Mahābat Jang in the government of Bengal in A.D. 1756.

Haibat Khan (هیببت خان). He is the author of the Tarikh Khān Jahān Lodī, Makhsuz-i-Afghānī, containing the history of Khān Jahān Lodī and of the Afghāns. Khān Jahān was a general of great reputation during the reign of the emperor Jahāngīr, but rebelling against Shāh Jahān, was killed in an engagement with the royal troops, A.D. 1631, A.H. 1087. The above work was written in A.D. 1676. There is also an abridgment of this work, by the same author, called Majma' Afghān.

Haidar (حیدر), a title of 'Alī, the son-in-law of Muhammad.

Haidar (حیدر کلچہ یا حیدر کلچ), also called Haidar Kulūj or Haidar Kulichu, because he was by profession a baker. He was a native of Herāt, and is the author of a Diwān in Persian and one in Urdū.

Haidar (حیدر) or Mir Haidar Shāh,

a gallant soldier in the service of Nawāb Sarfarāz Khān, governor of Bengal. He put the Diwān of Walī the Deccani into Mukhammas and interspersed that of Hāfiz with verses of his own. He died at Hugli in the reign of the emperor Ahmad Shāh, a year or two before or after A.D. 1750, A.H. 1164, aged 100 years. Garcin-de-Tassy thinks that he is the author of a Masnawī entitled Kissai Chandar Badon and Mūhyār.

Haidar Ali, known to contemporary

Europeans as "Hyder Naik," son of a Punjābī adventurer, born in the Deccan about A.D. 1702; distinguished himself in the service of the Maisur (Mysore) State about 1740. Deposed the Rāja and assumed the power of the State twelve years later and ruled for 20 years. His extraordinary efforts and occasional successes against the British are matter of history. Defeated by Sir Eyre Coote at Porto Novo 1781, he died 7th December, 1782. He was succeeded by his son Tipu (Tippoo).

Haidar Ali Moulwi (حیدر علی مولوی)

(فیض آبادی), of Faizābād, author of the Muntahī-ul-Kalām and several other works. He was living in Dehlī A.D. 1854, A.H. 1270.

Haidar Mir (حیدر میر). Vide Haidar Mirzā.

Haidar Mirza (حیدر مرزا), who is also called Mir Haidar and Mirzā Haidar Dughlāt, was the son of Muhammad Husain, and his wife was the aunt of Babar Shāh. He was formerly in the service of Kāmrān Mirzā, brother of the emperor Humāyūn, but being disgusted with his conduct abandoned his standard about the year A.D. 1539, A.H. 946, and joined the emperor, to whom he was afterwards of great service. In A.D. 1540, A.H. 947, he was deputed by the emperor to conquer Kashmīr, which he took in a short time; but as that emperor was soon after expelled from India by Sher Shāh, Haidar became the king of that country. In the year A.D. 1548, A.H. 955, he invaded Little Thibet, and not only succeeded in conquering that country, but subsequently added Great Thibet, Rajora and Poglu to his dominions. He reigned nearly ten years, and was killed by an arrow in a night-attack made upon his camp in A.D. 1551, A.H. 958.

Hairati (حیرتی), a poet of Marv. In reward of a Qasida which he composed in praise of Shāh Tahmāsp I. Safwī, he obtained the title of Malik-ush-Shua'rā or king of posts. Besides the work called Bahjat-ul-Mubāhij, he is the author of a Masnawī to which he gave the title of Gulzār. All his verses amount to about 40,000. He was murdered at Kashān A.D. 1554, A.H. 962.

Hairati (حیرتی) was the greatest poet of his time. He had studied at Isfahān, and was alive when Taqī Kashānī wrote his Tazkira A.D. 1585. Though he received a liberal allowance from the Persian Government, owing to his extravagance, it was quite insufficient for his support, and in A.D. 1581, A.H. 989, he came to India being attracted by the prodigality of the Quth-Shāhī kings of Golkānda.

Hajar (حجر), a very great man among the followers of 'Alī, and remarkable for his singular abstinence, piety and strictness of life, his constant purifications according to Muhammadan law, and exactness in observing the hours of devotion. He was put to death in A.D. 666, by order of Mu'āwīa I. for speaking reproachfully of him, affronting his brother Zayād, governor of Kūfa, and affirming that the government did not, of right, belong to any but the family of 'Alī.

Haji Begam (حاجی بیگم), wife of the emperor Humāyūn.

[Vide Hamida Bāno Begam.]

Haji Khalfa (حاجی خلفه), a celobrated author commonly called Mustafī Hāji Khālfa. He is the author of the work called Faṭlaka, also of the Biographical Dictionary called Kashf-uz-Zunūn, and the work called Taqwīm-ut-Tāqārīkh Rumi. The latter is a Chronological Table of remarkable events from the Creation of the world to A.D. 1648, A.H. 1058, translated from the Turkish during the reign of Sultān Muhammad IV. of Constantinople. The Kashf-uz-Zunūn was printed for the Oriental Translation Fund in 1835-50, together with a Latin translation by Professor Fluegel. It appears that Hāji Khālfa formerly bore the title of Kātib Chālpī, and if this is correct, he died in A.D. 1657, A.H. 1067.

[In Chambers' Encyclopedia the month and year of his death are given as September, A.D. 1658, and he is also said to have been the author of the Turikh Kabir, the Great History, which is a history of the world from the creation of Adam to A.D. 1655, containing notices of 150 dynasties, principally Asiatic; also a history of the Ottoman empire from A.D. 1591 to 1658, and a history of the maritime wars of the Turks, which has been translated into English.]

(محمد بیگ خان), the father of the celebrated Mirzā Abū Tālib Khān, author of the Masir Talibi. He was by descent a Turk, but born at 'Abhāsābād in Isfahān. Whilst a young man, dreading the tyranny of Nādir Shāh, he fled from Persia, and on his arrival in India was admitted into the friendship of Nawāb Abū'l Mansūr Khān Saifdar Jang. Upon the death of Rāja Nawul Rāo, Deputy Governor of Audh in A.D. 1750, A.H. 1163, Muhammad Quli Khān, the nephew of the Nawāb, was appointed to that important office, and he (Hājī) was nominated one of his assistants. On the death of Saifdar Jang in A.D. 1753, A.H. 1167, his son Shujā-uddaula became jealous of his cousin Muhammad Quli Khān, arrested him and put him to death. Hājī fled with a few of his faithful servants to Bengal, where he passed a number of years, and died at Murshidābād in April, A.D. 1769, Zil-hijja, A.H. 1182.

Haji Muhammad Jan (حاجی محمد جان)

(جان مشہدی), of Mashhad. His poetical name is Qudsi. He flourished in the reign of the emperor Shāh Jahān, who conferred on him the title of Malik-us-Shu'ara, or the Royal poet. He is the author of a poem containing the conquests of the emperor, which he named Zafarnāma. He died in the year A.D. 1645, A.H. 1055, and after him the title of the royal poet was conferred on Abū Tālib Kalim. He is also the author of a Diwān, and an Insha.

Haji Muhammad Kashmiri Maulana

(حاجی محمد کشمیری مولانا).

One of his forefathers, who was a native of Hamdān, came to Kashmere with Mir Sa'id 'Alī Hamdān. Hājī was born in that province, but came to Delhi in his youth, where he received his education. He was an excellent poet, flourishing in the time of Akbar, and died on Thursday the 22nd September, A.D. 1597, 19th Safar, A.H. 1006, o.s. He was a religious man, and had many disciples, one of whom, named Maulānā Hasan, wrote the chronogram of his death.

Haji Muhammad Khan Sistani

(حاجی محمد خان سیستانی). Ho was at first in the service of Bairām Khān Khānkhānān, after whose dismissal he was honoured with the rank of 3000 by the emperor Akbar. He accompanied Munnaim Khān Khānkhānān to Bengal and died at Gour in A.D. 1575, A.H. 983.

Haji Muhammad Qandahari (حاجی محمد قندهاری)

(محمد قندهاری). He is the author of a history which goes by his name, viz. Tarikh Hājī Muhammad Qandahārī.

Hajjaj-bin-Yusaf-al-Saqafi or Thaqafi

(حجاج بن یوسف الثقفی), one of the most valiant Arabian captains, who was made governor of Arabia and Arabian Irāq, by Abdulmalik the fifth Khalif of the Ommaides, after he had defeated and killed Abdullah-bin-Zubeir, who had taken the title of Khalifa at Mecca. In the year A.D. 693, A.H. 74, he pulled down the temple of Mecca, which Abdullah had repaired, placing the black stone on the outside of it again and restoring it to the very form it had before Muhammad's time. He was a great tyrant; it is said of him, that in his lifetime he had put to death a hundred and twenty thousand persons, and when he died had 50,000 in his prisons. He died in the reign of the Khalif Walif I. in the year A.D. 714, A.H. 85, aged 54 years.

Hakim I. (حکیم), the poetical title of a person who was a native of Mashhad, and was living about the year A.D. 1688, A.H. 1100. He was an Arabic and Persian scholar, and is the author of a Diwān and a Masnawī.

Hakim II. (حکیم), the poetical name of Shāh Abdul Hakīm of Lahore. He is the author of a work called Mardum Dida, compiled at Aurangābād in A.D. 1761, A.H. 1175. It contains an account of those poets with whom the author was acquainted.

Hakim-Ain-ul-Mulk (حکیم عین الملک)

(الملک), of Shirāz. He was a learned man and a clever writer. He traced his origin, on his mother's side, to the renowned logician Muhagiq-i-Dawani. The Historian Badaoni was a friend of his. Akbar also liked him very much. Hakīm was a poet and wrote under the Lakhnūs of Dawani. He died at Hamdiah on the 27th Zil-hijja, A.H. 1003.

[Vide Ain Translation, i. p. 481.]

Hakim Ali (حکیم علی گیلانی), of Gilān, came to India in indigent circumstances, but was fortunate enough to become in course of time a personal attendant and friend of Akbar. In the 39th year of Akbar's reign, he constructed the wonderful reservoir which is so often mentioned by Mughal historians. In the 40th year Ali was a commander of 700 and had the title of Jalinus Uzzamani the 'Galinus of the Age.' He died on the 6th Muharram, A.H. 1018.

[Vide Ain Translation, i. p. 466.]

Hakim Muhammad (حکیم محمد).

He was half-brother to the emperor Akbar, being born of a different mother.

[Vide Muhammad Hakim.]

Hakim Nur-uddin Shirazi (حکیم نور شیرازی)

(الدين شیرازی), who appears to have been either grandson or sister's son of Abū'l Fazl, asserts in his preface to the Hajāt Darā Shikohi, that he commenced his work in the 14th year of the reign of Shāh Jahāp, A.D. 1642, A.H. 1052, the above name of the book gives the year of the Hijra, and brought it to a conclusion in A.H. 1056.

title of Mir Muhammad Mahdi, a physician who held the rank of 4000 in the reign of the emperor 'Alauddin.

Halaki (هلاکى همدانى), of Hamdān, a Persian poet, though illiterate, wrote a panegyric on the accession of Shāh Isma'il Satwī II. to the throne of Persia, in the year A.D. 1576. A.H. 984, for which he received a handsome present from the king, while other poets who wrote on the same occasion received nothing.

Halaku Qaan or Khan (هلاکو قآن), also called Īkhān, was the son of Tūli Khān, and the fourth successor and grandson of Changuz Khān the Tartar. In the reign of his brother Mangū Qān, king of Tartary, he was detached, in May, A.D. 1253, Rabī' I. A.H. 651, attended by one hundred and fifty thousand horse to subdue Persia, which he soon conquered, after which he extirpated the power of the Isma'ilis, the descendants of Hasan Subhāh (q.v.), the founder of the sect, and destroyed their strongholds in November, A.D. 1256, Zil-qada, A.H. 654. He next intended to march direct to Constantinople, but was persuaded by Nasir-uddin Tusi (whom he had made his prime minister) to turn his arms against Bagdad. He marched against that capital, and after a siege of some months took it in February, A.D. 1258, 4th Safar, A.H. 656. The Khalifa Mustasim Billāh and his son were seized, and with 800,000 of its inhabitants were put to death. After these successes Halakū was desirous of returning to Tartary to take possession of the government of his native country, which had become vacant by the death of his brother Mangū Qān; but the great defeat which the general whom he had left in Syria suffered from Saif-uddin Firōz, the prince of the Mamlūks of Egypt, compelled him to abandon his design; and after he had restored his affairs in Syria, he fixed his residence at Marāgha, in Azurbaijan, where he died on Sunday the 8th February, A.D. 1265, 19th Rabī' II. A.H. 663, after a reign of twelve years from his first coming to Persia, and eight years from the death of his brother. During his prosperous reign, the literature of Persia resumed its former flourishing state; and the illustrious Persian Bard Sa'di of Shirāz was living in his time.

Halakū was succeeded by his son Abā Qān in the kingdom of Persia.

Kukhatū Khān, son of Abā Qān.

Baidū, grandson of Halakū.

Ghazān Khān, son of Arghūn Khān.

Aljaitū, the son of Arghūn Khān.

Abū Said Bahadur Khān, son of Aljaitū, after whose death the dynasty became dependent.

Halati (حالىتى), poetical title of Kāsim

Beg, who was born and brought up in Teherān, and spent the greater part of his life at Qazwin. He flourished in the reign of Shāh Tahmāsp Satwī, and wrote the chronogram of the accession of Shāh Isma'il II. in A.D. 1576, A.H. 984. He is the author of a Diwān in Persian.

Halima (حليمه), the name of Muhammad's nurse, who, it is said, had formerly no milk in her breasts, but immediately obtained some when she presented them to the new born prophet to suck.

Hallaj (حلاج). This word, which properly signifies the person that prepares cotton before it is manufactured, was the surname of Abū Mughīs Husain-bin-Mansūr.

[vide Mansūr Hallaj.]

Hamd-ullah Mustoufi-bin-Abu-Bakr-

al-Qazwini, Khwaja (حمد الله)

(مستوفى بن ابو بكر القزوينى خواجه)

also called Hamid-uddin Mustoufi, a native of Qazwin, and author of the Turikh Guzida, or Selected History, which he composed in A.D. 1329, A.H. 730, and dedicated to the minister Ghayūs-uddin, the son of Rashid-uddin, author of the Jāma'at-Tawārikh, to both of whom Hamd-ullah had been Secretary. The Turikh Guzida ranks among the best general histories of the last eleven years; after the completion of this history, the author composed his celebrated work on Geography and Natural History, entitled Nuzhat-ul-Qulūb, The delight of hearts, which is in high repute with Oriental Scholars, and which has obtained for him from D'Herbelot the title of le Geographe Persan. Hamd-ullah died A.D. 1349, A.H. 750. He was the brother of Fakhr-uddin Fath-ullah Mustoufi. See also Ahmad-bin-Abū Bakr.

Hamid (حميد), a poet, who is the author of a poem called Isnat Nāma, containing the loves of Sātin and Mīna, composed in the year A.D. 1607, A.H. 1016, during the reign of Jahāngīr.

Hamid (حامد), or Abdūl Hāmīd Yahia, a celebrated calligrapher, who reformed the Arabian characters in the reign of the Khalīf Muāwīa II. of the house of Umayya. He died in A.D. 749, A.H. 132.

Hamid Ali, Mirza (حامد علی مرزا), or more properly Prince Mirzā Hāmīd 'Alī, son of Wājīd 'Alī Shāh, the last king of Lucknow. He accompanied his grandmother the Dowager Queen of Lucknow to England to claim his right, in 1856.
[Fide Jawād Ali.]

Hamida Bano (حمیده بانو), the daughter of Malika Bano, the sister of Mumtāz Mahal, was married to Khulīf-ullāh Khān, who died in A.D. 1662.

Hamida Bano Begam (حمیده بانو بیگم), styled (after her death) Mariam Makāni, and commonly called Hājī Begam, was a great-granddaughter of Shāhī Ahmad Jām. She was married in A.D. 1541, A.H. 948, to the emperor Humayūn, and became the mother of the emperor Akbar. She is the founder the Sarāi called Arab Sarāi, situated near the mausoleum of her husband at old Delhi. She had gone on a pilgrimage to Mecca, and on her return brought with her 300 Arabs, for whom she built this place in A.D. 1560, A.H. 968. She died at Agra on Monday the 29th August, A.D. 1603, 17th Shahrēwar, A.H. 1012, aged about 78 years, and was buried in the mausoleum of Humayūn at Delhi.

Hamid Kirmani (حامد کرمفانی), poetical name of Shaikh Aohad-uddin Kurmāni.

Hamid-uddin Alī-al-Bukhari (حمید الدین علی البخاری), author of a short Commentary on the Hīdāya, entitled the Fawā'id. He died in A.D. 1268, A.H. 667.

Hamid-ullah Khan (حمید الله خان), author of the Ahādīs-ul-Khawānīn, also called Zārikh-i-Hamid, which contains a history of Chātgawn (Chittagong). Printed at Calcutta in 1871.

[Fide Hamd-ullāh Mustoufi.]

Hamid-uddin Nagori, Qazi (حمید الدین ناگوری قاضی), a native of Nāgor who held the appointment of Qāzi, and died on the 11th July, A.D. 1296, 11th Ruzmāzān, A.H. 695, and is buried at Delhi close to the tomb of Khwāja Qutb-uddin Bakhtīār, commonly called Qutb Shāh. He is the author of the book called Tuwāla-ush-Shamūs, containing religious contemplations and speculative opinions of the essence and nature of the divinity, etc., etc. The year of his death is taken from an inscription over his tomb.

Hamid-uddin Qazi (حمید الدین قاضی), of Dehli, was the author of the Sharah Hīdāyat-ul-Fiqah and several other works. He died in A.D. 1363, A.H. 764.

Hamid-uddin Umar, Qazi (حمید الدین عمر قاضی), flourished in the time of Sultān Sanjar, the Saljūki king of Persia, was a contemporary of the poet Anwari, and is the author of a Commentary on the Qurān called Muqāmāt.

Hammad (حامد), the son of Abū Hanīfa, who was a learned man, and died in the year A.D. 792, A.H. 176.

Hamza, Amir (حمزه امیر), the son of Abdul Muttalib, and uncle of Muhammad, who gave him the title of Asad-ullāh, or the lion of God, because of his courage and valour, and put into his hands the first standard he ordered to be made, which was called "Raet-ul-Islām," the standard of the faith. Hamza, who was also called Abū 'Umar, was killed in the battle of Uhud which Muhammad fought with the Qureshites, of whom Abū Sufiān was chief. After the battle Hinda, the wife of Abū Sufiān, pulled Hamza's liver out of his body and chewed and swallowed some of it. This battle took place in the month of March, A.D. 625, Shawwāl, A.H. 3.

Hamza Bano Begam (حمزه بانو بیگم), daughter of Shāh Jahān by Kandaharī Begam, daughter of Muzaffar Husain Mirzā of the royal race of Shāh Ismā'īl Safwī. She was born in the year A.H. 1019.

Hamza Mirza (حمزه مرزا), the eldest son of Sultān Muhammad Khuda Banda, and the grandson of Shāh Tahmāsp I. of the Safwī family of Persia. His father, on account of a natural weakness in his eyes, which rendered him almost blind, had at first entrusted the charge of the empire to his wazir, Mirzā Sulaimān; when that nobleman was slain, he created his own son, Hamza Mirzā, regent of the empire. This prince, by his valour, extricated his weak father from all his difficulties, with which he was surrounded. But this gleam of good fortune soon vanished. This gallant prince was stabbed by a barber, in his own private apartments on the 24th November, 1586, 22nd Zil-hijja, A.H. 994.

Hanbal, Imam (حنبل امام), or Ahmad

Ibn Hanbal, the son of Muhammad-ibn-Hanbal, was the fourth Imām or founder of one of the four orthodox sects of the Sunnis called Hanbalites. This sect made a great noise in Baghdad in the reign of the Khalif Al-Muqtadir in A.D. 929, A.H. 317. Merauzi, chief of the sect, had asserted that God had placed Muhammad on his throne, which assertion he founded upon the passage of the Qurān: "Thy Lord shall soon give thee a considerable place or station." All the other sects of the Muslims regard the explication of the Hanbalites as a shocking impiety. They maintain that this considerable place or station was the post or quality of a mediator, which they affirm to belong to their prophet. This dispute passed from the schools to the public assemblies. At length they came from words to blows which cost the lives of several thousands. In the year A.D. 935, A.H. 323, the Hanbalites became so insolent, that they marched in arms on the city of Baghdad, and plundered the shops on pretence that wine was drunk in them. Ahmad was a traditionist of the first class, and composed a collection of authenticated traditions called Masnad, more copious than those any other person had, till then, been able to form: it is said that he knew by heart one million of those traditions. He was born in the year A.D. 780, A.H. 164, and died on the 31st July, A.D. 855, 12th Rabi' I. A.H. 241, in the reign of the Khalif Al-Mutawakkil, and was buried at Baghdad. It was estimated that the number of men present at his funeral was 800,000, and 60,000 women; and it is said that 20,000 Christians, Jews and Magians became Moslems on the day of his death. In the year A.D. 835, Rannazān, A.H. 220, some time in the month September, he was required by Khalif Al-Mutawakkil Billāh to declare that the Qurān was created, but would not, and although beaten and imprisoned persisted in his refusal. The eternity of the Qurān, considered as the word of God, is the orthodox Moslem doctrine. [The modern Wahhābīs are believed to be partly followers of this teacher. See Hughes' Dictionary of Islām, in voc. "Ibn Hanbal."]

Handal Mirza (حنډال مرزا), son of the emperor Bābar Shāh and brother of Humāyūn, was born in the year A.D. 1518, A.H. 924. He lost his life in a night attack made by his brother Kāmran Mirzā on the emperor Humāyūn near Khaibar in the province of Kābul, on the 19th November, A.D. 1551, 21st Zi-Qa'da, A.H. 958. He is buried at Kābul close to the tomb of the emperor, Bābar Shāh. Humāyūn, out of affection to the memory of Handal Mirzā, in the same year gave the daughter of that prince, Raqiya Sulāna, to his son Akbar in marriage.

Hani (حنى), surname of Muhammad-bin-'Alī, a poet who died in the year A.D. 1333, A.H. 733.

Hanifa Imam (حنيفة امام), also called

Abū Hanifa and Imām 'Azim, was one of the four Jurisconsults of Mecca, viz. Imām Hanifa, Imām Hanbāl, Imām Shāfi'ī and Imām Mālik, from whom are derived the various Codes of Muhammadan Jurisprudence. He was one of the most celebrated doctors of the Muslims, and chief of the sect of Hanīfites; and though his sect is the principal of the four which they now indifferently follow, he was ill-used during his lifetime. His principal works are: the Masnad, i.e. the foundation or support, wherein he established all the points of the Muslim faith; a treatise entitled Fikah or Scholastic Divinity; and a catechism called Mu'lam-ul-Islām, i.e. the Instructor.

Another of his books is entitled the Figh-ul-Akhar; it treats of the Im-ul-Kalām, and has been commented upon by various writers, many of whom are mentioned by Hājī Khalfā. Some say that the Masnad was written by Imām Hanbāl. By the Shias he is as much detested and censured as by their antagonists he is admired and exalted. For allowing his disciples to drink nabiz, which is a wine made of dates, he is accused by the Persians of departing from the clear injunction of the Prophet against all intoxicating beverages. [At the time of his birth some of the "companions" of the Prophet were still living, which adds to his authority among the Sunni denomination.]

Haqiqat (حقیقت), poetical title of Saiyad Husain Shāh, son of Saiyad Arab Shāh. He accompanied Col. Kydd to Chināpūtan in Madras as head Munsif and died there. He is the author of an Urdu Diwān and seven other works, some of which are named Tahfat-ul-'Ajam, Khazinat-ul-Amāl, Sanamkade Chin and Hasht Gulshahi.

[Fide Husain Shāh.]

Haqiri (حقیری), poetical name of Maulānā Shāhāb-uddīn Mu'ammāl.

Harindar Narain Bhup, Maharaja

(هرندر ناراین بهوب مہاراجہ), the Rāja of Kūch Belār, who died at Benāros on the 30th May, 1839, and was aged 70 years. He was of the Rajpūst caste, and a follower of Siva, but his style of living was very unlike that of a Hindū. He used to marry without any regard to caste, and entered into the connubial relation with any women he took a fancy to. He did not even spare married women. The number of his wives or rānis was no less than 1200!.

Harī Rao Holkar (هري رאו هلكر),

Rāja of Indor, was the cousin and successor of Malhār Rāo III. the adopted son and successor of Jaswant Rāo Holkar. He died on the 24th October, A.D. 1843.

Hariri (حريري), whose full name is Abū Muhammad Qasim-bīn-‘Alī-bīn-Usmān-al-Hariri-al-Basri, was a native of Basra. He was one of the ablest writers of his time, and is the author of the Muqāmāt Hariri, a work consisting of fifty Oratorical, Poetical, Moral, Economical, and Satirical discourses, supposed to have been spoken or read in public assemblies; but which were composed by the author at the desire of Anūshirwān-ibn-Khildī, wazīr to Sulṭān Muhammad Suljūqī. He died at Basra in the year A.D. 1122, A.H. 516. Poets, historians, grammarians and lexicographers look upon the Muqāmāt as the highest authority, and next to the Qurān, as far at least as language is concerned. His book has been translated either entirely or partially into nearly every Eastern and European tongue.

Harkaran (هركرن), the son of Mathura

Das, a Kambōh of Multān, was a Munshī in the service of Nawāb Ya‘tībār Khān, and is the author of a collection of letters called Inshāe Harkaran, or the Forms of Harkaran, translated into English by D. Francis Balfour, M.D. The second edition of this work was printed in 1804.

Harun-al-Rashid (هارون الرشيد).

Vide Al-Rashid.

Hasan (حسن بن سہیل), son of Suhail or Sahl, was governor of Chaldea about the year A.D. 830, under the Khalif Al-Māmūn, who married Tūrān Dukht his daughter. Some attribute to this Hasan the translation of the Persian book entitled Jawād in Khirad into Arabic.

Hasan (حسن), poetical name of Muhammad Hasan, who flourished in the reign of the emperor Shāh ‘Alam of Delhi.

Hasan Abdal (حسن عبدال), or Baba

Hasan Abdāl, a famous saint who was a Sayyid at Sabzwār in Khurāsān. He came to India with Mirzā Shahrūkh, son of Anser Taimūr, and died at Qandahār, where his tomb is resorted to by pilgrims. Jahāngir says in the Tizak that the place Hurasadak is 75 kos from Kashmere.

Hasan ‘Alī (حسین علی), the poet laureate in the service of Tipū Sulṭān of Mysore. He is the author of a book called Bhogla, or the Kok Shāstar. It is a curious but obscene satire on women, said to be a translation or paraphrase from the Sanskrit in Hindi verse. There is another translation of the same book in Persian prose called Lazzat-un-Nisa, by Ziyā-uddin Nakhshabī.

Hasan Askari, Imam (حسن عسکری), or Abū’l Hasan ‘Alī-al-‘Askarī, was the eleventh Imām of the race of ‘Alī, and the eldest son of Imām ‘Alī Naqī who was the tenth. He was born at Madina in the year A.D. 846, A.H. 232, and died on the 6th November, A.D. 874, 22nd Muharram, A.H. 261, aged 28 years. He is buried at Sarmanrāi in Baghdād close to the tomb of his father.

Hasan Basri, Khwaja (حسن بصری)

خواجہ, a native of Basra and a very pious Musalmān, who is said to have possessed all the branches of science, and was noted for self-mortification, fear of God and devotion. He is the author of a Diwān or book of Odes in Arabic. He was born in A.D. 642, A.H. 21, and died on the 11th October, A.D. 728, 1st Rajab, A.H. 110, aged 89 lunar years, and was buried at Basra.

Hasan Beg (Khani, Badakhshi)

(حسن بیگ خانی بدخشی),

Shaikh Umari was a good soldier. He was made a commander of 2,500 for his services in Bangash, and was put, towards the end of Akbar's reign, in charge of Kabul, receiving Fort Rohtas in the Panjāb as jagir. Hasan Beg, after making a useless attempt to incriminate others, was put into a cow-hide and in this state he was tied to donkeys and carried through the bazaar. He died after a few hours from suffocation.

[Vide Āin Translation, i. p. 454.]

Hasan-bin-Muhammad Khaki-al-

Shirazi (حسن بن محمد خاکی)

الشیرازی, who came to India in the time of the emperor Akbar and obtained different offices under the government. He is the author of a history also called Muntakhib-ut-Tawārikh, besides the one written by Abdu Qādir Badāonī. He commenced the work before the close of Akbar's reign, i.e. A.D. 1610, A.H. 1019, in which year, he tells us, he was appointed Diwān of Patna.

Hasan-bin-Muhammad Sharif (حسن بن محمد شریف)

(بن محمد شریف), author of the Anis-ul-'Tashahq, the lover's companion, containing an explanation of all the metaphors and phrases used by the poets; with numerous quotations from those held in the greatest estimation.

[Vide Qhadim.]

Hasan-bin-Sabah (حسن بن صباح).

Vide Hasan Sabbah.

Hasan Buzurg (حسن بزرگ), also called Sheikh Hasan, Amir Hasan Ilqani, and Amir Hasan Navian, Kayukai, the son of Amir Ilqan Jalayer. He was an immediate descendant of Sultan Arghun Khan, king of Persia (whose sister was his mother), and one of the principal chiefs of the Mughals in the reign of Sultan Abu Sa'id. He married Baghdad Khatin, daughter of Amir Choban or Jovian, but the prince being deeply enamoured of her charms, Amir Hasan, after the death of her father, was forced to resign his consent to him in A.D. 1327, A.H. 728. A few years after the death of Abu Sa'id, Amir Hasan married his widow Dilshad Khatin, went to Baghdad, seized that city, and became the founder of a petty dynasty of princes. His life was passed in contests to establish his authority over the territories of Baghdad, and he died before this object of his ambition was accomplished, in July, A.D. 1356, Rajab, A.H. 757. His son Sultan Owes Jalayer was more fortunate; he not only succeeded in completing the conquest his father had commenced, but carried his arms into Azarbejan and Khurasan. Sultan Owes died in October, A.D. 1374, A.H. 776, and left his government to his second son Sultan Husain Jalayer. This excellent prince, who is also alike celebrated for his benevolence and love of justice, lost his life in an action in A.D. 1382, A.H. 784, with his brother Ahmad, surnamed Ilqani, a cruel and unjust ruler, whose enormities compelled his subjects to invite Amir Taimur (Tamerlane) to their relief in A.D. 1393, and almost the whole of the future life of Ahmad passed in an ineffectual struggle with that conqueror. He fled to Egypt for safety, and when, after the death of Taimur, he returned to recover his dominions, he was taken and put to death by Qara Yusef, a Turkman chief, in A.D. 1410, A.H. 813.

Hasan Ganga. Vide Ala-ad-din I.Hasan Imam (حسن امام), the eldest son of 'Ali, the son of Abu Talib, and Fatima, the daughter of Muhammad; was born on the 1st March, A.D. 625, 15th Ramezan, A.H. 3. After the death of his father in January, A.D. 661, Ramezan, A.H. 40, he succeeded him as second Imam, and was proclaimed Khalif by the Arabians, but perceiving the people divided and himself ill-used, he after six months resigned the Khalifat to Mu'awia, who assigned to him about 5,000 pounds a year, besides large presents. After this Hasan and his brother Husain retired and lived privately at Madina, where after a few years he died of poison, administered to him by one of his wives, whom Yazid, the son of Mu'awia, suborned to commit that wickedness, on the promise of marrying her afterwards; though instead of a new husband, she was forced to be contented with a good sum of money which Mu'awia gave her for her pains; for Yazid was not so mad as to trust himself to her embraces. Hasan's murder took place on the night of the 17th March, A.D. 669 or 670, 7th Safar, A.H. 49. He was buried in Madina at a place called Baqia. Hasan is said to have been in person very like his grandfather, Muhammad, who, when he was born, spit in his mouth and named him Hasan. He had twenty children—fifteen sons and five daughters. Though his wives were remarkably fond of him, yet he was apt very frequently to divorce them and marry new ones.

Hasan Kashi, Maolana (حسن کاشی)

(مولانا), a poet who was a native of Kashan. He is the author of many Qasidas and Ghazals. The year of his death is not known, but he appears to have flourished about the 8th century of the Hijri era.

Hasan Khwaja (حسن خواجه).

Vide Hasan Sanjari.

Hasan Khwaja (حسن خواجه), a darwesh, the son of Khwaja Ibrahim. He is the author of a Diwan of Ghazals, in the last verses of each of which he has mentioned the name of his beloved.

Hasan Kochak, Shaikh (حسن کوچک)

(کوچک شایخ), a grandson of Amir

Choban or Jovian. He was one of the chiefs who, during the period of trouble and confusion which took place after the death of Sultan Abu Sa'id, king of Persia, in A.D. 1335, rose to eminence. He fought several battles with Amir Hasan Buzurg (q.v.), and met his death accidentally by the hands of a quarrelsome wife, in December, A.D. 1343, Rajab, A.H. 741.

Hasan Maimandi (حسن میمندی).

It is asserted by some that he was one of the ministers of Sultan Mahmud of Ghazni. This statement is altogether incorrect and unfounded, says Sir H. Elliot, as it is not mentioned by any great historian. But his son who is commonly called Ahmad-bin-Hasan Maimandī was a minister of that monarch. Hasan Maimandī was, during the lifetime of Sulṭān Nāsir-uddīn Subuktigin, employed as Diwān or Collector of Revenue at Qasba Bust; but Nāsir-uddīn was led by the secret machinations of his enemies to entertain an unfavourable opinion of him, till he was at last, in consequence of his having been convicted of extortion and fraud to a large amount, hanged by order of that Sulṭān; so that the general notion which prevails that he was the wazīr of Sulṭān Mahmūd, is erroneous.

Hasan, Mir (حسن میر), a Hindūstānī poet of Lucknow, and author of the novel called Mamari Mir Hasan, containing the loves of Badr-i-Munir and Benazir in Urdū verse, which he completed and dedicated to Nawāb 'Asaf-uddaula in the year A.D. 1785, A.H. 1199. It is also called Sahr-ul-Bayān. His ancestors were of Herāt, but he was born at Dehli and went early in life to Lucknow, where he was supported by Nawāb Safdar Jung and his son Mirzā Nawāzish Ali Khān. He is also the author of a Diwān of about 8000 verses, and of a Tazkira of Urdū poets. He died in A.D. 1790, A.H. 1204. His father's name was Mir Gulām Husain Zāhik.

Hasan Mirza (حسن میرزا), son of Mulla Abdur Razzāq of Lahijān. He has left some noble compositions, such as The True Light on the articles of Faith, The Beauty of good Men in their Works, a pious treatise, and some others. He died in the beginning of the 18th century.

Hasan, Maulana (حسن مولانا), a learned Muslimān who lived in the time of the emperor Jahāngir and wrote a chronogram on the sudden death of Shaikh 'Alī Ahmad, son of Shaikh Husain Nagshi, in the year A.D. 1609, A.H. 1018.

Hasan Mutkallim, Maulana (حسن)

(متکلم مولانا), a poet and pupil of Maulānā Muzaffar of Herāt. He flourished in the reign of Malik Ghayas-uddīn Kartīb, in whose name he composed a book on the art of poetry.

Hasan Rafi (حسن رفیع), a Persian poet.

Hasan Sabbah (حسن صباح), the founder of the dynasty of the Isma'ītis in Persia. He was styled Shaikh-ul-Jubal, an Arabic title, which signifies "the chief of the mountains." The name by which this ruler and his descendants are indiscriminately known in European history is, "The Old Man of the Mountain." His followers or descendants were also called Hasanī, and the English word "assassin," is supposed to have been formed from a corruption of this term. Hasan Sabbāh was at first a mace-bearer to Sulṭān Alp Arslān; but in consequence of a quarrel with Nizām-ul-Mulk, the minister of that prince, he retired to Rai, his native country, and from thence, to Syria, where he entered into the service of a chief of the family of Ismā'īl the son of Ja'far Sādiq, and adopted the tenets of that sect. The first object of Hasan was to possess himself of a stronghold; and he succeeded in gaining by stratagem the mountain fort of Alahmūt, situated between Qazwīn and Gilān. The fort was built by Hasan-bin-Zaid in the year A.D. 860, A.H. 246, and Hasan Sabbāh took it in A.D. 1089, A.H. 482. From this fortress he commenced depredations on the surrounding country, and added several other hill forts to the one he had already seized. That of Rōdbār, which is also near Qazwīn, was next to Alahmūt in consequence. Malik Shāh Saljūki, the reigning Sulṭān, had sent a force to reduce him, but without any success. In the month of October, A.D. 1092, Ramazān, A.H. 485, Nizām-ul-Mulk, who was then following the royal camp from Isfahān to Baghdād, was stabbed by one of the followers of Hasan Sabbāh who was his personal enemy. Hasan Sabbāh died in A.D. 1124, 26th Rabi' II. A.H. 518. Rukn-uddīn, who was the last of this family, and who is better known under the name of Qāhir Shāh or K'ūr Shāh, after a weak and ineffectual struggle fell before Halākū. That conqueror not only made him prisoner, but took and dismantled all his strongholds. This event took place in the month of November, A.D. 1256, Zi-Qada' A.H. 654. It was his father Ala-uddīn Muhammad who forced Nāsir-uddīn Tāsi to remain with him for some years, till he was released by Halākū Khān. Vide Isma'il and Isma'ītis. The successor of Hasan was Buzurg Umaid. [Hasan Sabbāh and the minister had both been schoolfellows at Umar Khūyūm (q.v.).]

Hasan Salimi (حسن سلیمی). Vide Salimi.

Hasan Sanjari, Khwaja (حسن)

(ساجری خواجه), also called Khwāja

Hasan Dehlawī, a celebrated Persian poet of Dehli, who was a contemporary of the famous Amīr Khusrō, and had become at the age of 50 years a disciple of Shaikh Nizām-uddīn Auliā. He died, according to the author of the Mirāt-ul-Khayāl, in the Deccan in the year A.D. 1307, A.H. 707, and is buried at Daulatābād. He is the author of several works, amongst which is a Diwān, and one called Fawā'id-ul-Fawā'id, a collection of letters written by Nizām-uddīn Auliā to his disciples. Talib says he died in A.D. 1337, A.H. 738. His father name was Alai Sanjari.

Hasan, Shaikh (حسن شيخ), the son of Shaikh Nazar-ullāh. He is the author of a work called Sarat Istakam. He died in Mirat in the year A.H. 1078.

Hasan Khan Shamlu (حسن خان)

(شاملو), governor of Herat under

Shāh Abbās II. and his son Shāh Sulaimān. He died in A.D. 1697, A.H. 1109, and is the author of a Diwān.

Ghazni, a poet who flourished in the reign of Sultān Bahrām Shāh the Ghaznavid, and is the author of a Diwān. He is also called Sayyad Hasan-al-Husaini. He died on the way while returning from Mecca, in the year A.D. 1170, A.H. 565.

Hasham (هشام بن عبد الملك), the son of Abdūl Malik, and the tenth Khalif of the house of Umayyā or Ummayyids, succeeded his brother Yazid II. in A.D. 724, A.H. 105. He conquered the Khāqān of Turkistān, and made war against Leo III. the Isaurian. He was always attended by 600 camels to carry his splendid wardrobe. He died after a reign of 19 months 7 months and 11 days in the year A.D. 743, A.H. 125, and was succeeded by Walid II. son of Yazid II. In his time lived the celebrated Majnūn, the lover of Laili.

Hashim (هاشم), a poet who flourished at Burhānpūr in the Deccan in the reign of the emperor Jahāngir and was a disciple of Shaikh Ahmad Farūqi, commonly called Shaikh Ahmad Sarhindī. He is the author of a Diwān and several other books, and was alive in A.D. 1616, A.H. 1056.

Hashim (هاشم), the son of Abdūl

Munāf, was the father of Abdūl Muttalib, who was the father of Abdullah and grandfather of Muhammad the prophet of the Musulmāns. He succeeded his father as president of the Ka'ba, and raised the glory of his people to the highest pitch; inasmuch that the neighbouring great men and heads of tribes made their court to him. Nay, so great veneration is the memory of Hashim held in by the Arabs, that from him the family of Muhammad among them are called Hashimites. He died at Ghaza in Syria, and was succeeded by his son Abdūl Muttalib, who became president of the Ka'ba.

Hashimi Kirmani (هاشمي كرماني), author of a poem or Masnawi called Machar-ul-Asar. He died in A.D. 1541, A.H. 948.

Hashmat (حشمت), the poetical

name of Mīr Muhtashim Ali Khān, whose ancestors were of Badakhshān, but he was born in Dehli. He died about the year A.D. 1748, A.H. 1161, and left a Diwān of 700 verses.

Hashmat (حشمت), the poetical

name of Bakhshī Ali Khān, which see.

Hasrat (حسرت), the poetical name of Sayyad Muhammad, who died in the reign of the emperor Muhammad Shāh.

Hasrat (حسرت), poetical name of Mir Muhammad Hayāt of Patna who had the title of Haibat Quli Khān. He was for some time attached to the service of Nawāb Shaukat Jang at Purania, and for some time to that of Sirāj-uddaula of Murshidābād. He died in A.D. 1800, A.H. 1215, and left a Diwān of 2000 verses.

Hasrat (حسرت), poetical appellation of Mirzā Ja'far 'Alī, an Urdū poet who flourished in the latter part of the 18th century, and gave instructions in the art of poetry to Nawāb Muhabbat Khān at Lucknow.

Hasrati (حسرتي). Vide Shefta.

Hatifi, Maulana (هاتفی مولانا), the poetical name of Abd-ullāh, the son of Maulānā Abdur Rahmān Jāmi's sister. He was born in Jām, a city of Herat, and died there in the year A.D. 1521, A.H. 927, and was buried in the village of Kharjard. He was a good poet, and author of several works. Having finished his studies, under the patronage and instruction of his uncle Hātifi, with his permission, secluded himself from the world. When Shāh Isma'īl Safwi fought the Uzbek Tartars in Khurāsān, and slew Shāhibeg Khān their chief in A.D. 1608, A.H. 914, he prevailed on our poet to quit his cell, and come to court. Solely ambitious of rivalling the Khamsa or five poems of Nizāmī, he wrote in imitation of them his Laili and Majnūn, Khusro and Shirin, Haft Mansar, the Taimur Nama, which is also called Zafarnama, and in imitation of the Sikandar Nāma, he undertook a heroic poem in praise of his patron, called Fatuhāt Shahi, which he did not live to finish. Among the numerous Persian poems on the story of Laili and Majnūn, that of Hātifi seems universally esteemed the simplest and most pathetic.

Hatim (حاتم طائي), commonly called

Hātīm Tāi, a famous Arabian Chief of the tribe of Tāi, celebrated for his liberality, wisdom and valour. He flourished before the birth of Muhammad, and his sepulchre may still be seen at a little village called Anwarz in Arabia. There is an account of his adventures in the romance entitled Hātim Tū in Persian, which has also been translated into Urdū. An English translation of this romance was made by Duncan Forbes, A.M., from the Persian.

Hatim (حاتم اسم), surnamed Al-

Asamm, that is to say, the deaf, was a great Musulmān doctor, much esteemed for his piety and doctrine. He was a disciple of Shaḡiq Balkhī and master of Ahmad Khizroya. He died A.D. 851, A.H. 237, in the reign of Mutwakkil the Khulif of Baghdād, and was buried at Balkh in Khurāsān, his native country.

Hatim Kashi, Maulana (حاتم كاشي)

(مولانا), a poet of Kāshān in Persia, who flourished in the reign of Shāh Abbās the Great.

Hatim (حاتم), or Shāh Hātim, poetical name of Shaikh Zahir-uddīn, a poet who was a contemporary of Walī (q.v.). He was born at Dehli in A.D. 1699, A.H. 1111, and was a soldier by profession. He gave the first impulse to Urdū poetry in Dehli. In A.D. 1720, A.H. 1132, the Diwān of Walī was brought to Dehli and verses of it were on everybody's lips; this induced him and three friends of his, Nāḡī, Māzmūn, and 'Abrū to apply themselves to Rikhta poetry. Up to the time of Hātim, it would appear that the Dehli poets wrote in Persian. He is the author of two Diwāns in Urdū, one in imitation of Walī, and the other in imitation of Sauda and Mīr Taqī. The date of Hātim's death is unknown. His Diwān Zada appeared in 1750.

Hatim Ali Bag, Mirza (حاتم علي)

Hawas (هوس), poetical title of Nawāb

Mirzā Taqī, son of Nawāb Mirzā Ali Khān. He is the author of the story of Laili and Majnūn in Urdū, and of a Diwān in which every Ghazal contains the name of Laili and Majnūn.

Haya (حیا), poetical title of Shio

Rāmdās, a Hindū, and brother of Rāja Dayā Mal Imtiyāz. He was a pupil of Mirzā Abdāl Qādir Bedil, and is the author of a Diwān of about 5000 verses.

Hayat-ullah Ahrari (حيات الله)

(اراری), author of the work called

Hakata Aharfen, which contains the life of Abraham. He died in A.H. 1061, and his tomb is in Āgra.

Hayati Mulla (حياتي ملا), of Gilān,

a poet.

Hazin (حزین مولانا شیخ محمد علی), the poetical name of Maulānā Shaikh Muhammad 'Alī, a Persian of distinction, eminently learned, and accomplished. He fled into Hindustān from his native country to avoid the persecution of Nadir Shāh in A.D. 1733, A.H. 1146. He was a voluminous author both in prose and verse. He wrote his Memoirs in 1741, eight years after his settlement for life in India, and it contains a variety of personal and historical anecdotes, excellent observations on men and manners, besides an interesting account of his travels, and remarks on many modern literary productions. A translation of this work, entitled The Life of Shaikh Muhammad Ali Hazin, was made by F. C. Belfour, F.R.A.S., and published in 1830. His father's name was Shaikh Abū Tālib of Gilān, a descendant of Shaikh Tajuddin Ibrāhīm, commonly called Shaikh Zāhid Gilāni, who was the spiritual guide of Shaikh Safi-uddin Ardibeli. He was born at Isfahān on the 7th January, 1692, o.s., 27th Rabi' II. A.H. 1103, was in Dehli at the time of Nadir Shāh's invasion, and died in 1766, according to Sir Wm. Ouseley, A.D. 1779, A.H. 1180, aged 77 lunar years, at Banaras (where he had built his own tomb some time before his death) equally admired and esteemed by the Musalmān, Hindū and English inhabitants of that place. He is the author of several works in Persian and Arabic.

Hazuq, Hakim (حاذوق حکيم), son of Hakim Humām, the brother of Abū'l Fatha Gilāni. He was a noble of the reign of the emperor Shāh Jahān, a physician and a poet, and is the author of a Diwān in Persian. He died A.D. 1658, A.H. 1068.

Hessing, Colonel John William, of Holland. He came to India and was at first employed by the Nawāb Nizām Ali Khān of the Deccan in the year A.D. 1763, A.H. 1177, and afterwards by Mādho Rāo Sindhia in 1784, after whose death in 1794, he continued in the service of his nephew Daulat Rāo Sindhia, by whom he was appointed a Colonel in 1795, with the command of the fortress and city of Āgra. He died on the 21st July, 1803, and was buried in the Roman Catholic Burial-ground at Āgra, where a splendid mausoleum of red stone was built by his children, with an English inscription on his tomb which is of white marble.

Hidayat (هيدایت), poetical name of Hidayat Khān, the uncle of Nisār-ullāh Khān Firāk. He died in the year A.H. 1215, and left a Diwān.

Hidayat-ullah (هیدایت اللہ), author of a work on arts and sciences called Hidāyat-ul-Ramāl, written in A.D. 1601.

Mirzā Koka. He is the author of a history called Tarīkh Hidayat-ullāh Khān written in the year A.H. 1659.

Hijri (هجری), the poetical title of a poet who was a native of Konbān but lived in Bengal. He is the author of a Diwān in which there is a Qasida of a most wonderful composition. If you read the first letter of every Misra, you have a Qita in praise of Nawāb Sayyad Muhammad Riza Khān Muzaffar Jang. Some letters in the Qasida are written in red, if you read them by themselves, you have a Ghazal, and certain letters in the Ghazal form a Rubai, and certain letters in the Rubai form a Misra. He was living in A.D. 1766, A.H. 1180.

Hilal Qazwini (هلال قزوینی), an author who died in A.D. 1527, A.H. 934.

Hilali (هالی استرابادی), of Astarābād, was a Tartar of the tribe of Jughtai or Chughtai, and author of a Diwān consisting of amorous odes. In his youth he travelled to Khurāsān, and resided at Herāt, where the illustrious Amīr 'Alī-shīr conferred on him many favours. He was a Sunnī by religion, and was, by the contrivance of his enemies, who were Shīas, put to death by order of one of the Uzbek chiefs in the year A.D. 1530, A.H. 936, but according to a book called Tuhfa Shāhī, in A.D. 1533, A.H. 939. He is the author of the following works, viz., Shāh-wa-Darwāsh, Laili-wa-Majnūn, Sifāt-ul-Ashqām, and a Diwān.

Hilm (حلم), poetical name of Prince

Mirzā Saūd-uddin, commonly called Mirzā Faiyāz-uddin, son of Mirzā Kayāz-uddin alias Mirzā Muhammad Jān, son of Mirzā Khurram Bukht, son of Mirzā Jahāndar Shāh, son of Shāh Alam, king of Delhi. He is the author of a Diwān.

Himmat Bahadur Gushain (همت بهادر گشاین), Diwān of Ghanī Bahā-dur, Nawāb of Banda, and one of the Peshwa's (Bāji Rao II.) principal officers in Bundelkhand. He joined the British troops under the command of Lieutenant-Colonel Powell in September, 1803, and gave battle to Shamsah Bahādur, Nawāb of Banda, who was defeated and compelled to retreat with loss. Himmat Bahādur was a powerful commander of a large body of horse, and of a numerous party of Gushāins or Nagas, a peculiar class of armed beggars and religious devotees of whom he was not only the military leader, but also the spiritual guide. He died at Kalpi in 1804, and his family was provided for by the British Government.

[Indo Hunter's Imperial Gazetteer, in voc. Kalpi.]

Himmat Khan (همت خان), was the son of Khān Jahān Shāyasta Khān, the son of the wazīr Asaf Khān. He built his house on the banks of the river Jamna in a year with many other buildings such as gardens, reservoirs, baths, etc., etc., of which a bath, a reservoir, a Baoli, etc., etc., are still to be seen. His proper name was Sayyad Muzaffar. Shāh Jahān conferred on him the name of Himmat Khān. In the 19th year of Alamgir he was appointed governor of Allahābād. In the 24th year of Alamgir, the appointment of Baklāgani was conferred on him; and in the 30th year of Alamgir, he was again appointed governor of Allahābād.

Himū (هیمو), a banfān or Indian shopkeeper of the caste of Dhūsar, whom Salīm Shāh, king of Delhi, had made superintendent of the markets. In the reign of Muhammad Shāh 'Adil, he was appointed his wazīr, and intrusted with the whole administration of affairs. This person in the beginning of the reign of the emperor Akbar laid siege to Agra, and having reduced it proceeded to Delhi which also surrendered, and Tardi Beg, governor of that place, who fled to Surhind, was seized by Bairām Khān (q.v.), the minister of Akbar, and belaboured for abandoning Delhi, where he might have defended himself. Himū was afterwards defeated and made prisoner in a battle fought at Panipat on Thursday the 5th November, A.D. 1556, 2nd Muharram, A.H. 964, and brought into the presence of the king by Bairām Khān, who begged him to kill the infidel with his own hand. Akbar (who was then in his fifteenth year) in order to fulfil the wish of his minister, drew his sword and touched the head of the captive, while Bairām Khān, drawing his own sabre, at a single blow severed the head of Himū from his body.

Hinda (هندہ), the daughter of Utba and wife of Abū Sufiān.

[Ido Hamzā (Amir).]

Hindal Mirza (هندال مرزا), Vide

Handal Mirzā.

Hindu Rao (هندو راو), the brother of Bijā Bāi (q.v.), the wife of Maharājā Daulat Rao Sindhiā. His Kothī or Rekka House on a hillock is well-known at Delhi. He died in A.D. 1856. [He was fond of the society of Englishmen in India, among whom he was very popular.]

Hira Singh (هرا سینگ), a Sikh

Chief and minister of Maharāja Dilip Singh of Lahore. He was murdered with many others about the beginning of January, 1846.

Hirpaldeo (هیرپال دیو), the son-in-law of Rāmdeo, Rāja of Deogir, who by the assistance of the other Rājas of the Deccan, had recovered his country from the Musalmāns, but Mubārīk Shāh, the son of Afā-uddin Khilji, in the second year of his reign, A.D. 1318, A.H. 718, marched towards the Deccan, took Hirpaldeo prisoner, flayed him alive, and hung his body at the gate of Deogir which is now called Daulatabad.

Hisam-bin-Jamil (حسام بن جمیل), surname of Abū Sahl-al-Bughdādī, who passed for one of the best traditionists of Musalmānism. He died in A.D. 722, A.H. 104.

Hissan (حسان بن ثابت), the son of Sabit, was a poet and companion of Muhammad. He is the author of a Diwān in Arabic. When Muhammad overcame his enemies at the battle of Khandaq, Hissan wrote a few verses on that occasion: the prophet was so much delighted, that he gave him Shirin the sister of Mūria Qalbi, for wife.

Hissan-al-Hind (حسان الهند), that is, the Hissan of India, a title which Mir Gulām 'Alī Azād assumed.

Hoshang (هوشنگ), second king of the first or Pishdadian dynasty of Persia, was the son of Sayānuuk, and grandson of Kyōmurs whom he succeeded. He reigned 40 years and was succeeded by his son Tahmurs, commonly called Deoband, or the Magician binder, a title he derived from the success with which he warred against the enemies of his family.

Hoshang Shah (هوشنگ شاه) (formerly called Alp Khān), was the first Muhammadan king of Mālwa, and the son of Dilāwar Khān Ghori who was governor of that place from the time of Muhammad Shāh, A.D. 1401, son of Fīroz Shāh Tughlaq, king of Delhi. After his father's death, which happened about the year A.D. 1405, A.H. 808, taking advantage of the times, he became entirely independent and assumed the title of Sulṭān Hoshang Shāh. He reigned 30 lunar years, and died on the 17th July, A.D. 1434, 9th Zil-hijja, A.H. 837. He was buried in a stone vault, and a splendid mausoleum of white marble was built over it which is still to be seen at Mando. The date of his death is to be found in the three last words of a tetrastich translated thus by General Briggs.

When death had sealed the Hoshang's fate,
And he prepared to tread on Lethe's shore,
I asked a poet to record the date,

Who briefly said, "Shāh Hoshang is no more."

He was succeeded by his son Sulṭān Muhammad Shāh, who was poisoned after a reign of one year and nine months by Mahmūd Khān (the son of his Wazīr), who took the title of Mahmūd Shāh and ascended the throne of Mālwa on Tuesday the 16th May, A.D. 1436, 29th Shawwāl, A.H. 839.

Hoshdar Khan (هوشدار خان), a title of Hidāyat-ullāh Khān, the son of Irādāt Khān Wāzāh. He was honoured with this title by the emperor Farrukh-siyar, and after his father's death with that of Irādāt Khān and the Faujdārī of Dūlipereya in the province of Mālwa. In the sixth year of Muhammad Shāh, A.D. 1721, A.H. 1136, he attended Nizām-ul-Mulk 'Asaf Jāh to the Deccan, and after the victory over Mubārīz Khān, was appointed Diwān of the Deccan with the rank of 4000. He was afterwards appointed governor of Kulbarga in the Deccan and died in the year A.D. 1744, A.H. 1167. He had many sons, most of whom died in his lifetime. His eldest surviving son, Hāfez Khān, succeeded him in the government of Kulbarga which he held at that time. Shāh-nawāz Khān wrote the Māsir-ul-Unra, or Biography of Nobility.

Hoshmand Begam (هوشمند بیگم), daughter of Sulṭān Khusrō, married to Prince Hushang, the son of prince Dāniāl in the year A.H. 1035.

Hujjat (حجت), poetical name of Nāsir Khusrō, which see.

Hujjat-ul-Islam (حجت الاسلام), a title of Muhammad Ghazzālī, a celebrated doctor of the Musalmān law.

[Vide Ghazzālī.]

Huma (هما), poetical name of Sayyad

Imtiyāz Khān, a son of Mo'tmid Khān, and a brother of Sayyad Ahmad whose takhallus was Zamīr. He is the author of a Diwān.

Humai, Queen (همای), was the daughter of Bahman, who is also called Ardashir Darāzdest (Artaxerxes Longimanus of the Greeks). She succeeded her father as queen of Persia, in the fourth century before Christ. She built the city called Bimrah, which the author of the Iabā Iauagh says, bore also the name of Simireni, and is the same which is at this day called Jobbflakan. The Persian authors state, that when she ascended the throne she was pregnant by her own father. She made her to conceal this circumstance and the child, of which she was delivered was given over to a nurse to be put to death. The life of the child however was miraculously preserved and the unmothered mother first recognized her son when his fortune and valour had advanced him to the rank of a victor as general in her army. Humai immediately regained the crown to him and retired to a private life after she had reigned 32 years. Her son reigned about 12 years, and is called by the Persians Dair or Darab I.

Humam, Hakim (همام حکیم), brother of Hakim Abul Fathā Gilmi a well educated and learned man in the service of the emperor Akbar. He was sent by that monarch in an embassy in company with Sayyad Sadr Jahan to Abdullah Khan Urbak, ruler of Khurasan about the year A.D. 1549 A.H. 957. He died in A.D. 1593 A.H. 1001 and left two sons, Hakim Saduq and Hakim Khushhal.

Humam (همام), poetical name of Kamal-uddin Muhammad bin-Abdul Wahhab styled by Arishah. One of the most illustrious doctors of the members of the Salihi, that is to say of the race of Ali. He lived in the time of Amir Timur (Tamerlane) and died in A.D. 1457 A.H. 861. He is author of a Commentary on the Hadaya. His proper name is Kamal-uddin Muhammad al-Siwasi, which see.

Humam Tabrezi, Khwaja (همام تبریزی), a celebrated Persian poet of Tauris or Tabrez, and author of a collection of Rubais or quatrains called Tabeizat Mir Humam. He was a contemporary and rival wit of Shukh Sadi. Meeting Sadi one day in a bath, Humam observing Sadi to be very bald, presented to him a basin with the bottom upwards, asked him "Why do the heads of the people of Shiraz resemble this?" Sadi, having turned the basin with the empty side upwards, replied, "First tell me, why do the heads of the people of Tabrez resemble this?" Many other anecdotes are related of them. Humam died in the reign of Alauddin, emperor of the Mughals, in A.D. 1313 A.H. 713, and was buried at Tabrez. He is also called Khwaja Humam-uddin Tabrezi.

Humam-uddin Tabrezi (همام الدین),

(تبریزی). Vide Humam Tabrezi.

Humayun (همایون نصر الدین محمد), emperor of Hindustan, surnamed Nasir-uddin Muhammad, was the eldest son of the emperor Babar Shah, was born at Kabul on the night of Tuesday the 7th March, A.D. 1508, 4th Zi-Qa-da, A.H. 913, and his mother's name was Maham Bigam. He succeeded his father on the throne at Agra on the 26th December, A.D. 1530, 6th Jumada I. A.H. 937, and conferred the government of Kabul, Qandahar, Ghazni, and the Panjab on his brother Mirza Kamran, to Mirza Askan he gave the government of Sarkar Samhal to Mirza Handal, Sarkar Alwal, and the government of Badakhshan to Mirza Sulaiman the son of Khan Mirza, the son of Sultan Muhammad the son of Sultan Abu Said. Humayun was defeated the first time by Sher Khan (afterwards Sher Shah) in a battle fought on the banks of the Chumal in Behar on the 26th June, A.D. 1539, 9th Safar, A.H. 946 and the second time at Qanoj on the 17th May A.D. 1540, 10th Muharram, A.H. 967. The capital no longer afforded him a place of refuge, even his brothers became his enemies, and would not grant him shelter in their provinces. He fled from one place to another, subject at times to the greatest hardships and was at last obliged to quit the kingdom and seek an asylum in Persia, where he arrived in July A.D. 1541, A.H. 941, and was hospitably and honorably entertained for some time by Shah Ismael of Persia, who assisted him with troops. During the absence of Humayun, which extended to a period of fifteen years five kings ascended the throne of Delhi viz. Sher Shah, his son Salim Shah, Muhammad Shah Adil, Ibrahim Khan and Sikandar Shah. Humayun having overcome his brothers at Kabul and Qandahar, commenced his march from the former city in the month of January, A.D. 1555, Safar, A.H. 962, towards India. He took the Panjab, and advancing towards Delhi defeated Sikandar Shah on the 22nd June, A.D. 1556, 2nd Shaban A.H. 962, in a battle fought at Sarhind. Sikandar, after his defeat, fled to the mountains of Dewalik, and Humayun having reached Delhi in triumph, became a second time emperor of Hindustan. Bairam Khan (q.v.), to whose valour and talent the king was principally indebted for his restoration, was rewarded with the first offices in the state with the title of Khan Khanan. The year of this victory was found by Bairam Khan to be contained in the words, "The sword of Humayun." Seven months after this victory, on the 21st January, A.D. 1556, as Humayun was coming down at the time of evening prayers from the terrace of the library at Delhi he fell headlong down the steps, and died on the 25th January, A.D. 1556, 11th Rabi I. A.H. 963. The words "Alas! my sovereign fell from the terrace," are the English of the line recording the year of his demise. He was buried at Kiloahari, a distance of four kos from the city of Shāh-jānābād on the banks of the river Jamna; and a splendid monument was erected over his remains some years after by his son Akbar, who succeeded him. Humāyūn died at the age of 49, after a reign of 25 years, including the fifteen years of his banishment from his capital. The foundation of his mausoleum was laid in A.D. 1565, A.H. 973, was superintended by Hājī Begam, mother of Akbar, and was finished in 16 years at a cost of 15 lakhs of rupees. Farrukh-siyar, 'Alamgir II. Dārā Shikōh and other princes are also buried in this mausoleum, where the last of the dynasty took refuge in 1857 (see above, in vor. Bahādur Shāh II). Humāyūn, after his death, received the title of Jannat 'Ashiānī.

[For Humāyūn's character vide Keene's Sketch of the History of Hindustan.]

Humayun, Amir (همایون امیر), of Isfaraen, a poet who went early in life to Tabrez, and was supported by Qāzī 'Isa, and Sulṭān Yū'qūh, who called him Khuro Sānī, that is, the second Khuro and Khuro Kōchak. After the death of his patron, he went to Kāshān and died there in A.D. 1496, A.H. 902. He is the author of a Diwān.

Humayun Shah, Bahmani, Sultan

(همایون شاه بهمنی سلطان), surname Zālim, or the Cruel, was the eleventh king of the Bahmanī dynasty. He succeeded his father Sulṭān 'Alā-ud-dīn II. Bahmanī in the year A.D. 1458, A.H. 862, and causing his brother Husan Khān's eyes to be put out, ascended the throne of the Deccan. According to the will of his father, he conferred the office of Wakil-us-Sulṭanat on Khwāja Mahmūd Gawān, with the title of Malik-ut-Tajjār and the government of Bijāpur. He was an unjust prince and a great tyrant, on which account he was surnamed "the Cruel." He reigned 3 years 6 months and 6 days, and was murdered with one stroke of a heavy club on the 1st September, A.D. 1461, 28th Zi-Qa'da, A.H. 865, during a fit of intoxication, by his own servants, who were wearied out with his inhuman cruelties. He was succeeded by his son Sulṭān Nizām Shāh, then only eight years of age. See above in vor. Bahmanī.

Hunain (حنين), surname of Abū

Zaid 'Abdūr Rahmān Hūmān, son of Is-hāq, son of Hunain, was a celebrated Christian physician who translated many books out of the Greek into Syriac and Arabic.

Hurmuz or Hurmuzd I. (هرمز یا),

(هرمز), the third king of Persia, of the Sāsānian race, was the son of Shāhpūr I. whom he succeeded in A.D. 272. He is the Hormisdas of the Greek authors, and is said to have resembled, both in person and character, his grandfather (i. e. Ardāshēr Bahgān). The mother of this monarch was the daughter of Māhrūkh, a petty prince, whom Ardāshēr had put to death, and whose family he had persecuted, because an astrologer had predicted that a descendant of Māhrūkh should attain the throne of Persia. This lady had fled to the tents of a shepherd, where she was seen by Shāhpūr when hunting. This prince became enamoured, and married her privately. His father Ardāshēr, going on day unexpectedly to his son's house, saw young Hurmuz. He was greatly pleased with the appearance of the child and made inquiries, which compelled Shāhpūr to confess all that had happened. The joy of the old king was excessive. "The prediction of the astrologers," he exclaimed, "which gave me such alarm is, thank God, confirmed, and a descendant of Māhrūkh shall succeed to my crown." Hurmuz was a virtuous prince, but reigned only one year and ten days. He died about the year A.D. 273, and was succeeded by his son Bahrām I.

Hurmuz or Hurmuzd II. (هرمزد ثانی),

the eighth king of Persia of the Sāsānian race. He succeeded his father Narsī about the year A.D. 303, ruled Persia seven years and five months and died A.D. 310. No events of any consequence occurred during the reign of this prince. At his death he left no son; and the kingdom was on the point of being thrown into confusion, when it was declared that one of the ladies in the harem was pregnant, and that there were certain indications of the embryo being a male. When the child was brought forth, it was named Shāhpūr, and every care was taken to give the young sovereign an education suited to his high duties.

Hurmuz or Hurmuzd III. (هرمزد ثالث), the second son of Yazdijard II. succeeded his father, of whom he was always the favourite, A.D. 456. His elder brother Firoz, though at first compelled to fly across the Oxus, soon returned to assert his right at the head of a large army, which aided by a general defection of the Persians, who deserted his weak brother, obtained an easy victory, and the unfortunate Hurmuz was, after a short reign of little more than one year, deposed and put to death A.D. 457.

Hurmuz or Hurmuzd IV. (هرمزد رابع),

(the Hormi-das III. of the Greeks) was declared successor to his father the great Chosroes, surnamed Naushervān the Just, and ascended the throne of Persia A.D. 579. His subjects revolted against him at the instigation of Bahmūn Chobin or Varnanes, his general, whom he had offended by sending him a female dress because he had been defeated by the Romans. They confined Hurmuz and put out his eyes to disqualify him from ascending the throne, and soon after put him to death A.D. 590. His son Khuro Purvez having collected a force to oppose Bahrām, who with the intention of taking the government into his own hands was advancing towards Madāin, was defeated, and with great difficulty effected his escape to the territories of the Romans (Greeks), from whose emperor, Maurice, he met with the most friendly and hospitable reception. Bahrām Chobin took possession of the vacant government, but his rule was short, for within eight months from the period of his taking possession of Madain, he was defeated by an army of Romans and Persians commanded by Khusro, and fled to Tarsary.

Husain (حسين), poetical name of Muzaffar Husain, an author who is also called Shahid or Martyr. He is the author of the work called Kayās-us-Sālikim.

Husain Ali Khan Bahadur (حسين)

(علی خان بہادر), second son of Alahwirdi Khān, a nobleman of high rank who served under the emperor 'Alamgīr, and died on the 3rd October, A.D. 1686, 25th Zi-Q'ada, A.H. 1097, a day after the fort of Bijāpūr was taken. See above in rec. Alahwirdi.

Husain - bin - Hasan - al - Husaini

(حسين بن حسن الحسيني), a native of Ghōr and author of several works, viz. Kanz-ul-Ramāz, Si Nama, Nuzhat-ul-Arwāh, Zād-ul-Musāfarin, Tarab-ul-Majālis, Ruh-ul-Arwāh, Sirāt-ul-Mustaqim, and of a Dīwān in Arabic and Persian. He died, says Jāmi, in the year A.D. 1317, A.H. 717, and is buried at Herāt. Firishla calls him Amīr Husaini Sādāt and says that he with his father Sayyad Najm-uddin came to India as merchants and became the disciples of Shaikh Bahā-uddin Zikariya at Multan, and died at Herāt on 1st December, A.D. 1318, 6th Shawwāl, A.H. 718.

Husain - bin - Muhammad, as - Sa - ma'ani (حسين بن محمد السمعاني), author of the Khazūnat-al-Muftiīn, which contains a large quantity of decisions, and is a book of some authority in India. It was completed in A.D. 1339, A.H. 740.

Husain Dost Sambhali, Mir (حسين)

(دوست سمبھلی مير), son of Abū Talib of Sambhal. He is the author of a biography of poets called Tazkira Husaini, which appears to have been compiled a few years after the death of Muhammad Shāh the emperor of Delhi, who died in A.D. 1748, A.H. 1161.

Husain Ghaznāwi (حسين غزنوی), author of the story of Padmāwat in Persian poetry called Qissai Padmāwat.

Husain Hallaj, Shaikh (حسين حلاج)

(شيخ), the son of Mansūr Hallāj.

Many fables have been invented to account for the imprudence of this wise teacher. One of these states, that he observed his sister go out every evening; he followed her; having seen her communicate with the Hūries, and receive from these celestial nymphs a cup of nectar; he insisted on drinking one or two drops that remained of this celestial liquor. His sister told him he could not contain it, and that it would cause his death. He persisted; from the moment that he swallowed it he kept exclaiming "An-ul-Ilāq!" that is, "I am the truth!" till he was put to death.

[Vide Mansūr Hallāj.]

Husaini (حسيني), author of the Asnāi Husaini and Maktūbāt Husaini.

Husain - ibn - Muin - uddin Maibadi

(حسين ابن معين الدين ميبدي), author of a work on religion, entitled Fawātah.

Husaini Fathi-Ali, a Sūfi of Delhi, author of a biographical dictionary published 1750-1. Mentioned as still living in 1806 by Qasim of Āgra (q.v.)

Husain, Imam (حسين امام), the second son of 'Alī, the son-in-law of Muhammad. He was born at Medina in January, A.D. 626, Shabān, A.H. 4, and was the third Imam of the race of 'Alī. Having refused to acknowledge Yazid the son of Mu'āwiz for the lawful Khālif, he was obliged to leave Medina and to fly to Mecca, but was overtaken on his way and killed by order of Ubaidullāh-ibn-Zayād, one of Yazid's captains, on the 10th October, A.D. 680, 10th Muḥarram, A.H. 61. When his head was brought to Ubaidullāh at Kūfa, he struck it over the mouth with a stick, and treated it with great contempt. He then sent it along with his family, who were made captives, to Damascus, where Yazid then reigned. The day on which he was killed is still a great day amongst the Musalmāns. He is buried at a place called Karbala in Babylonian Irāq or Chaldaea near Kūfa. Some pretend to show that Husain's head was buried near the river of Karbala; others say that there are no other traces of it remaining. However, the first Sultān of the race of Boyāides built on that spot a sumptuous monument, which is visited to this very day with great devotion by the Musulmāns. It is called "Gunbaz Faiz," or the dome of grace.

Husain Jalayer, Sultan (حسین جالایر), grandson of Amīr Hasan

Buzurg, succeeded his father Sultān Aweś Jalāyer to the throne of Baghdād in October, A.D. 1374, A.H. 776, and lost his life in an action with his brother Sultān Ahmad, in A.D. 1382, A.H. 784.

Husain Khonsari (حسین خونساری), was one of the celebrated philosophers of Persia, surnamed from his birth-place Khonsār, a town between Teheran and Kashan. He flourished in the latter part of the 17th century.

Husain Langa I. (حسین لنگا), third king of Multān, succeeded his father Qutb-uddin Mahmūd Langa in A.D. 1469, A.H. 874. He entered into a treaty of alliance with Sikandar Lodī, king of Dehli, and died about the year A.D. 904, or according to some, on Sunday the 28th August, A.D. 1502, 26th Šafar, A.H. 908, after a reign of 30 or 34 years. He was succeeded by his grandson Mahmūd Khān Langa. Firāhta says that the Tawārīkh Bahādur Shāhī, which contains the history of this prince, is full of errors, and the author of the Mīrāt-Sikandari declares it to be absolutely unintelligible.

Husain Langa II. (حسین لنگا), fifth and last king of Multān, was, after the death of his father Mahmūd Khān Langa in 1524, raised to the throne, although a minor. He was only a pageant in the hands of his sister's husband, Shujān'-ul-Mulk, who assumed the office of protector. Shāh Husain Arghūn, king of Thatta, under the orders of the emperor Bābar Shāh, soon after besieged the place, which was at length, in the year A.D. 1526, A.H. 932, carried by escalade, after a siege of fifteen months. Husain Arghūn having nominated one Lashkar Khān his deputy, returned to Thatta. When Bābar Shāh, during his illness, abdicated the throne in favour of his son Humāyūn, the latter prince gave the Panjāb in jāgīr to Mirzā

Kāmran his brother, who on his arrival at Lāhore sent for Lashkar Khān and made over the district of Kābul to him, in lieu of that of Multān, since which time the kingdom of Multān has continued a province of the empire of Dehli.

Husain Muammai, Mir (حسین معمای میر), a celebrated punster who died in the year A.D. 1498, A.H. 904.

Husain Muin-uddin (حسین معین الدین), author of the Fawātah Saba on Theology.

Husain Naqshi, Mulla (حسین نقشی ملا), a learned Musalmān of Dehli, who was a good poet and an excellent engraver in the time of the emperor Akbar. He died on the 16th July, A.D. 1581, 14th Jumādā II. A.H. 989.

Husain Nizam Shaḥ I. (حسین نظام شاہ) ascended the throne of Ahmad-nagar in the Deccan in the 30th year of his age, after the death of his father Burhān Nizām Shāh I. in the year A.D. 1564, A.H. 961. In A.D. 1565, A.H. 972, an alliance was formed between him and the three Sultāns, viz. 'Alī 'Adil Shāh of Bijāpūr, Ibrāhīm Quth Shāh of Gōlkandā and Amīr Barid of Admadabād Bidar, against Rāmraj, Rāja of Bijanagar, who was defeated and slain. Husain Nizām Shāh died eleven days after his return from this expedition, on Wednesday the 6th June, A.D. 1565, 7th Zi-Qa'da, A.H. 972, and his son Murtazā Nizām Shāh succeeded him. The death of Nizām Shāh has been commemorated in the following chronogram: "The sun of the Deccan has become obscured."

Husain Nizam Shah II. (حسین نظام)

(شاه ثانی), a nominal prince of the Nizām Shāhī dynasty.

[Vide Pātha 'Khan, the son of Mālik 'Ambar.]

Husain Shah Sharqi, Sultan (حسین شاه شرقی سلطان)

(شاه شرقی سلطان), ascended the throne of Jaunpūr after his brother Muhammad Shāh, who was slain in battle about the year A.D. 1452, A.H. 856. He fought several battles with Bahlōl Lodī, the king of Delhi, and was at last defeated, and so closely pursued that he left his horse and escaped on foot. The army of Delhi advanced without any other check to Jaunpūr, which fell to the arms of Bahlōl, while Husain Shāh, abandoning his capital, was obliged to content himself with a small tract of country yielding only a revenue of five lakhs of rupees. Bahlōl having delivered over Jaunpūr and its kingdom to his own son Bārbak, enjoined him not to deprive Husain Shah of the small tract to which he was confined, terming it his family estate. This event took place about the year A.D. 1476, A.H. 881, and the subversion of the Sharqī dynasty may be dated from that year. The reign of Husain Shāh lasted for a period of 19 lunar years. Some years after the death of Bahlōl Lodī (which happened in A.D. 1489, A.H. 894) Husain Shāh incited the prince Bārbak to rise up against his brother Sikandar Lodī, king of Delhi, and wrest the government out of his hands; but Bārbak was defeated in the first action and retired to Jaunpūr, to which place he was pursued by the king. Jaunpūr fell shortly after, and was added to the kingdom of Delhi. Husain Shāh was now induced to seek refuge with 'Alā-uddīn Pūrbi, king of Bengal, by whom he was treated with the respect due to his station till his death, which took place in A.D. 1489, A.H. 905. With him the royal line of Jaunpūr was extinguished.

Husain Shah, Sayyad (حسین شاه سید)

(سید), author of the story of Bahram Gōr, entitled Hasht Gulasht, which he made into prose from the Hasht Bahisht of Amīr Khusrō in the year A.D. 1800, A.H. 1216, on the requisition of M. Charles Perron, who served under Daulat Rāo Sindhiā.

(مولانا), surnamed Kāshifī, was a man of consequence in the time of Sultān Husain Mirzā, surnamed Abū'l Ghāzī Bahādūr of Khurāsān, and held the office of sacred herald in the city of Herāt till the Hijrī year 910, on the last day of which he expired, i.e. on the 3rd June, A.D. 1505, 30th Zil-hijja, A.H. 910. He is the author of a commentary on the Qurān, commonly called Tafsīr Husainī, which he entitled Mawāhib 'Ulīāt, also of one entitled Jawāhir-ul-Tafsīr. Besides these, he wrote several other works, amongst which are the Ruzat-ush-Shuhadā, an excellent history of Muhammad with a minute detail of the battle of Karbala, dedicated to Sultān Husain Mirzā in A.D. 1501, an abridgment of which is called Dah Majlis. His Akhlaq Mahsini is a very valuable system of Ethics, treating upon worship, prayer, patience, hope, chastity, etc., dedicated to the same Sultān A.D. 1494, A.H. 900, the title of which gives the year of its completion. The Anwār Suḥelī, Rays of the star Unopus, is a translation of Pīlpay's Fables in Persian, dedicated to Amīr Shaikh Ahmad Suḥelī, seal-bearer to the Sultān. He calls himself in this book, Maulāna Husain-bin-'Alī-al-Waez surnamed Kāshifī. He also made an abridgment of Mowlā Rūmī's Masnawī which he called Lubb-i-Labb. He is also the author of the works called Makhsan-ul-Inshā, Saba Kāshifā (on astrology), Aṣṣar Qasimī, Matla-ul-Anwār, and of a collection of Anecdotes called Latā'if-ul-Tuwāḍif. This author is by some writers called Kamāl-uddīn Husain-al-Waez-al-Kāshifī-us-Subzwārī.

Amīr Sayyid 'Alī Muhtasib. He lived in the time of Shāh Isma'il Safwī, and wrote a chronogram on his accession to the throne of Persia in the year A.D. 1576, A.H. 984. He is the author of a Diwān.

I

Ibn-Abi Tai (ابن ابي طي), author of the work called Kitāb Ar Rauzatain.

Ibn-Abu Usaiba, Muwaffiq-uddin Abu'l Abbas Ahmad (ابن ابوعسبا), author (موفقى الدين ابوالعباس احمد) of the Arabic work called Ayūn-ul-Anbā'-fi-Tubqāt-ul-Atibbā, i.e. Fountains of information respecting the classes of Physicians. This book was translated by the author into Arabic from the Sanskrit at the commencement of the 13th century of our era. In the 12th chapter of this work, he gives an account of all the Physicians who were from India. Of one, whom he calls Kanka-al-Hindī, he says: He was skilful as a philosopher amongst ancient philosophers of India, and one of the greatest of men. He investigated the art of physic, the power of medicines, the nature of compound substances, and the properties of simple substances. He was the most learned of all men in the form of the universe, the composition of the heavenly bodies, and the motions of the planets. An extract from the above work is given in the Jour. of the Royal As. Soc. No. 11, by the Rev W. Croston with remarks by Professor H. H. Wilson. Ibn-Abū Usaiba died in A.D. 1269, A.H. 668.

African philosopher. His name and titles are in Arabic: "Wali-uddin Abū Zaid 'Abdurrahman - bin - Muhammad - al - Hazrami - al - Ishbili," but he is better known by the single patronymic name of Ibn - Khaldūn. His father surnamed Khaldūn was a native of Amazirg or Barber (in Africa), but his wife, descending from a family of the Arabian province Hazramāt, made her son adopt the surname of Al-Hazrami. He was born in Tunis in the year A.D. 1332, and passed his youth in Egypt. He then served a short time under Taimūr, as chief justice at Damascus. He returned to Egypt, where he became Supreme Judge, and died in the year A.D. 1406. His principal and most remarkable work is the history of the Arabs, the Persians, and the Berbers. The whole composition is commonly called Tarikh-ibn-Khaldūn.

Ibn-Khallikan (ابن خلیکان), whose full name is Shams-ud-dīn Abū'l Abbās Ahmad-ibn - Muhammad - bin - Abū Bakr-ibn Khallikān, drew his descent from a family of Balkh. This very eminent scholar and follower of Shāfi'i doctrines, was born at Arbelu, but resided at Damascus, where he had filled the place of chief Qāzi till the year A.D. 1281, A.H. 680, when he was dismissed, and from that time till the day of his death he never went out of doors. He was a man of the greatest reputation for learning, versed in various sciences, and highly accomplished; he was a scholar, a poet, a compiler, and an historian. By his talents and writings, he merited the honourable title of "the most learned man," and was an able historian. His celebrated biographical work called the Wafāt-ul-A'yan, or deaths of eminent men, is considered the acme of perfection. This work was translated from the Arabic by Baron McGuckin De Slane, Member of the Council of the Asiatic Society of Paris, etc., and published in A.D. 1842. The work is in four volumes 4to. and in English. It was printed in Paris for the Oriental Translation Fund of London. This translation is a most valuable work to those who wish to gain a knowledge of the legal literature of the Muhammadans, as the translator has added to the text numerous learned notes, replete with curious and interesting information relating to the Muhammadan law and lawyers. Ibn-Khallikān was born on Thursday the 22nd September, A.D. 1211, 11th Rabi' II. A.H. 608, and died on Thursday the 31st October, A.D. 1282, 26th Rajab, A.H. 681, aged 73 lunar years, in the Najibia College at Damascus and was interred at Mount Kāsiyūn.

Ibn-Rashid (ابن رشيد), surname of Abū'l Walid Muhammad-bīn-Ahmad, whom the Europeans call Averroes and Aven Rosch, was one of the most subtle philosophers that ever appeared among the Arabians. He was born at Cordova in Spain (A.D. 1149), where his father held the office of high priest and chief judge, under the emperor of the Moors. His knowledge of law, divinity, mathematics, and astrology was very extensive, and to this was added the theory rather than the practice of medicine. On the death of his father, he was appointed to succeed him. Falling under the suspicion of heresy, he was deprived of his posts and thrown into prison, from whence he was at last delivered and reinstated in his office of judge. He wrote a treatise on the art of physic, an epitome of Ptolemy's Almagest, a treatise on astrology, and many amorous verses; but when he grew old, he threw the three last into the fire. He is best known as a translator and expositor of Aristotle; his commentaries were published at Venice A.D. 1489-1560. He was a pantheist, and a despiser of all supposed revelations, as to which his opinions were: that Christianity is absurd; Judaism, the religion of children; and Muhammadanism, the religion of swine. A further edition of his works is that published at Venice 1608. He is said to have died at Morocco in A.H. 595, corresponding with A.D. 1199, though Lempriere in his Universal Biography says that he died in A.H. 1206.

Ibrahim (ابراهيم), the patriarch Abraham.

Ibrahim (ابراهيم), an emperor of the Moors of Africa in the 12th century, who was dethroned by his subjects, and his crown usurped by 'Abdul Mūmin.

Ibrahim (ابراهيم), the son of Alashtar, killed in A.D. 690, A.H. 71, in a battle fought between the khalif 'Abdul Malik and Misna'b the brother of 'Abdullah, the son of Zubair, whose faithful friend he was.

Ibrahim (ابراهيم), the son of Ibrāhīm Mahrān, a very famous doctor of the sect of Shafā'i, and author of several works.

Ibrahim Adham (ابراهيم ادهم), a king of Balkh, who retired from the world, became a Dervish and died between the years 875 and 880, aged 110 years. It is said that he saw in a dream a man on the top of a house looking for something. He asked him what he was looking for. The man replied that he had lost his camel. "What a fool you must be" said the king, "to be looking for your camel on the roof of a house!" The man rejoined "and what a fool you must be to look for God in the cares and troubles of a crown!" Ibrāhīm from that day abdicated his throne, and became a wandering Dervish.

Ibrahim 'Adil Shah I. (ابراهيم عادل), شاه, Sultān of Bijāpūr, surnamed Abū'l Nasr, son of Ismā'il 'Adil Shāh, succeeded his brother Mallū 'Adil Shāh on the throne of Bijāpūr in the Deccan in A.D. 1535, A.H. 941. He married the daughter of 'Ala-uddin 'Imād Shāh, named Rabia Sultāna, in A.D. 1543, A.H. 950, reigned 24 lunar years and some months, and died in A.D. 1558, A.H. 965. He was buried at Kūki near the tombs of his father and grandfather, and was succeeded by his son 'Alī 'Adil Shāh.

Ibrahim 'Adil Shah II. (ابراهيم عادل), شاه, of Bijāpūr, surnamed Abū'l Muzaffar, was the son of Tahmāsp the brother of 'Alī 'Adil Shāh, whom he succeeded in April, A.D. 1580, Safar, A.H. 988, being then only in his ninth year. The management of public affairs was given to Kamāl Khān Dakhaut, and Chāud Bibi Sultāna, widow of the late king, was entrusted with the care of the education of the minor monarch. For some time Kamāl Khān behaved with due moderation in his office;

but at length was guilty of some violence towards Chāud Sultāna, who turned her thoughts to means for his destruction. She secretly sent a message to Hājī Kishwar Khān, an officer of high rank, who caused him to be murdered. After this event Kishwar Khān, by the support and patronage of Chāud Bibi, grasped the authority of the State, and ruled with uncontrolled sway till he was assassinated. Akhlās Khān next assumed the regency; but after some time he was seized by Dilāwar Khān, who put out his eyes, and became regent of the empire. He was expelled by the king in A.D. 1590, and his eyes put out and himself confined in A.D. 1592. Ibrāhīm 'Adil Shāh died after a reign of more than 38 years in A.D. 1626, A.H. 1036, and was succeeded by his son Muhammad 'Adil Shāh. The first building of any importance we meet at Bijāpūr is the Ibrāhīm Rauza, the tomb of Ibrāhīm 'Adil Shāh II. On a high-raised platform of stone, separated by a square, in the midst of which is a haus or fountain, stand the rauza and mosque opposite each other, and corresponding in size and contour. The tomb is most elaborately ornamented, the walls being covered with inscriptions from the Qurān in raised stone Arabic letters, which formerly were gilt, on a blue ground, though now the colouring has worn away. The mosque also is a beautiful building.

Ibrahim Ali Khan (ابراهيم على خان), the chief of Malair Kotla, was a minor of about 15 years of age (1872), and was receiving his education in the Wards' School at Umballa.

Ibrahim Ali Khan (ابراهيم على خان), Nawāb of Tonk, grandson of the famous Pindāri chief Amir Khān. His father Muhammad 'Alī Khān was deposed by the British Government on account of the Iowa massacre in 1867. He was installed as Nawāb of Tonk on the 19th January, 1871, by the British Government.

Ibrahim Astarabadi (ابراهيم استرآبادی), an author who translated the Risāla or Zitāb Hasana of Abū'l Fatūh Rāzi Makki from the Arabic into Persian in A.D. 1551, A.H. 958.

Ibrahim Barid Shah (ابراهيم برید شاه), succeeded his father 'Alī Barid in the government of Ahmadābād Bidar about the year A.D. 1562, A.H. 970. He reigned seven years and died about the year A.D. 1569, A.H. 977. His brother Qasim Barid II. succeeded him.

Ibrahim Bayu, Malik (ابراهيم بيو ملک). In the province of Behar there is a hillock called Pīr Pahāri, on the top of which there is a tomb with Persian inscriptions in verse, intimating that Mālik Ibrāhīm Bayū died in the reign of Sultān Firoz Shāh on a Sunday in the month of Zil-hijja, A.H. 753, which corresponds with January, A.D. 1353, but who he was we are not informed.

İbrahim-bin-Aghlab (ابراهيم بن اعلب)

(اغلِب), an Arabian captain who was appointed governor of Egypt and Africa by the Khalif Hārūn-al-Rashīd in A.D. 800, A.H. 184. The descendants of this governor, who settled in Africa, bore the name of Aghlabia or Aghlabites, and formed a dynasty of princes who reigned there till the year A.D. 908, A.H. 296, when they were driven out by the Fatimites.

İbrahim-bin-Ali (ابراهيم بن علي) author of the work called Majma'-ul-Ansāb, or the Genealogy of the different dynasties of Persia, till A.D. 1233, A.H. 630.

İbrahim - bin - Hariri (ابراهيم بن حريري)

(حريري), author of the Tārīkh-İbrāhīmī, an abridged history of India from the earliest times to the conquest of that country by the emperor Bābar Shāh, who defeated Sultān İbrāhīm Hussain Lodi, king of Delhi, and became the founder of the Mughal dynasty. It was dedicated to Bābar Shāh in A.D. 1528, A.H. 934.

İbrahim-bin-Muhammad-al-Halabi, Shaikh (ابراهيم بن محمد الحلبي)

(شيخ), author of a Persian work on Theology called Aqā'id Sunnī and of the Multāqā-al-Abhār. This work, which is an universal code of Muhammadan law, contains the opinions of the four chief Mujtahid Imāms, and illustrates them by those of the principal juriconsults of the school of Abū Hanīfa. He died A.D. 1549, A.H. 956.

[Vide Imām 'Alam-bin-'Ata.]

İbrahim-bin-Nayal (ابراهيم بن نبال)

brother of Tughral Beg's mother, a chief who defeated Tughān Shāh I. a prince of the Saljuqian family, in battle, took him prisoner and blinded him. İbrāhīm was murdered after some time in A.D. 952, A.H. 451, by Tughral Beg, the uncle of Tughān Shāh.

İbrahim-bin-Saleh (ابراهيم بن صالح) cousin of Hārūn-al-Rashīd. A curious story is given of him in the Jour. As. Soc. No. 11, that when he died Manka-al-Hindi, the philosopher, restored him to life, and that İbrāhīm lived long after this circumstance, and married the princess 'Alī 'Abbas, daughter of Al-Mahdī, and obtained the government of Egypt and Palestine, and died in Egypt.

İbrahim-bin-Walid II. (ابراهيم بن وليد ثاني)

(وليد ثاني), a Khalif of the race of Umayya, succeeded his brother Yazid III. in A.D. 744, A.H. 126, and had reigned but seventy days when he was deposed and slain by Mu'āwīa II. who ascended the throne in Syria.

İbrahim Husain, Khwaja (ابراهيم حسين)

(حسين خواجه), a celebrated caligrapher in the service of the emperor 'Akbar, who wrote a beautiful Nastaliq hand. He died in the year A.D. 1593, A.H. 1001, and 'Abdul Qādir Badā'uni found the chronogram of his death to be contained in his very name with the exception of the first letter in İbrāhīm, viz. Alif.

İbrahim Husain Lodi, Sultan (ابراهيم حسين لودي)

(حسين لودي سلطان), ascended the throne of Āgra after the death of his father Sikandar Shāh Lodi in February, A.D. 1510, Zi-qa'da, A.H. 915. He reigned 16 years, and was defeated and slain in a battle fought at Panipat with the emperor Bābar Shāh on Friday the 20th April, A.D. 1526, 7th Rajab, A.H. 932, an event which transferred the empire of Delhi and Āgra to the family of Aur Taimūr. From this battle we may date the fall of the Pathān empire, though that race afterwards made many efforts, and recovered it for a few years in the time of the emperor Humāyūn.

İbrahim Husain Mirza (ابراهيم حسين ميرزا)

(ميرزا), a son-in-law of the emperor

Humāyūn, and the second son of Muhammad Sultān Mirzā, who had four other sons besides him, viz. 1st, Muhammad Hussain Mirzā, 2nd, İbrāhīm Hussain Mirzā, 3rd, Mas'ūd Hussain Mirzā, 4th, Ulugh Mirzā, who died in A.D. 1567, A.H. 975, and 5th, Shāh Mirzā. They were styled "The Mirzās," and were, on account of their ill-conduct, confined in the Fort of Sambhal by order of the emperor Akbar. When that monarch marched in the year A.D. 1567, A.H. 975, for the purpose of subduing Mālwa, they made their escape and sought an asylum with Chingiz Khān, a nobleman at Baroch. They took Champaner and Sūrat and also Baroch in A.D. 1569, A.H. 977, and created a great disturbance in the surrounding countries. İbrāhīm Husain was taken prisoner in A.D. 1573, A.H. 981, and shortly after put to death by Makhās Khān, governor of Multān, and his head sent to the emperor, who ordered it to be placed over one of the gates of Āgra (vide Gulrukh Begam) and caused his brother Mas'ūd Hussain Mirzā to be confined in the fort of Gwāliar, where he soon afterwards died.

Ibrahim-ibn-Aghlab (ابراهيم ابن اغلب)

(اغلب), a king of Barbary. This country was reduced by the Saracens in the Khilāfat of 'Umar, and continued subject to the Khalif of Arabia and Baghdad till the reign of Hārūn-al-Rashid, who having appointed Ibrāhīm-ibn-Aghlab governor of the western parts of his empire, that prefect took the opportunity, first of assuming greater powers to himself than had been granted by the Khalifs. The race of Aghlab continued to enjoy their new principality peaceably till the year A.D. 910, A.H. 298, during which time they made several descents on the island of Sicily, and conquered a part of it. About this time, however, one Obedullāh surnamed 'Al-Mahdi rebelled against the house of Aghlab, and assumed the title of Khalif of Qairwān.

Ibrahim, Imam (ابراهيم امام). This

Ibrāhīm, who bears the title of Imām, or chief of the religion of Muhammad, is not of the number of the twelve Imāms of the posterity of 'Alī. He was a son of Muhammad, the son of 'Alī, the son of 'Abdullah, the son of 'Abbās, the uncle of the prophet, and eldest brother of the two first Khalifs of the house of 'Abbās; but was himself never acknowledged as a Khalif. He was put to death by order of Mārwan II. surnamed Hīmar, last Khalif of the house of Umayyā, in the month of October, A.D. 749, Sāfar, A.H. 132.

Ibrahim Khan (ابراهيم خان), the son of the celebrated Amīr-ul-Umrā 'Alī Mardān Khān. He was honoured with the rank of 5000 in the second year of the emperor 'Alangīr, A.D. 1659, and appointed governor, at different periods, of Kashmir, Lahore, Bihār, Bengal and other places, and died in the reign of Bahādur Shāh.

Ibrahim Khan Fatha Jang (ابراهيم خان فثا جنگ)

(فثا جنگ) was a relation of the celebrated Nūr Jahān Begum, whose mother's sister he had married. When Qasim Khān the grandson of Shaikh Salim Chishtī was recalled to court from the government of Bihār in the twelfth year of the emperor Jahāngīr, A.D. 1616, A.H. 1025, Ibrāhīm Khān was appointed governor of that province with the rank of 4000. He was killed at Dacca, A.D. 1623, A.H. 1032, in battle against prince Khurram (afterwards Shāh Jahān) who had rebelled against his father Jahāngīr. His wife Rāh Farwez Khānum lived to a great age, and died in the reign of the emperor 'Alangīr.

Ibrahim Khan Sur (ابراهيم خان سور), son of Ghāzī Khān, governor of Bayāna, was the brother-in-law of Muhammad Shāh 'Adil, whose sister he had married. He raised a considerable army and took possession of Dehli and Agra on the 28th February, A.D. 1555, 6th Jumādā' I. A.H. 962. He had no sooner ascended the throne than another competitor arose in the province of the Panjāb, in the person of Ahmad Khān, a nephew of the late Sūr Shāh. He defeated Ibrāhīm Khān in a battle, and the latter retreated to Saubhal, while Ahmad Khān took possession of Agra and Dehli, and assumed the title of Sikandar Shāh in May the same year. Ibrāhīm Khān was killed by Sulaimān, king of Bengal, in Orissa in a battle fought in A.D. 1567, A.H. 975, and is buried there. Amongst the incidents of the year A.D. 1555, A.H. 962, was the explosion of the fort of Agra, when enormous stones and columns were sent flying several kās to the other side of the Jamna, and many people were destroyed. As the whole Fort was called Bādalgārh, the date was found in the words "The fire of Bādalgārh."

Ibrahim Khawas (ابراهيم خواص), a pupil of Abū 'Abdullah Maghrabī, who died A.D. 911. He was called Khawās, which means a basket-maker.

Ibrahim Qutb Shah (ابراهيم قطب شاه) was the son of Qulī Qutb Shāh I. sovereign of Golkonda. On the death of his brother Janshid Qutb Shāh, the nobles of the court elevated his son Subhān Qulī, a child seven years of age, to the throne; but as he was unable to wield the sceptre Ibrāhīm was sent for from Bijānagar, where he then resided, and was crowned on Monday the 28th July, A.D. 1550, 12th Rajab, A.H. 957. In the year A.D. 1565, A.H. 972, he, in conjunction with the other Muhammadan monarchs of the Deccan, marched against Ramraj, the Rāja of Bijānagar, who was defeated and slain, and his territories occupied by the conquerors. In A.D. 1571, A.H. 979, the fort of Rājamanḍrī was taken from the Hindūs by Rafat Khān, the general of Ibrāhīm; the following chronogram commemorates the date of its occurrence: "The temple of the infidels has fallen into our hands." Ibrāhīm Qutb Shāh, after a prosperous reign of 32 years, died suddenly on Thursday the 5th June, A.D. 1581, 21st Rabī' II. A.H. 989, in the 51st year of his age, and was succeeded by his son Muhammad Qutb Shāh.

Ibrahim Mirza (ابراهيم مرزا), the son of Bahrām Mirzā and grandson of Shāh Ismā'īl Safwī. His poetical name was Jāhī. He was murdered by order of his grandfather.

Ibrahim Mirza, Sultan (ابراهيم مرزا سلطان), was the son of Shāhruh Mirzā and grandson of Amīr Taimūr. He was governor of Fars during the life of his father, and died a few years before him in A.D. 1435, A.H. 839. After his death, his son 'Abdullah Mirzā succeeded him, and was killed in battle against Mirzā Abū Sa'īd his cousin-german in A.D. 1461, A.H. 855.

Ibrahim Mirza (ابراهيم مرزا), a Saffavi of literary tastes; temp. Shāh Jahān; his poetical name was Adham, which see.

Ibrahim Mirza (ابراهيم مرزا), the son of Mirzā Sulaimān of Badakhshān, was born in the year A.D. 1534, A.H. 941. When his father, with the intention of conquering Balkh, went to that country, prince Ibrāhīm accompanied him, and was taken prisoner in battle and put to death by order of Pīr Muhammad Khān, ruler of Balkh, in the month of September, A.D. 1560, Zil-hijja, A.H. 967.

Ibrahim Nayal (ابراهيم نيال). Vide Ibrāhīm-bin-Nayāl.

Ibrahim Nizam Shah (ابراهيم نظام) succeeded his father Burhān Nizām Shāh II. in the kingdom of Ahmadnagar Deccan in the month of April, A.D. 1595, Sha'bān, A.H. 1003, and was slain in action against the troops of Ibrāhīm 'Adil Shāh II. of Bijāpūr, after a reign of only four months, in the month of August, A.D. 1595, Zil-hijja, A.H. 1003. Miān Manjū, his wazīr, raised to the throne one Ahmad a boy, said to be of the Nizām Shāhī family.

Ibrahim Pasha (ابراهيم پاشه), an adopted son of Muhammad 'Ali Pasha of Egypt, was born in A.D. 1789, and gave the first proofs of his gallantry and generalship in A.D. 1819 in quelling the insurrection of Wahābīs. He afterwards made several conquests. In A.D. 1848, when Muhammad 'Ali had sunk into absolute dotage, Ibrāhīm went to Constantinople, and was recognized by the Porte as Viceroy of Egypt; after a short visit to England, on the 9th November, A.D. 1848, he died at Cairo.

Ibrahim Shah Sultan (ابراهيم شاه) (شرقی سلطان), called Sharaqī, or "Eastern," ascended the throne of Jaunpūr, after the death of his brother Mubārīk Shāh in A.D. 1402, A.H. 804. He was famous during his reign for the encouragement he afforded to literature; and we find that in those times of anarchy and confusion which prevailed in Hindūstān, Jaunpūr became the seat of learning; as appears (says Firishṭa) from several works now extant, dedicated to Ibrāhīm Shāh. He died in A.D. 1440, A.H. 844, after a long reign of upwards of 40 years. He was beloved in life, and he was regretted by all his subjects. His eldest son Mahmūd Shāh Sharqī succeeded him.

Ibrahim Shah Pir (ابراهيم شاه پير), a Muhammadan saint whose tomb is in the district of Kach thirty miles above Lakpat. Vide Travels Roy. As. Soc., vol. iii. p. 583.

Ibrahim Shaikh (ابراهيم شيخ), the son of Shaikh Musā, the brother of Shaikh Salīm Chishtī. He served Akbar for several years in the military profession; and, when that emperor was proceeding to Kabul after the death of his brother, Muhammad Hakim, Shaikh Ibrāhīm accompanied him as far as Thānesar, where he fell sick through excess of drinking and died on the 16th Mahr, in the 30th year of Akbar's reign, corresponding with September, A.D. 1586, Shawwāl, A.H. 992. According, however, to a later work, the Māwir-ul-Umrā, he was left behind by the emperor and ordered to take charge of the fortress of Āgra, where he died A.D. 1591, A.H. 999.

Ibrahim, Shaikh, ibn-Mufrij-us-Suri (ابراهيم شيخ ابن مفرج الصوري), author of the history of Alexander the Great and of Khizir in Arabic, called Kitāb Tarikh al-Iskandar Zulkarnain-ul-Rāmi-va-Wazīrat-ul-Khizr. This is one of those substructures of myth upon which Eastern nations have erected a large and romantic edifice of fable, much in the same manner as the tales of chivalry of the Middle Ages, which, though fictitious, were partly attributed to real characters, as in the romances of the Knights of the Round Table and the Peers of Charlemagne.

Ibrahim Shaibani (ابراهيم شيباني), of Kirman Shāh, a pupil of Abū 'Abdullāh Maghrabī. He lived about the year A.D. 900.

Ibrahim Shirwani, Shaikh (ابراهيم شيرواني), ruler of Shirwān, who reigned about the beginning of the ninth century of the Hijra. Maulānā Kātibī flourished in his time and died in A.D. 1436.

Ibrahim, Sultan (ابراهيم سلطان), the son of Sultān Mas'ūd I. of Ghaznī, succeeded his brother Farrukh-zād in A.D. 1059, A.H. 450. He was a pious, liberal and just prince. In the first year of his reign he concluded a treaty of peace with Sultān Sanjar the Saljūkide, at the same time his son Mas'ūd espoused the daughter of Malikshāh, sister to Sultān Sanjar, and a channel of friendship and intercourse was opened between the two nations. He afterwards came to India and took several forts and obtained the title of conqueror by the extent of his victories. Sultān Ibrāhīm had 36 sons and 40 daughters by a variety of women, the latter of whom he gave in marriage to learned and religious men. He died after a reign of more than forty years in A.D. 1098, A.H. 492, aged 76 lunar years, and was succeeded by his son Sulṭān Masa'ūd II. or IM. According to the work called Tarikh Guzida he reigned 30 years and died in the year A.D. 1088, A.H. 481.

Ibrahim, Sultan (ابراهيم سلطان), emperor of the Turks, was the son of Ahmad (Achmat). He succeeded his brother Murād IV (Amarath) in February, A.D. 1640, A.H. 1049, and spent a great part of his reign in the war of Crete against the Venetians, but without any great success. He was assassinated for his debaucheries and repeated cruelties in A.D. 1649, A.H. 1059. His son, Muhammad IV, succeeded him.

Ilahi, Mir (الهی میر), name and poetical title of a person who was a descendant of the Sayyads of Rashidābād in Hamadān. He came to India in the latter part of the reign of Jahāngīr, and served under his son Shāh Jahān. He is the author of a biography called Khazīna Ganj Ilāhi, and of a Diwān containing amorous songs. The author of the Mirat Jahān says he died in A.D. 1648, A.H. 1057, but from the chronogram which Ghanī Kashmīrī wrote at his death, it appears that he died in A.D. 1651, corresponding with A.H. 1064.

Ilahi, Shāikh (الهی شیخ), a philosopher of Bayāna, who in the time of Khān, or Salīm Shāh, son of Sher Shāh Sur, made a great stir, by introducing a new system of religion. He called himself Imām Mahdī, who, according to the Shī'a tradition, is still living and is to conquer the world. Having raised a great disturbance in the empire, he was in the year A.D. 1547, A.H. 954, scourged to death by order of the emperor.

Ildiguz, Atabak (یلدگز اتابک) was a Turkish slave, sold to Sultān Masa'ūd, one of the Saljūqī princes. He is said to have so completely established himself in the favour of his royal master, that the latter advanced him to the highest stations in the kingdom; and the able manner in which Ildiguz executed every duty that was assigned to him led at last, not only to his being charged with the education of one of the young princes, which gave him the title of Atābak or Atābeg, but to his marriage with the widow of Tughral II. (the brother of Masa'ūd and nephew of Sultān Sanjar), and within a short period he became the most powerful noble of the Persian empire. He died at Hamdān in A.D. 1172, A.H. 568, in the reign of Arsalān Shāh, and left his power and station to his eldest son Atābak Muḥammad.

Isfahānī. He was a celebrated author, and has written in Arabic the history of Sālāh-uddin (Saladin) the Sultān of Egypt and Syria, in seven volumes, entitled Barq-us-Shāmī, the Lightning of Syria. He died A.D. 1201, A.H. 597.

'Imad Faqih Kirmani, Khwaja

(عماد فقيه کرمانی خواجہ), a Muhammad doctor who lived in the time of Shāh Shujāa' of Shirāz. His death is mentioned in the Jawāhir-ul-Asha'ūr to have happened in A.D. 1391, A.H. 793, but according to the poets Ilāhi and Daulat Shāh he died in the year A.D. 1371, A.H. 773, which appears to be correct. Ilāhi also mentions having seen 12,000 verses of his composition, adding that he is the author of the works called Mahabbat Nāma and Mehnat Nāma, and also that he wrote in all a Panj Ganj, that is to say, five Masnawis or Poems. It is mentioned in the Ḥabīb-us-Sar, that Khwāja 'Imād had a cat that would stand up to prayers with him, and do what he did. This was believed by Shāh Shujāa' to be a miracle of the Khwāja; but Khwāja Ilāfiz, who was his contemporary, and would not take it for a miracle, but a trick played by the doctor, wrote a ghazal on that occasion; the following is the translation of a couplet from the same: "O thou charming bird, where art thou going; stand still, and be not proud (or think thyself to be safe) because the cat of the saint says prayers." 'Imād Khwāja was buried at Kirman, the place of his nativity.

'Imad-ul Mulk (عماد الملک) commonly called Fath-ullāh 'Imād Shāh, founder of the 'Imād Shāhi dynasty in the Deccan, was descended from the Kanarese infidels of Bijanagar. Having been taken prisoner in the wars with that country when a boy, he was admitted among the bodyguards of Khān Jahān, commander-in-chief and governor of Berār. In the reign of Muhammad Shāh Bahmani, through the influence of Khwāja Mahmūd Gāwān, he received the title of 'Imād-ul-Mulk, and was subsequently raised to the office of commander of the forces in Beṛār. After the murder of his patron Khwāja Mahmūd Gāwān in A.D. 1481, A.H. 886, he retired to his government of Beṛār. On the accession of Sulṭān Mahmūd Bahmanī, he was honoured with the office of wizārat, which he held for some time, but being soon after disgusted with the court, he left it and declared his independence in the year A.D. 1485, A.H. 890. Elichpūr was his capital. He died about the year A.D. 1513, A.H. 919, and was succeeded by his eldest son 'Alā-uddin 'Imād Shāh.

'Imad Zangī (عماد زنگی). Vide

'Imād-uddin Zangī.

Imam (امام) (lit. "pattern" or "example"), a high priest or head or chief in religious matters, whether he be the head of all Muhammadans, as the Khālifa or the priest of a mosque, or the leader in the prayers of a congregation. This sacred title is given by the Shīas only to the immediate descendants of 'Alī the son-in-law of the prophet, who are twelve, 'Alī being the first. The last of these, Imām Mahdī, is supposed by them to be concealed (not dead), and the title which belongs to him cannot, they conceive, be given to another. Their doctrine is somewhat mystic; but among the Sunnis it is a dogma that there must be always a visible Imām or "father of the church." The title is given by them to the four learned doctors who are the founders of their faith, viz.: Imāms Hanifa, Mālik, Shāfi'ī, and Hanbal. Of these four sects, the Hanbalite and Mālikite may be considered as the most rigid, the Shāfi'ite as the most conformable to the spirit of Islāmism, and the Hanifite as the freest and most philosophical of them all. Two other Imāms, Abū Dāūd-uz-Zāhirī and Sufiān-us-Saurī, were also chiefs of the orthodox sects, but their opinions had not many followers, and after some time were totally abandoned. Ibn-Jarīr-ut-Tabarī, whose reputation as an historian is so familiar to Europeans, founded also a particular sect, which disappeared soon after his death. The following are the names of the twelve Shīa Imāms of the race of 'Alī:—

Imām 'Alī, the son-in-law of the prophet.

" Hasan.

" Husain.

" Zain-ul-'Abidin.

" Bāqir or Muhammad Bāqir.

" Jafar Sādiq.

" Mūsī Kāzim.

" 'Alī Mūsī Raza.

" Taqī or Muhammad Taqī.

" 'Alī Naqī.

" Hasan Askari.

" Mahdī.

son of Zafar Khān, the son of Firoz Shāh Tughlaq. He defeated Nasrat Khān and ascended the throne of Dehli about the beginning of the year A.D. 1400, A.H. 802, and was slain in a battle against Khizr Khān, the governor of Multan, in November, A.D. 1405, 19th Jumādā I. A.H. 808. After his death Sultān Mahmūd Shāh, who was defeated by Amīr Taimūr and had fled to Gujrat and then to Qanauj, returned on the invitation of Daula Khān Lodī, who commanded at Dehli, and took possession of the empire.

Iqbal-uddaula Muhsin Ali Khan

(اٲبال الدوله محسن على خان), the son of Shams-uddaula Ahmad 'Alī Khān, the son of Nawāb Sa'adat 'Alī Khān of Lucknow. He sailed for England to claim the throne of Audh in January, A.D. 1838, and after trying in vain to obtain the recognition of his claim from England, determined upon passing the remainder of his days in a life of sanctity in Turkish Arabia. He is the author of the work called Iqbal Firang.

Iradat Khan (ارادت خان), the title of Mir Ishāq or Ishāq Khān, the son of Nawāb 'Azim Khān, who held a high rank in the reign of the emperor Jahāngir. Iradat Khān held various offices under Shāh Jahān, and in the first year of 'Alamgir's reign he was appointed governor of Audh, but died after two months in October, A.D. 1658, Zil-hijja, A.H. 1068.

Iradat Khan (ارادت خان واضح), the title of Mirzā Mubārīk-ullāh, whose poetical name was Wāzih. His father Is-hāk Khān (who afterwards held the title of Kifāyet Khān) was the son of Nawāb 'Azim Khān. Both his grandfather and father were noblemen of high rank. The former was Mir Bakhsī to the emperor Jahāngir, and was afterwards appointed Faujdār of Jaunpūr, where he died in A.D. 1649, A.H. 1059. The latter was the subject of the last article; and his title of Iradat Khān was conferred on his son after his death. In the 33rd year of 'Alamgir our present subject was appointed Faujdār of Jāgnā, and at other periods of Aurangābād and Māndo in Māwa. Was squerry to Prince Bedar Bakht (q.v.) in the short war of 1707, of which he wrote an account. In the reign of Shāh 'Alam or Bahādūr Shāh I. he was governor of the Doāb, and the intimate friend of Mu'a'zzim Khān, Wazīr. In the latter part of his days he led a retired life, became a Kalandar, and died in A.D. 1716, A.H. 1128. His abilities as a poet were great, and he left a volume of poems behind him. He is the author of the Kalmāt Aliāt, (Sublime discourses), Mina Bāzār and of a history of Aurangzeb's Successors, which latter was translated into English by Jonathan Scott, Esq., in A.D. 1786. After his death, which happened in the time of Farrukhsiyar, his son Mir Ilidāet-ullāh received the title of Hoshdār Khān, held the rank of 4000, and died at Aurangābād A.D. 1744, A.H. 1157.

'Iraqi (عراقى), whose proper name is Fakhr-uddīn Ibrāhīm-bin-Shahryār, was a native of Hamdan in 'Irāq, and a pupil and grandson by the mother's side of the great Shaikh Shāhāb-uddīn Suharwardī, author of a host of mystical works highly esteemed by the Sūfis. 'Irāqī offended his parent and master, in consequence of a love affair, and went to India, where he remained some time, regretting his native country, and uttering his complaints in moving verse. He lived in company with the Shaikh Bahā-uddīn Zikaria of Multan, whom he accompanied on his journey and became his disciple. 'Irāqī, after a long sojourn in India, proposed returning to his own master, Shāhāb-uddīn; but the latter had died, and our poet continued his wanderings to Syria, where he expired after a long life of eighty-two years on the 23rd November, A.D. 1289, 8th Zi-Qa'da, A.H. 688, and was buried at Sālābi in Damascus close to the tomb of Shaikh Muhi-uddīn Ibn-ul-'Arabī. His son Shaikh Kabīr-uddīn is also buried there. 'Irāqī is the author of a work called Lama'āt.

[Vide Fakhr-uddīn 'Irāqī.]

'Irfan (عرفان), poetical name of Muhammad Rizā, the son of Muhammad Jān Irfān, author of the Kār Nāma, containing the praises of 'Alī Mardān Khān, the Amīr-ul-Umrā of the emperor Shāh Jahān.

Irtiza 'Ali Khan Bahadur (ارتضا على)

(خان بهادر), author of the Fardis

Irtizia, a concise treatise in Persian on the law of Inheritance, which appears to be the principal authority of that law in the Deccan. It was printed in Madras, but without a date.

tāsp or Gashtāsp (Hytašpes), the fifth king of the Kayāniān dynasty of Persia, was a great warrior, the son of Darius I. and great-grandson of Achaemenes. Isfandiyār answers, in some respects to the Xerxes (Sher Shāh) of the Greeks, and Ahasuerus of the Jews. He is the Kihāyārshā of the Cuneiform inscriptions. [But vide Malcolm's Persia, where it is shown that, according to native historians, Isfandiyar was never king, but only commander-in-chief of his father's armies. He is said to have been killed by the hero Rustam (q.v.).]

Is-haq (اسحاق), the poetical title of Jamāl-uddin, a cotton-carder of Shirāz. He was an elegant poet, and has left us a Dīwān called Aksir-ul-Ishkiyā, the Elixir of Hunger, full of amorous songs and parodies on the odes of Khwāja Hāfiz, each verse of which contains either the name of a sweetmeat or a dish. He lived in the time of Prince Sulṭān Sikandar, the son of Umar Shaikh, who much esteemed him. His proper name is Abū-Is-hāq, which he uses in poetry by abbreviating it into Bus-hāq.

Is-haq - bin - 'Ali (اسحاق بن علي), author of a Dīwān in Arabic, and of a work called Zuhr-ul-'Adāb. He died in A.D. 1022, A.H. 413.

Is-haq-bin-Husain or Hunain (اسحاق بن حسين)

(بن حسين يا حنين), an Arabian author who translated the Almagest of Ptolemy from the Greek into Arabic under the title of Tahrir-al-Majisti. This book is to be found in the French National Library. Shirāzī has written a commentary on this work, and entitled it Ḥāl Mushkilāt-al-Majasti.

Is-haq Khan (اسحاق خان), styled

Mō'tamin-uddaula, whose original name was Mirzā Ghulām 'Alī, was a nobleman of high rank, and a great favourite of the emperor Muhammad Shāh of Delhi. He was a good poet, and used for his political name Is-hāq. He died in the 22nd year of the emperor, A.D. 1740, A.H. 1153, and after his death his daughter was married to Shujā-uddaula, the son of Nawāb Saḍdar Jang, and the nuptials were celebrated with uncommon splendour, A.D. 1746, A.H. 1159.

Is - haq Maulana (اسحاق مولانا), a learned Musalmān who was born at Uchcha in Multān. In his youth he dedicated himself under the guidance of his uncle Sāyyad Sadru-uddin Rājū Quttāl, whose sister was his mother. He died in A.D. 1456, A.H. 860, and was buried in the compound of his own house at Sahūranpūr.

Is-haq Mousali (اسحاق موصلي), a celebrated Arabian author, born at Musal. It is related in the Kitāb Alaghānī that when he was on a journey he carried with him eighteen coffers full of books, though he declared that if he had not been anxious to make his luggage as light as possible, he would have brought double the quantity.

'Ishq (عشق), poetical title of Shāh Rukn-uddīn, who flourished in the reign of the emperor Shāh 'Alam.

Islam Khan (اسلام خان), title of Mir Ziyā-uddīn Husain Badakhshī, whose poetical name was Wālā. He served under the emperor 'Alamgir, and was raised to the rank of 5000 with the title of Islam Khān. He died in the year A.D. 1663, A.H. 1074, at Agra, and the chronogram of his death was written by 'Ghanī Kashmīrī. He was the father of Nawabs Himmat Khān, Saif Khān and 'Abdur Rahīm Khān.

Islam Khan (اسلام خان), the son of Safi Khān and grandson of Islam Khān Mashhadī, was Subādār of Lahore in the time of the emperor Farrukh-siyar, and was raised to the rank of 7000 in the reign of Muhammad Shāh.

Islam Khan 'Mashhadi, Nawab (اسلام خان مشهدی نواب) (he is by some called Islam Khān Rūmī, but that is a mistake). He was a native of Mashhad, and his original name was Mir 'Abdus Sulām. In the time of Jahāngir he held the mansab of 5000, and the Subādārī of Bengal; and in the time of Shāh Jahān was raised to the rank of 6000 with the title of Motam-uddaula and held the appointment of second Bakhshigārī and governorship of the Deccan. He afterwards was again appointed governor of Bengal. In the 13th year of Shāh Jahān he was raised to the rank of Wazīrat with the title of Jumdat-ul-Mulk. Shortly after he was raised to the rank of 7000, and the Subādārī of the Deccan. He was wazīr to Shāh Jahān and held the mansab of 7000, with the title of Islam Khān. He was some time before his death appointed governor of the Deccan, where he died in the 21st year of the emperor, on the 2nd November, A.D. 1647, 14th Shawwāl, A.H. 1057, and was buried at Aurangābād.

Islam Khan Rumi, "Turk," (اسلام خان رومی), title of Husain Pāshā, son of 'Alī Pāshā. He was governor of Basra, but being deprived of that situation by his uncle Muhammad, he left that country and came to India in A.D. 1689, A.H. 1080, where he was received by the emperor 'Alamgir with the greatest respect, and honoured with the rank of 6000 and title of Islam Khān. He was killed in the battle of Bijāpūr in the Deccan on the 13th June,

A.D. 1676, 11th Rabi' II. A.H. 1087. He had built his house at Āgra on a piece of ground consisting of four bigas and seven cottas, and a garden on a spot of three bigas and nine cottas, on the banks of the river Jamna near the Ghāt called Tajāra close to the fort of Āgra. Byzantine Turks were called Rumi in medieval India; and officers of that race were often employed in the artillery.

Islam Khan, Shaikh (اسلام خان شيخ), styled Nawāb Ya'tzād-uddaula, was a grandson of Shaikh Salīm Chishtī, and son-in-law of Shaikh Mubārīk, the father of the celebrated 'Abū'l Fazl, whose sister, named Lāḍī Begam, he had married. The latter succeeded him in the government of Bengal in A.D. 1613, A.H. 1022, in which year Islām Khān died. His remains were transported to Fathapūr Sikrī, where his monument is still to be seen.

Islam Shah (اسلام شاه). Vide Salīm Shāh.

Isma'il (اسماعيل), or Ishmael, the son of the patriarch Abraham.

Isma'il (اسماعيل بن امام جعفر صادق), the eldest son of Imām Ja'far Sādiq, from whom the sect of Isma'ilis or Isma'ilias take their name. They maintain that Isma'il Ibn Ja'far, who was the eldest son, but died during his father's life, should have succeeded to the dignity of Imām, and not Mūsā Kāzim, who was his younger brother, and became the seventh Imām. For their other opinions see Hughes in voc. Isma'ilīyah. Hasan Sabbah was of this sect.

[Vide Isma'ilis.]

Isma'il I. Safavi, Shah (اسماعيل صفوي),

(شاه), the son of Sultān Haidar, was the first monarch of the Safavi dynasty of kings who reigned in Persia (A.D. 1500). He traced his descent from Mūsā Kāzim the seventh Imām, who was descended in a direct line from 'Alī, the son-in-law of Muhammad. Almost all his ancestors were regarded as holy men, and some of them as saints. The first of this family who acquired any considerable reputation was Shaikh Safi-uddin, who had settled at Ardibel, and from whom this dynasty takes its name of Safwia or Safavi. His son Sadr-uddin Mūsā, as well as his immediate descendants, Khwāja 'Alī, Shaikh Ibrāhīm, Sultān Junaid, and Haidar, acquired the greatest reputation for sanctity. Contemporary monarchs, we are informed, visited the cell of Sadr-uddin. The great Taimūr (Tamerlane), when he went to see this holy man, demanded to know what favour he should confer upon him. "Release those prisoners you have brought from Turkistān," was the noble and pious request of the saint. The conqueror complied; and the grateful tribes, when they gained their liberty, declared themselves the devoted disciples of him to whom they owed it. Their children preserved sacred the obligation of their fathers; and the descendants of the captives of Taimūr became the supporters of the family of Safi, and enabled the son of a devotee to ascend one of the most splendid thrones in the world. Khwāja 'Alī, after visiting Mecca, went on a pilgrimage to Jerusalem, and died at that city. His grandson Junaid, sat on the masnad as a spiritual guide after the death of his father Shaikh Ibrāhīm; and so great a crowd of disciples attended this holy man that Jahān Shāh, the chief of the tribe of the Black Sheep, who at that time ruled Azurbaijān, became alarmed at their numbers and banished him from Ardibel. Junaid went to Dayārbikar, whose ruler, the celebrated Uzzan Hasan, received him kindly, and gave him his sister in marriage. He afterwards went with his disciples to Shirwān, where he was slain in a conflict with the troops of the king of that province in A.D. 1456, A.H. 860. His son Sultān Haidar succeeded him, and his uncle Uzzan Hasan, who had now by his overthrow of Jahān Shāh and Sultān Abū Saïd become powerful in Persia, gave him his daughter in marriage. The name of this princess, according to Muhammadan authors, was 'Alam Shao', but we are informed by a contemporary European writer that she was called Martha, and was the daughter of Uzzan Hasan by the Christian lady Despina, who was a daughter of Calo Joannes, king of Trebizond. Sultān Haidar also lost his life from the wound of an arrow which he received in a battle with the troops of Shirwān Shāh and Ya'qūb Beg in July, A.D. 1488, Shabān, A.H. 893. Sultān Haidar had three sons by this princess—Sultān 'Alī, Ibrāhīm Mirzā and Shāh Isma'il. When Isma'il attained the age of fourteen (his elder brothers having died some years before), he put himself at the head of his adherents, and marched against the great enemy of his family the ruler of Shirwān, called Shirwān Shāh, whom he defeated A.D. 1500, A.H. 906; and soon after, by another victory gained over Alwand Beg, the son of Ya'qūb Beg, a prince of the dynasty of the White Sheep, he became the master of the province of Azurbaijān, and established his residence at the city of Tabrez; and in less than four years became the acknowledged sovereign of the kingdom of Persia. He was born on the 17th July, A.D. 1487, 26th Rajab, A.H. 892; died after a reign of 24 lunar years on Monday the 23rd May, A.D. 1524, 19th Rajab A.H. 930, aged 38 years, and was buried at Ardibel. Muhammadan historians fix the commencement of his reign from the year A.D. 1500. He left four sons—Tahmasp, who succeeded his father, Sam Mirzā, Behrām, and Ikhlas Mirzā, and five daughters. He composed a Turkish Diwān in which he uses the Takhallus of Kitābī.

Isma'īl II. Safavī, Shah (اسماعيل)

(صنوی ثانی شاه), second son of Shāh

Tahmasp I. Safavī, whom he succeeded on the throne of Persia in May, A.D. 1576, Šafar, A.H. 984, by the aid of his sister Pari Khānum, who sent for him from the fort of Qahqah, where he had been confined by his father for 18 years. The short reign of this unworthy prince was marked by debauchery and crime. Immediately on his accession, he directed the massacre of all the princes of the blood-royal that were at Qazwīn, except 'Alī Mirzā, whose life was spared; but even he was deprived of sight. His eldest brother Muhammad Mirzā, who had a natural weakness in his eyes, which rendered him almost blind, and was during his father's life employed as governor of Khurāsān, was then at Shirāz. Orders were sent to murder him and his son 'Abbās, but before they could be executed Isma'īl was found dead one morning in a confectioner's house, supposed to have been poisoned by his sister. His death happened at Qazwīn on Sunday the 24th November, A.D. 1577, 13th Ramaẓān, A.H. 985, after a short reign of one year and six months. He was succeeded by his eldest brother Muhammad Mirzā, who, on his accession to the throne, took the title of Muhammad Khudā Banda.

Isma'īl (اسماعيل), surnamed al-Mansūr, third or fourth Khalīf of Barbary of the race of the Fātimites, succeeded his father al-Qāsim A.D. 945, A.H. 334, and having defeated and slain Yezid-ibn-Kondat, who had rebelled against his father, caused his body to be flayed, and his skin stuffed and exposed to public view. Al-Mansūr died after a reign of seven years and sixteen days in A.D. 952, 30th Shawwāl, A.H. 341, and was succeeded by his son Abū Tamīm Ma'd, surnamed Mo'izz-uddin-allāh.

Isma'īl 'Adil Shah, Sultan (اسماعيل)

(عادل شاه), of Bijāpūr, surnamed Abū'l Fātha, succeeded his father Yūsaf 'Adil Shāh on the throne of Bijāpūr in the Deccan in A.D. 1510, A.H. 915, and died after a glorious reign of 25 lunar years on Wednesday the 27th August, A.D. 1534, the 16th Šafar, A.H. 941, and was buried at Kūki near the tomb of his father. He was succeeded by his son Mallū 'Adil Shāh.

Isma'īl-bin-Hasan (اسماعيل بن حسن), author of the work called Zakhiya Khwāriṣm Shāh. He flourished in the reign of Alā-uddin Takash, Sulṭān of Khwārizm, who died in A.D. 1200, A.H. 596, and was a contemporary of Khwānī the poet.

Isma'īli or Isma'īlia (عيسى)

(اسماعيليه), sect of Isma'il-ibn-Jā'far

(q.v.). Their tenets were held by a man who had through the means of superstition established an influence over the minds of his followers, that enabled them to strike awe into the bosoms of the most powerful sovereigns, and to fill kingdoms with horror and dismay for a period of nearly two centuries. Their ruler, who became the chief of the Assassins, resided on a lofty mountain called Alamūt, and fate was in his hands; for there was no shape which his followers could not assume, no danger that they could not brave, to fulfil his mandates. These were the Isma'īlis or Assassins, well-known by the Crusaders, as subjects of the Old Man of the mountain. They were completely extirpated by Hākikū, the Tartar king of Persia, in the year A.D. 1256.

[Vide Husan Sabbāh.]

Isma'īl Haqqi, Shaikh (اسماعيل حقى)

(شيخ), author of a commentary on the Qurān called Riḥ-ul-Bayān, and of the Hadis-ul-Aghā'in.

Isma'īl Mirza (اسماعيل ميرزا), of Isfahān, an author.

Isma'īl Nizam Shah (اسماعيل نظام)

(شاه). His father, prince Burhān

Shāh, having been defeated in an attempt to dethrone his brother Murtaẓā Nizām Shāh, had fled for protection to the court of the emperor Akbar. On his departure he left behind him two sons, named Ibrāhīm and Isma'īl, who were kept confined in the fortress of Lāhāgūrh. On the death of Mirān Husain Shāh, the younger being raised to the throne of Ahmadnagar by Jamāl Khān in the month of March, A.D. 1589, Jumāda I. A.H. 997, took the title of Isma'il Nizām Shāh. His father Burhān Shāh, having received assistance from the emperor Akbar, marched against his son, but was defeated. However, in a short time after this, he renewed his attempts, and being joined by a great majority of the chiefs and people, attacked Jamāl Khān the king's minister, who was killed in the action on the 27th April, o.s. 1591, 13th Rajab, A.H. 999. Isma'il, who had reigned little more than two years, was taken prisoner and confined by his father, who ascended the throne of Ahmadnagar with the title of Burhān Nizām Shāh II.

Isma'il Pasha (إسماعيل پاشا), a recent Viceroy of Egypt, the successor of Muhammad 'Alī Pasha, who died in August, A.D. 1849.

Isma'il Samani, Amir (اسمعیل سامانی)

(امیر), the first King of Amīr of the race of Sāmān, called Sāmānī, traced his descent from Behrām Chobīn, the warrior who contended for the crown of Persia with Khusrō Parvez. Sāmān the great-grandfather of Isma'il, is termed, by the European writers, a keeper of herds, and a robber; but this merely designates the ordinary occupations of a Tartar chief. His father Nasr Ahmad, the son of Asad, the son of Sāmān, was appointed governor of Māwarūn Naḥr by the Khalīf Mo'tamid in the year A.D. 875, A.H. 261. On his death his son Isma'il succeeded him. Isma'il, after his conquest over Amū-bīn-Lāis, whom he seized and sent to Baghdād, in A.D. 900, became independent. The power of the dynasty of the Sāmānīs extended over Khurāsān, Seistān, Balkh and the countries of Transoxania, including the cities of Bukhārā and Samarqand. This justly celebrated prince died after a reign of twenty years in A.D. 907, Satar, A.H. 295, aged 60 years, and was succeeded by his son Amīr Ahmad Sāmānī.

The names of the kings of this family, who were called Amīrs, and who continued to reign for a period of 128 lunar years, are as follow: —

1. Amīr Isma'il Sāmānī.
2. „ Ahmad Sāmānī.
3. „ Nasr-bīn-Ahmad.
4. „ Nūh I. son of Nasr.
5. „ Abdul Mālik.
6. „ Mansūr I.
7. „ Nūh II.
8. „ Mansūr II.
9. „ 'Abdul Mālik II. the last of this race.

Isma'il, Sayyad-bin-Husain Jurjani

(اسمعیل سید بن حسین جرجانی), author of two medical works in Persian, called Aghrāz-ut-Tibb and Khif-i-'Alāī, which he dedicated to Alp Arslān, Sultān of Khwarizm.

'Ismat (عصمت). Vide Asmat.

Istaghana (استغنا), poetical title of 'Abdul Rasūl.

'Istārushi (عسترشى). Vide Muhammad-bin-Mahmūd.

I'tabī (عتابی), a poet, who died in the year A.D. 1614, A.H. 1023.

I'tmad Khan Khwaja Sara (اعتماد خان خواجه سرا), an eunuch and officer in the service of the emperor Akbar. He was stabbed by his servant Maqsūd 'Alī in A.D. 1578, A.H. 916, and was buried at a place called I'tmādpūr, twelve miles from Agra, which he had founded in his lifetime.

I'tmad Khan (اعتماد خان), title of Shaikh 'Abdūl Qawī, an Amīr of the reign of the emperor 'Alamgīr. He was murdered by a Qalandar in A.D. 1666, A.H. 1077.

I'tmad-uddaula (اعتماد الدوله), title of Khwāja Ayās or Ghayās the father of the celebrated Nūr Jahān Begām, the favourite wife of the emperor Jahāngīr. He was a Tartar and came from Persia to India in the reign of the emperor Akbar. In the time of Jahāngīr, he was raised to the high rank of I'tmād-uddaula, and his two sons to the first rank of 'Umra with the titles of 'Asaf Khān and I'tiqād Khān. He died near Kōt Kāngra, where he had accompanied Jahāngīr on his way to Kashmere in February, o.s. 1621, Rabi' I. A.H. 1030. His remains were transported to Agra and buried on the left bank of the Jamma, where a splendid mausoleum was built over his relics by his daughter Nūr Jahān. It was completed in A.D. 1628, and is still in a high state of preservation. It is said, but it seems not to be true, that she intended to raise a monument of silver to his memory, but was reminded by her architect that one of less covetable material stood a fairer chance of duration. After his death his son 'Abdūl Hasan was appointed Wazīr with the title of 'Asaf Khān. No private family ever made such alliances with royal blood as this Tartar; for his own daughter, his son's daughter and the daughter of his grandson, were married to three successive emperors of Hindūstān; and another daughter of his grandson, to prince Murāu Baksh, who disputed the throne with 'Alamgīr, and for some days thought himself in possession of it. The place where he is buried was a garden planned by I'tmād-uddaula during his lifetime. There are two tombs of yellow stone under the Rauza, or tomb; one of which is that of I'tmād-uddaula, while the other is said to be his wife's. It has a very large gate towards the east, built of red stone. It has two minars on both sides in the same number as there are two on the side of the Jamna towards the west. There is on the chabūtra towards the Jamna a fish made of stone; if the water runs in and rises as far as its mouth, the whole of Alluhābād will be inundated.

I'tmad-uddaula (اعتماد الدوله), title of Muhammad Amīr Khān, the prime minister of the emperor Muhammad Shāh.

[Vide Muhammad Amīr Khān.]

I'tmad-uddaula (اعتماد الدوله), son of Muhammad Amīn Khān, Wazīr.
[Vide Qamar-uddin Khān.]

I'tqad Khan (اعتقاد خان), the brother of 'Asaf Khān, Wazīr, and son of I'tmad-uddaula. He was appointed governor of Kashmere by the emperor Shāh Jahān, which situation he held for several years. He died at Agra in A.D. 1650, A.H. 1060.

I'tqad Khan (اعتقاد خان), the title of Mirzā Bahman Yār, the son of 'Asaf Khān and grandson of I'tmad-uddaula. He was raised to the rank of 4000 in the 25th year of Shāh Jahān, A.D. 1651, A.H. 1061, with the title of I'tqad Khān, which his father held for some time as well as his uncle the brother of 'Asaf Khān. In the 5th year of 'Alamgir, A.D. 1662, A.H. 1072, the rank of 5,000 was conferred on him. In A.D. 1667, A.H. 1077, he proceeded to Dacca in Bengal, to visit his brother Shāista Khān, who was then governor of that province, and died there in the year A.D. 1671, A.H. 1082.

I'tqad Khan (اعتقاد خان), former title of Zulfiqār Khān Nasrat Jang.

I'tsam-uddin, Shaikh (اعتصام الدين), author of the Shagarf Nāma-i-Wilāyat, being the travels of the author in Great Britain and France, some time before or after the year A.D. 1766, A.H. 1180. This work has been translated into English.

Izid Bakhsh, Mirza (ايزد بخش ميرزا).

His poetical name was Rasā; he was the grandson of 'Asaf Khān Ja'far Beg, who was Wazīr to Jahāngir. Izid Bakhsh was at first employed by the prince 'Azim Shāh, and then by his father the emperor 'Alamgir in the capacity of Munshi. On the accession of Farrukh-siyar, he was disgraced by that emperor for having cast some reflections on his father Azim-ush-Shān on account of the battle which took place between

'Azim Shāh and his brother Bahādur Shāh. By the order of the emperor, the hairs of his mustache were plucked out one by one, and afterwards he was cruelly murdered. This event took place about the beginning of the year A.D. 1713, A.H. 1125. His tomb is still to be seen in the compound of the Agra College.

'Izzat (عزت), poetical name of (Shaikh) 'Abdul 'Aziz, which see.

Safdar Jang. He was sent to Persia on an embassy to Nādir Shāh after his invasion of Hindūstān, by the emperor Muhammad Shāh.

[Vide Najaf Khān and Muhammad Quli Khān.]

'Izz-uddaula Bakhtyar (عزالدوله), the son of Mu'izz-uddaulaibn-Buya. He succeeded to the kingdom of 'Irāq the same day on which his father died, viz. Monday the 1st April, A.D. 967, 17th Rabi' II. A.H. 356. The Khalif-al-Tāya Billah in the year A.D. 974, gave him his daughter in marriage, on whom a dowry of one hundred thousand dinārs was settled by her husband. He was a noble prince, and possessed such bodily strength that he could take an enormous bull by the horns and throw him to the ground. A contest which arose between him and his cousin 'Azd-uddaula relative to their respective possessions, caused a breach between them which led to a war, and on Wednesday the 29th May, A.D. 978, they met and fought a battle, in which 'Izz-uddaula was slain, aged 36 years. His head was placed on a tray and presented to 'Azd-uddaula, who is said, on seeing it, to have covered his eyes with his handkerchief and wept.

'Izz-uddin Abdul Aziz - bin - Abdus-Salam Damishqi, Shaikh (عزالدين)

(عبدالعزيز بن عبدالسلام دمشقي), author of the Shajrat-ul-Ma'arif. He died in the year A.D. 1261, A.H. 660.

'Izz-uddin Husain (عزالدين حسين).

He was created by Sulṭān Ibrāhīm of Ghaznī, Amīr Hājib (Lord Chamberlain), in which station he conducted himself so well, that the king gave him a princess of the house of Ghaznī in marriage. He rose daily in favour and estimation, till Sulṭān Mas'ūd, the son of Ibrāhīm, put him in possession of the principality of Ghūr. By the princess of Ghaznī he had seven sons entitled the seven stars. One of them, Fakhr-uddin Mas'ūd, became king of Bāmyān. The second was Qutb-uddin Muhammad, who married his cousin, a princess of Ghaznī, the daughter of Sulṭān Bahrām Shāh. The third was 'Alā-uddin Hasan, prince of Ghūr, who destroyed Ghaznī (c. A.D. 1152). Izz-uddin during his life-time paid tribute to the Saljūqs as well as to the Ghaznavides.

'Izz-uddin Khalid Khani (عزالدين خالد خاني).

(خالد خاني), author of the work called Dalā'il Firōz Shāhi, which he translated into Persian by order of Firōz Shāh, from a Hindi book which treated on philosophy, astrology and divination.

J

JABA

Jabali (جبالي), the son of Ayham, last king of the tribe of Ghassān, who were Christian Arabs. He became a Muhammadan, and afterwards attempted to assassinate Umar, the second Khalīf after Muhammad. He died A.D. 673, A.H. 53.

Jabali (جبالي), surname of Abū 'Alī

Muhammad-ibn-'Abdul Wahāb, who was the master of the celebrated Abū'l Hasan al-Ash'arī, chief of the sect of the Ash'arians, and one of the four Imāms of Musalmanism.

Jabali (جبلي), poetical name of Abdul

Wāṣa, who was born in the mountains of Ghurjistan, hence his takhallus which means mountaineer. He found a patron in Bahrām Shāh of Ghaznī, and served Sulṭān Sanjar Saljūki fourteen years. He died in A.D. 1160, A.H. 555, and left a Diwān of Kasidas.

Ja'far-al-Barmaki (جعفر البرمكي بن يحيى), son of Ahia or Yahia and grandson of Khālid, the son of Barmak who was originally a fire-worshipper. He succeeded his father Ja'far as wazīr to the Khalif Hārūn-al-Rashīd; his grandfather having been wazīr to Abdū'l 'Abbās Saffāh, who was the first of all the Khalifs who had a wazīr. This wazīr Ja'far, was a great favourite of Hārūn-al-Rashīd who gave him 'Abbāsa, his sister, in marriage, under the condition that he was to have no carnal connection with her, but he transgressed the command, for which the Khalif ordered his head to be struck off. He also threw his brother Al-Fazl and his father Abia into prison, and there left them to die. Ja'far was only 28 years old when he was executed, having been in the favour of Hārūn-al-Rashīd for the space of seventeen years. Ja'far was beheaded on Sunday the 29th January, A.D. 803, 1st Šafar A.H. 187, his body was gibbeted on one side of the bridge of Baghdad, and his head stuck up on the other. He was the ancestor of the "Barmecides."

Ja'far Ali Khan (جعفر علی خان), commonly called Mir Ja'far, whom the English placed on the masnad as Nawāb of Bengal, Behar and Orissa, after the defeat and death of Nawāb Sirāj-uddaula, in June, A.D. 1757, Shawwāl A.H. 1170. He was, however, deposed in A.D. 1760, A.H. 1174, on account of alleged negligence in the affairs of his government, and was obliged to retire on an ample pension, when his son-in-law, Mir Qāsim 'Ali Khān was raised to the masnad. This man after his elevation, intending to drive out the English from Calcutta, was defeated in a battle fought at Udwa Nala on the 2nd of August, A.D. 1763, 22nd Muharram, A.H. 1177, and expelled, and Mir Ja'far was again placed on the masnad by the English. He died on Tuesday the 5th February, A.D. 1765, 14th Shabān, A.H. 1178, and his son Mir Phūlwārī, who assumed the title of Najm-uddaula, was elevated to the masnad. Ja'far Ali's cemetery is at Murshidābād, where his Begam and his son Miran are also buried.

Ja'far Khan (جعفر خان بن صادق)

(خان), son of Sādiq Khān, king of Persia of the House of Zēd. He was recognised by the principal noblemen in Fars, after the death of 'Alī Murād Khān in 1785, and the people were forward in acknowledging his authority, but unable to resist his enemy 'Aqā Muhammad Khān, who now ventured to embrace a more extensive field for the exertion of his talents, and commenced his march against Isfahān. Ja'far Khān was treacherously murdered in 1788; his head was severed from his body, and cast before the citadel, the sport of children, and the outcasts of the city.

Ja'far Khan (جعفر خان), a nobleman who in the first year of the emperor Bahādur Shāh was appointed governor of Kashmir in the room of Nawāzish Khān A.D. 1707, A.H. 1119. He proved to be a bad governor and a mob set fire to his residence. He died in Kashmir of drink and excess A.D. 1709, A.H. 1121, and according to the record of his death, must be faring badly at present.

Ja'far Nasiri (جعفر نصیری), an author, who completed the work called Zatā'if Ahqāqī, in A.D. 1742, A.H. 1155, which was commenced by Mirzā Muhammad Sālah.

Ja'far Sadiq (جعفر صادق), or Ja'far the Just. He was the eldest son of Muhammad Bāqir, the grandson of Imām Husain. He is reckoned the sixth Imām; was born at Madina about the year A.D. 702, A.H. 83, and died in the same city under the khilāfat of Abū Ja'far 'Al-Mansūr, in A.D. 765, A.H. 148. He was very famous for his doctrine amongst the Musalmāns, was invited to court by Al-Mansūr, that he might profit by his counsel: Ja'far returned for answer, "Whoever has a view duly to this world, will not give you sincere advice, and he who regards the next, will not keep your company." He was buried in the cemetery of Al-Baqia at Madina. The same tomb contains the bodies of his father, Imām Bakir, his grandfather 'Alī Zain-ul-'Abidin, and his grandfather's uncle, Hasan, son of 'Alī. His mother's name was Unim Farwāh, daughter of Kāsim, the son of Muhammad, the son of Abū Bakr Sādiq, the first Khālif after Muhammad. He is said to be the author of a book of fate called Fāl Nūma.

Ja'far Zatali, Mir (جعفر زتلی میر).

a Sayyad of Nārnoul, contemporary with Mirzā Bedūl. He served under prince 'Azim Shāh, the son of the emperor 'Alauḡir, who was slain in battle in A.D. 1707, A.H. 1019. Ja'far was the most celebrated humouristic poet of Hindūstān: his compositions are a mixture of Persian and Urdū. He is the author of a Shāhnāma in Rekhta. He was put to death in A.D. 1713, A.H. 1225, by order of the emperor Farrukh-siyar, on account of a satirical verse he had written on the accession of that emperor to the throne of Dehli.

Jagat Goshairi (جگت گوشاینی),

Vide Jodh Bāi.

Jagat Narayan (جگت ناراین), a

Hindū poet who wrote some kasidas in praise of Nawāb 'Asaf-uddaula of Lucknow, who died in A.D. 1797, A.H. 1212.

Jagannath, Raja (جگناتھ راجا), the son of Bhara Mal. He held the rank of 5000 in the time of the emperor Jahāngir, about the year A.D. 1605, A.H. 1014.

Jagat Singh (جگت سنگه), the son of Makund Singh Hara, lived in the time of the emperor 'Alauḡir, A.D. 1659.

Jagat Singh (جگت سنگه), Rāja of Jaipūr or Jainagar, was the son of Rāja Partāp Singh, the son of Madho Singh, the son of Ishuri Singh, the son of the celebrated Rāja Jai Singh Sawāi, who lived in the time of the emperor Muhammad Shāh. Jagat Singh succeeded his father in A.D. 1803, and is said to have been an effeminate prince; though he died without issue, he was succeeded by Rāja Jai Singh, a posthumous son, believed supposititious.

Jahan. Vide Benī Narāyan.Jahan Ara Begam (جهان آرا بیگم), daughter of the emperor Shāh Jahān, by Muntāz Mahal, daughter of 'Asaf Khān, wazīr; was born on Wednesday the 23rd March, A.D. 1614, 21st Šafar, A.H. 1023. One of the most beautiful examples of female modesty to be found in the annals of woman is recorded of this princess, celebrated in song and history as the heroic, the witty, the generous, the elegant, the accomplished, and the beautiful Jahān Arā Begam. One night (26th March, A.D. 1644, 27th Muharram, A.H. 1054), as she was returning from her father's apartments to the harem, in one of the passages which connect the latter building with the body of the palace, her flowing drapery was unhappily ignited by the flame of a lamp. Her whole dress, which was of the finest muslin, was instantly in flames, and of course her life was in imminent peril; but, knowing that she was then within hearing of many young nobles of the court, she would not raise an alarm, lest they should run to her assistance, and behold her unveiled, or lay their hands upon her in order to extinguish the flames. Heroically enduring all the agonies which fire could inflict, she withheld her cries, and rushed forward until she reached the women's apartments, and there sunk upon the floor, almost lifeless. For a long period, no hopes were entertained of her recovery, but she was ultimately restored to health by an English physician named Gabriel Boughton who was then at Sūrāt, and had been sent for by the emperor her father then in the Deccan, although her beauty was cruelly impaired. The emperor, in reward for Dr. Boughton's services, besides other favours, granted him, at his disinterested request, a patent for his countrymen to trade free of customs throughout his dominions. The large masjid of red stone adjoining the fort of Agra near the Tripolia (now demolished) was built by her (or in her honour) in the year A.D. 1648, A.H. 1058, at a cost of five lacs of rupees. She died in the reign of her brother the emperor 'Alamgir on the 5th September, A.D. 1680, 3rd Rāmāzān, A.H. 1092, and lies buried in the yard of the mausoleum of Nizām-uddīn Auliā at Dehli. The name of Jahān Arā will ever adorn the pages of history as a bright example of filial attachment and heroic self-devotion to the dictates of duty, more especially when we view it in contrast with the behaviour of her sister Roshan Arā, who, by aiding the ambitious designs of Aurangzib, enabled him to dethrone Shāh Jahān. The amiable and accomplished Jahān Arā not only supported her aged father in his adversity, but voluntarily resigned her liberty and resided with him during his imprisonment in the fort of Agra. Her tomb is of white marble, open at the top, and at the head is a tablet with a Persian inscription inlaid in black marble letters, to the following effect: "Let no one scatter over my grave anything but verdure, for such best becomes the sepulchre of one who had a humble mind." On the margin is written, "The perishable faqir Jahān Arā Begam, daughter of Shāh Jahān, and the disciple of the saints of Chisht, died in the year of the Hijra, A.H. 1092."

Jahan Bano Begam (جهان بانو بیگم),

the daughter of Prince Murād, the son of the emperor Akbar. She was married to Prince Parwez, the son of Jahāngir, by whom she had Nādira Begam, who was married to Dara Sheko, the eldest son of Shāh Jahān.

Jahandar Shah (جهاندار شاه), surnamed Muhammad Mu'izz-uddin, was the oldest son of the emperor Bahādur Shāh, and grandson of 'Alamgir. He was born in the Deccan on Wednesday the 8th April, A.D. 1663, 10th Rāmāzān, A.H. 1073. The death of his father, which took place in February, A.D. 1712, Muharram, A.H. 1124, was followed by the usual struggle among his sons for the crown. The incapacity of Jahāndār Shāh, the eldest, had given a great ascendancy to the second whose name was Azīm-ush-Shān. He was supported by most of the nobility and of the army, but his other brothers joined their interests, and were kept together by the persuasions and false promises of Zulfikār Khān, the Amīr-ul-'Umra. Their concord was of short duration, and lasted only until the defeat and death of Azīm-ush-Shān; after which a bloody battle ensued between the three surviving brothers, two of whom, viz., Jahān Shāh with his son Parkhunda Akhtar, and Rafī-ush-Shān, being killed. The subject of this notice, by the intrigues and support of the Amīr-ul-'Umra, remained undisputed master of the throne, and was crowned at Lahore on Thursday the 10th April, A.D. 1712, 14th Rābi' I., A.H. 1124, with the title of Jahāndār Shāh. He was in himself a weak man, effeminately careful of his person, fond of ease, indolent, and totally ignorant of the art of government. He made the vast empire of Hindūstān an offering to the foolish whims of a public courtesan, named Lāl Kūnwār, thus vexing the minds of worthy subjects loyal to his family. He reigned only nine months, being defeated in a battle fought near Agra, and afterwards taken prisoner and murdered in the month of January, A.D. 1713, Zil-hijja, A.H. 1124, by order of his nephew Farrukh-siyar (the son of the late Azīm-ush-Shān), who became emperor. His corpse was exposed to public view, and then interred in the platform before the mausoleum of the emperor Humāyūn at Dehli. His mother's name was Nizām Bāi.

Jahandar Shah, Prince (جهاندار شاه), the eldest son of the emperor Shāh 'Alam. Born about A.D. 1749.

Appointed Regent by Ahmad Shāh Abdālī in 1761, after the overthrow of the Mahrattās at Pānipat, he administered the remains of the Empire until his father's restoration in 1771. His private appellation was Jawān Bakht (Mirzu). In April, A.D. 1784, on account of the unsettled affairs of his father, he made his escape from Dehli and repaired to Lucknow, where the British Governor of Bengal, Warren Hastings, had arrived to regulate the concerns between the wazīr, Asaf-uddaula, and the Company. He accompanied Mr. Hastings to Benares, which place he chose for his residence. He had an allowance of five lacs of rupees per annum from the Nawāb wazīr at the earnest request of Mr. Hastings. He died in Benares on the 31st May, A.D. 1788, 25th Shabān, A.H. 1202, after an illness of little more than twenty-four hours; aged about 39 years, and was buried with every honour due to his rank near the tomb of a venerated Muhammadan in Benares. The English Resident and principal people of the city attended his funeral. He left behind him three sons, whom, with the rest of his family, he recommended to the care of the English, under whom they still enjoy a comfortable asylum and allowance at Benares. Garcin de Tassy informs us, that there is a work of his in the Indian House, which has the title of Bayān Ināyet Murshidāda. The narrative written by this prince, was translated by Col. Scott, and published in the appendix to Mr. Hastings' Review of the state of Bengal.

Jahangir (جهانگیر), a cousin and husband of Sikandar (q.v.) Begam of Bhopal. His ancestor, Dost Muhammad, about the time of Aurangzib's death, declared himself independent at Bhopal. Jahangir's uncle was the third Nawāb, on whose death his widow was declared Regent by the army, and his daughter Sikandar Begam, heir. She married Jahangir who died in the year A.D. 1845.

Jahangir (emperor) (جهانگیر نورالدین)

(محمد), surnamed Nūr-uddīn Muhammad, was the eldest son of the emperor Akbar the Great; was born in the village of Sikri on Wednesday the 31st August, A.D. 1569, 17th Rabi' I. A.H. 977, and was named Mirzā Salīm on account of his coming into the world, as supposed, by the prayers of Shaiḫ Salīm Chishtī, a venerable Shaiḫ and dervish who resided in the village of Sikri, now called Fathapūr Sikri in the province of Agra. His mother, who received the title of Mariam Zammam, was the daughter of Rājā Bihārī Māl Kaḥhwihā. After the death of his father, which took place on the 16th October A.D. 1605, he succeeded him by the title of Nūr-uddīn Muhammad Jahangir. He reigned 22 lunar years, 8 months and 15 days from the day of his father's demise; and died in camp on Sunday the 28th October, A.D. 1627, 28th Safar, A.H. 1037, on his way to Lāhore from Kashmir, aged 59 lunar years, 11 months and 12 days; and was interred in the suburbs of Lāhore in the garden of his favourite wife Nūr Jahān Begam. He was succeeded by his son Mirzā Khurrah, who took the title of Shāh Jahān. His favourite Sultāna Nūr Jahān, who survived him 18 years, is also buried in the mausoleum. Jahangir, after his death, received the title of "Jannat Makānī." It was to this prince that Sir Thomas Roe was sent as ambassador by King James I. Sir Thomas has given a good description of the grandeur of the court of Hindūstān; but very little notice is taken of this embassy in the chronicles of the East. In 1612, Jahangir permitted the Company to establish factories at Sūrat, Ahmadābād, and Cambay. Jahangir wrote his own memoir in Persian, called Tūzak Jahāngiri, which has been translated by Major David Price, London, 1829, 184 pages 4to. It is also called Jahāngir Nāma.

Jahangir Mirza (جهانگیر مرزا), the eldest son of Akbar Shāh II. king of Dehlī. He was, in consequence of having fired a pistol at Mr. Seton, the Resident at Dehlī, sent as a State prisoner to Allāhābād, where he resided in the garden at Sultān Khusrō for several years, and died there in A.D. 1821, A.H. 1236, aged 31 years; a salute of 31 guns was fired from the ramparts of the fort of Allāhābād at the time of his burial. He was at first interred in the same garden, and subsequently his remains were transferred to Dehlī, and buried in the court-yard of the mausoleum of Nizām-uddin Aulia.

Jahangir Mirza (جهانگیر مرزا), the eldest son of Amīr Taimūr. He died before his father A.D. 1574, A.H. 776. His son's name was Pir Muhammad, which see.

Jahangir Quli Khan (جهانگیر قلی)

(خان), son of Khūn 'Azim Mirza

'Aziz Kōka, served under the emperors Akbar and Jahangir, and died in the fifth year of Shāh Jahān A.D. 1631, A.H. 1041.

Jahangir Quli Khan, Kabuli (جهانگیر قلی)

(قلی خان کابلی), an amīr of the rank of 5000, who was appointed governor of Bengal by the emperor Jahangir, in A.D. 1607, A.H. 1016, and died there in A.D. 1608, A.H. 1017.

Jahanian Jahan Gasht, Makhdum

(جهانیان جهان گشت مخدوم).

[Vide Shaiḫ Jalāl.]

Jahan Khatun (جهان خاتون), a famous lady, who after the death of her first husband was married to Khwāja Amīn-uddīn, minister to Shāh Abū Is-hāq, ruler of Shīrāz. She is said to have been a very beautiful woman, and a good poet.

Jahan Shah (Prince) (جهان شاه)

(شهرزاده), the third son of the emperor

Bahādur Shāh. He was slain in the battle which took place at Lāhore, after the death of his father, between his brothers in March, A.D. 1712. His mangled body with that of his brother Rati-ush-Shān and his son, was conveyed to Dehlī and interred without ceremony and pomp in the mausoleum of the emperor Humāyūn, the general receptacle of the murdered princes of the imperial family.

Jahan Shah Turkman (جهان شاه)

(ترکمان), son of Qarā Yūsaf Turkman, was the brother of Sikandur Turkman, after whose death in A.D. 1437, A.H. 841, the government of Azfūjān was conferred on him by Shāhrukh Mirzā, the son of Amūr Taimūr. He held it till the death of that prince in A.D. 1447, A.H. 850, after which he conquered most part of Persia, and carried his arms as far as Dayārbikar, and fell in a battle which he fought against Hasan Beg, commonly called Uzzan Hasan, the ruler of that province, on the 10th November, A.D. 1467, 12th Rabi' II. A.H. 872, aged 70 years. He reigned more than 30 lunar years, and as he was slain in battle against Hasan Beg, the chronogram of the year of his death was found to contain the words "Slain by Hasan Beg."

Jahan Soz (جهان سوز), a title of Sultān 'Alā-uddīn Hasan Ghori.

Jahi (جاهی), the poetical name of Ibrāhīm Mirzā (Sultān), which see.

Jahiz or Aljahiz (جاحظ یا الجاحظ), the surname of Abū 'Usmān 'Umar bin-Mahbūb Kame'āna, a man of great learning, but of a very eccentric tendency of mind. He wrote a book on the Commerce of the Arabians early in the third century of the Hijra entitled Kutāb-al-Nuzrat fil Tayārat, which is frequently quoted by Nuwari. Jahiz died A.D. 868, A.H. 255, at the age of 96 years.

Jaiapa (جیاپا سیندھیا), Sindhia, succeeded his father Rānoji Sindhia, the founder of the Sindhia family, in A.D. 1750, A.H. 1163, and was murdered in his tent in A.D. 1769, A.H. 1172. He was succeeded by his brother Mādhoji Sindhia.

Jai Chand (جی چند رائہور), the last

Rāthōr monarch of Kanauj. He ruled the country from Buxar to Kanauj and reigned about the Sambat year A.D. 1400, A.H. 1343. His favourite residence was near the city of Jaunpūr which he had built in A.D. 1359, Sambat 1416. The present city of Jaunpūr was built by Firōz Shāh in the year A.D. 1370, A.H. 772, in honour of his uncle Fakhr-uddīn Muhammad Jānān, the date of which is found in the words "Shahr Jaunpūr." According to Colonel Tod, Jaichand reigned about the 12th century of the Christian era, and one of his grandsons named Seoji, with a few retainers, planted the Rāthōr standard in Mārwar in the year A.D. 1212.

Jai Chand (جی چند), a Rāja of Nagarkot or Kāngra, who lived in the time of the emperor Akbar.

Jaikishun (جی کشن), a Kashmiri

Brāhman whose poetical name was 'Izzat, was the agent of Nāṣab Is-hāq Khān.

Jaimal (جیمیل), a Rāja, famous in history as "the bravest of the brave." In A.D. 1668 Udai Singh, the son of Rana Sanka or Sanga, and the founder of the capital Udaipur in Chittōr, came under the displeasure of the emperor Akbar. The recreant chief fled and left the defence of his capital Chittōr to Rāja Jaimal, who was killed by Akbar himself in the course of the siege, A.D. 1668.

Jaipal I. (جیپال اول), son of Hitpāl,

Rāja of Lāhore of the Brāhman tribe, who reigned over the country extending in length from Sarhind to Langhan, and in breadth from the kingdom of Kashmir to Multān. He was once defeated by Subaktagin, the Sultān of Ghazni, with great slaughter, and again on Monday the 27th November, A.D. 1001, by his son Sultān Mahmūd, when Jaipāl with fifteen of his principal chiefs, being his sons and brethren, were taken prisoners, and 5000 of his troops were slain on the field of battle. He was afterwards released by Mahmūd, but in compliance with a custom which prevailed among the Hindūs, that whatever Rāja was twice overpowered by strangers became disqualified to reign, he ordered a funeral pile to be prepared, and having set fire to it with his own hands, perished therein. He was succeeded by his son Anandpāl.

Jaipal II. (جیپال ثانی راجہ), Rāja of Lāhore, son of Anandpāl, whom he succeeded in A.D. 1013. He was routed in a great battle by Sultān Mahmūd in A.D. 1022, on the banks of the river Ravi; the result was the permanent occupation of Lāhore by a Muhammadan governor, and the appointment of a Viceroy of Lāhore by Mahmūd. Jaipāl fled to Ajmīr. This has been considered the foundation of the Muhammadan empire in India.

Jai Singh I. (Raja) (جی سنگہ اول)

(راجہ), of the tribe of Kachhwāhā, commonly called Mirzā Rāja, was the son of Rāja Māhā Singh, the son of Partāp Singh, the son of Rāja Mān Singh. He served under the emperor Shāh Jahān, and was made governor over the conquered provinces of the Deccan about the year A.D. 1664, by the emperor 'Alamgir. He was recalled to court in A.D. 1666, but died on the road, soon after his arrival at Burhānpūr, 28th Muharram, A.H. 1078. According to Orme's Historical Fragments of the Mughul Empire, Jai Singh died at Burhānpūr soon after the pretended revolt of Sultān Muazzim, the son of the emperor, and was said to have been poisoned by the procurement of 'Alamgir. There never was a prince among the Rājputs equal to him in accomplishments. He was completely learned in Hindi, and understood the Turkish, Persian, and Arabic languages. He left two sons, Rām Singh his eldest, and Kirat Singh. The former was honoured after his father's death with the title of Rāja, and put in possession of his father's territories. Jai Singh had built several fine edifices at Agra, of which no sign remain now, but the name and place on which the buildings stood is still called Jaisinghpura.

Jai Singh II. Sawai (جی سنگہ سوائی)

(ثانی), a Rāja of the tribe of Kachh-wāhā rājputs, was the son of Bishn Singh, the son of Kishun Singh, the son of Rām Singh, the son of Mirzā Rāja Jai Singh. He is commonly called Mirzā Rāja Jai Singh Sawai. He was the zamindār or Rāja of a considerable territory in the province of Ajmir named Amer, but since the prince founded a new city called Jaipūr the Rājaship has also taken that name. Bishn Singh, the father of Jai Singh and Bijai Singh, died about the year A.D. 1693, Sambat 1750, and after his death the title of Rāja was bestowed on Jai Singh by the emperor 'Alamgir with the rank of 1500, and subsequently with that of 2000. After the death of that emperor he espoused the cause of 'Azim Shāh, the son of 'Alamgir, whilst his brother Bijai Singh aided Bahādūr Shāh, who on his accession to the throne conferred the rank of 3000 on the latter. Bijai Singh quarrelled with his brother for the Rāj; and the emperor, not willing to displease either, confiscated their estate, and appointed Sayyad Husain Ali Khān of Bārha as Faujdār of that place. When the emperor marched to the Deccan to punish his brother Kāmbakhsh, A.D. 1708, A.H. 1120, Jai Singh, with the aid of Rāja Ajit Singh Rāthōr, engaged the Faujdār in battle and having killed him took possession of the province. In the reign of Farrukhsiyar he was honoured with the title of Dhīrāj Rāja Jai Singh, and in the time of Muhammad Shāh with that of Sawai (q.d. "exceptional"). In the year A.D. 1732, A.H. 1146, he was appointed governor of Mālwa. His love of science makes him one of the most remarkable persons of his nation. He built five observatories for astronomical studies, namely, at Dehli, Banaras, Mathrā, Ujain and Jaipūr, and published a work on astronomy called Zij Muhammad Shāhi. He also erected a Karavānsarai and market in every province of Hindūstān for the convenience of travellers at his own expense. After his death, which took place in September, A.D. 1743, 9th Shabān, A.H. 1156, three of his wives, with many concubines, burned themselves on his funeral pile. He was succeeded by his son Ishuri Singh, after whose death in A.D. 1760 Madho Singh his son succeeded him.

[Vide Shaikh Jalāl.]

Jalal Bukhari, Sayyad (جلال بخاری)

(سید), a descendant of Sayyad Ahmad

Kabir and son of Sayyad Muhammad Bukhārī. He was born in the year A.D. 1594, 5th Jumādā II. A.H. 1003, and was highly respected by the emperor Shāh Jahān, who conferred on him the office of Sadarat (chief justiceship) of all India with the mansab of 6000. He sometimes amused himself in writing poetry, and had adopted the word Razā for his poetical title. He died on the 25th May, 1647, o.s. 1st Jumādā I. A.H. 1057, and is buried at Tajganj in Agra. His grandfather Sayyad Ahmad Kabir lies buried at a place in Dehli called Bijai Mandil. Jalāl Bukhārī left three sons, viz. Sayyad Ja'far, Sayyad Ali ^{and} Razwī Khān, and Sayyad Mūsa, on whom high titles were conferred by Shāhjahān, and his eldest son Ja'far obtained the place of his father.

Jalal (Hakim) (جلال شروانی حکیم), a physician and poet, who was a native of Shirwān. He flourished in the reign of Muhammad Muzaffar and his son Shāh Shujān', rulers of Shiraz, both of whom reigned from A.D. 1353 to 1384. He is the author of a poem entitled Gul-wa-Nauroz, which he wrote in A.D. 1334, A.H. 734. He is also called Jalāl-uddin Tabīb.

Jalali or Jalal (جلالی یا جلال), commonly called Sayyad-i-'Alām Jalāl or Jalālī, was a native of Ahmadabad, and his father and spiritual guide was Mir Sayyad Jalāl bin-Hasan. He is the author of a Diwān.

Jalal-uddin Furbī (جلال الدین پوری), king of Bengal, whose original name was Jitmal, ascended the throne of Bengal on the death of his father Rāja Kans in A.D. 1392, A.H. 794. He became a convert to the Muhammadan faith and received the name of Jalāl - uddin. He ruled with such justice that he became entitled to the appellation of the Nausherwān of the age. He reigned 17 years and died in A.D. 1410, A.H. 812, when his son Ahmad succeeded him.

Jalal-uddin Rumi, Maulana (جلال)

(الدین رومی مولانا), commonly called

Maulānā or Maulwī Rūmī, was the son of Bahā-uddin Wālḍ Bukhī. He is not less esteemed as a poet than as a metaphysician, and is the author of the astonishing work entitled the Maṣnawī Maulwī Rūmī. He founded an order of Derwishes or Sūfīs in the city of Conia (Iconium) in Asiatic Turkey. He was born at Balkh on the 30th September, A.D. 1207, 6th Rabī' I. A.H. 604, and died in the time of Abkā Khān on the 17th December, A.D. 1273, 5th Jumādā II. A.H. 672. He was buried in a monastery at Conia, and his tomb was visited for many centuries by his devout countrymen, who considered his works as the effect of inspiration and only inferior to the Qurān. His Diwān contains 30,000 verses, and his Maṣnawī more than 47,000. In his Diwān, instead of his own title, he has inserted the name of Shams Tabrēz his master.

Jalal-uddin Saynti (جلال الدين),

(سيوطي), son of 'Aḥḍur Raḥmān bin-

Abī Bakr, an Egyptian author of some merit, who died in A.D. 1606, A.H. 911. He is said to be the author of 400 works, amongst which are the commentary on the Durr-Al-Munshūr, and the last half of the Tafsīr Jalīlī; the author of the other half was Jalāl-uddin Mahālī, who died in A.D. 1450, A.H. 854. Another work of Sayūti is called Lubb-ul-Lubb. It is a dictionary of patronymic names, and of others under which the Arabic authors are much more frequently quoted than under their proper names. The confusion under which the Arabs labour to identify men known under different names, has induced them to prepare dictionaries for obviating this difficulty. Sāmānī (or Samnānī) in the sixth century of the Hijra published one, entitled Fil Anshāb, in which he does not only explain the sense and origin of these names, but also mentions with regard to every word the true names of the authors who have had them. This work was abbreviated in the succeeding century by Ibn-ul-Asir, and this extract shortened by Sayūti. There is another work of Sayūti called Kashf-us-Salāṭa-un-Nāṣif-us-Zalzala, containing an account of all the earthquakes which took place from the year A.D. 713, A.H. 94, to his time. He wrote this work on the occasion of an earthquake in Egypt, with a view of shewing to his countrymen that earthquakes are ordained by God to punish men for their sins. This work was translated from the Arabic by Dr. A. Sprenger. Vide Jour. As. Soc. vol. xvii. part ii. p. 711. Sayūti was also the author of the Jāma'-ul-Jarāma, containing a collection of Traditions, of which he afterwards made an abridgment and called it Jāma'-us-Saghīr.

Jamal Kili, Shaikh (جمال کیلی شیخ), an inhabitant of Qazwīn in Isfahān. He lived in the time of Sultān 'Alā-uddin the Ismā'īlī, ruler of the town of Alamūt, who highly respected him. It is said that he secretly followed the tenets of the Ismā'īlīs, but the people thought otherwise. He died on Monday the 29th September, A.D. 1253, 4th Shawwāl, A.H. 651.

Jamal Khan (جمال خان), a man-

sabdar, or commander of 3000 horse, in the reign of Shāh Jahān. It is related that the emperor had ordered that all the ladies at court should provide precious stones and bring them to a market-place that he had erected, and there show their wares publicly to all the noblemen at court, who were ordered to buy them at whatever prices the ladies put upon them; and that the king himself was to be a buyer, to put the greater honour on the new erected market. The ladies obeyed, and took their booths as they thought fit. On the market day the king and the noblemen came to market, and bought the jewels and other trifles the ladies had to dispose of. The king, coming to the booth of a very pretty lady, asked her what she had to sell. She told him she had one large fine rough diamond still to dispose of. He desired to see it, and he found it to be a piece of fine transparent sugar-rundly of a tolerable diamond figure. He demanded to know what price she set on it, and she told him with a pleasant air that it was worth a lakh of rupees, or £12,500 sterling. He ordered the money to be paid, and falling into discourse with her found her wit was as exquisite as her beauty, and ordered her to sup with him that night in his palace. She accordingly went and stayed with him three nights and days, and then went back to her husband, whose name was Jamāl Khān. The husband received her very coldly, and told her that he would never live continue civil to her, but would never live with her again but in the same manner as if she was his sister. Upon which she went to the palace, fell at the emperor's feet, and told him what her husband had said. The king, in a rage, gave orders to carry her husband to the elephant garden, and there have him put to death by an elephant. The poor man was soon apprehended, and as they dragged him from his house he begged to have leave to speak to the king. A friend of his ordered the messengers of death to stop awhile, till he had acquainted the king with the request, which was accordingly done, and he was ordered to be carried into the court of the palace, that the king might hear what he had to say; and being carried thither, the king demanded what he would have. He answered that what he had said to his wife was the greatest honour which he was capable of doing his king, because, after he had honoured his wife with his embraces, he thought himself unworthy ever after to cohabit with her. The king, after pausing a little, ordered him to be unbound, and brought to his own room, where, as soon as he came, the king embraced him, and ordered a royal suit to be put upon him, and gave him command of five thousand horse more, but took his wife into his own harem.—As. Jour. vol. xxx. p. 215.

Jamal-uddin Husain Anju (جمال)

(الدين حسين انجو), son of Fakhruddin Kashmiri, author of the Persian Dictionary called Farhang Jahāngīrī, which he dedicated to the emperor Jahāngīr in A.D. 1605, A.H. 1014. The author of the Māsir-ul-'Umra calls him Mir Jamāl-uddin Anjū, and says that he is a descendant of the Sayyads of Shirāz, and came to the Deccan and thence to Agra A.D. 1585, A.H. 993, in the time of Akbar, who raised him by degrees to the rank of 3000. In the reign of Jahāngīr the rank of 4000 was conferred on him with the title of 'Azd-uddaula.

Jamal-uddin-ibn-Mālik (جمال الدين)

(ابن مالك) author of an Arabic work on philosophy, called Alfa.

Jamī (جامی نور الدين عبدالرحمان)

the poetical name of Nūr-uddin 'Abdur Rāhmān, a celebrated Persian poet, the son of Maulānā Muhammad or Ahmad Jāhānī; was born on the 7th November, A.D. 1414, 23rd Shabān, A.H. 817, at a village in Herāt called Jām, from which he derived his poetical name "Jamī." He was remarkably polite, of a very gentle disposition, and endued with such extensive learning that it was supposed there was not throughout the empire of Persia so complete a master of the language as himself. Even princes who were themselves men of erudition and exalted talents have lavished upon him the most unbounded praises and the highest honours. He was very intimate with Sultān Abū Sa'īd Mirzā of Herāt, who continued the friend of Jamī so long as he lived. After his death, our poet enjoyed the same favours from his son and successor Sultān Husain Mirzā. He was a contemporary of the esteemed biographer Daulat Shāh, who recorded his fame in the Lives of the Persian poets, called Tazkira Daulat Shāhī. Jamī was the author of more than 44 works. His poem on the Loves of Joseph and Zalikha is one of the finest compositions in the language; it contains about 4000 couplets. He is also the author of the book called Nafahāt-ul-Ins, a very celebrated abridgment of the Lives of the Sūfī Shaikhs, translated from the Arabic Tahkāt-us-Sūfiya, and dedicated to the celebrated wazīr 'Alīshir in A.D. 1476, A.H. 881. It may be here observed that the celebrated poets, as Hāfiz, Sādi, Jamī, etc., were professed Sūfis. The following are the works commonly known composed by Jāmi:—

These together
re called Haft Aurang.

1. Silsilat-uz-Zahab, dedicated to Bayazid II.
2. Salāmān-wa-Absār.
3. Tuḥfat-ul-Ahrār.
4. Sabḥat-ul-Abrār.
5. Yūsuf-wa-Zalikhā.
6. Laili-wa-Majnūn.
7. Khirad-nāma.

Jāmi died at the advanced age of 81 lunar years, on Friday the 9th November, A.D. 1492, 18th Muḥarram, A.H. 898, mourned by the whole city of Herāt; his funeral expenses were defrayed by Sultān Husain, and a magnificent train of the most illustrious nobles accompanied his body to the tomb. 'Alisher his friend laid the first stone of a monument which he caused to be raised to his memory, and his fame became immortal in the minds of his countrymen. He was also the author of a Tafsīr or commentary of some note. [Salāman and Absār has been translated into English verse by the late Mr. Edward Fitzgerald.]

Jamila (جميله), the poetical name of a Persian Poet.

Jamil-ibn-Mi'mar (جميل ابن معمار), a celebrated Arabian poet who lived in the time of the khalif 'Abdulmalik, and died in the year A.D. 701, A.H. 82. He was contemporary with two other famous poets named 'Umar the son of 'Abdullah and Kathir Azza. Jamil was the lover of Shanba, one of those pairs of lovers whose constancy and fidelity the orientals praise in their histories and poems.

Jamil-uddin Kashi (جمال الدين كاشي), author of the history called Zubdat-ut-Tawārikh. A work of the same title is mentioned under Shaikh Nūr-ul-Ilāq of Dehli.

Jamil - uddin Muhammad Abdul Razzaq (جمال محمد الدين رازق), (عبدالرزاق). Vide Jamāl-uddin bin-'Abdul Razzāk.

Jamshed (جمشید) (also called Jām) was one of the ancient mythic kings of Persia, and the fourth of the First or Pishdadian dynasty. He is celebrated as the founder of Persepolis, which is to this day called Istakhr and Takht Jamshed. He is said to have introduced the solar year and ordered the first day of it, when the sun entered Aries, to be celebrated by a splendid festival. His country was invaded by Zuhāk, a Turanian king, and the unfortunate Jamshed was obliged to fly before the emperor. He was pursued by the agents of Zuhāk, through Sistan, India, and China, and was at last seized and carried like a common malefactor before his cruel enemy, who ordered him to be placed between two boards and sawn asunder with the bone of a fish. We are told by Firdausi that his reign lasted 700 years. He is supposed to have flourished 800 years before the Christian era. His goblet, called Jām Jamshed and Jām Jam, was wondrous. A hundred marvellous tales are told of this celebrated cup, which used to dazzle all who looked in it, and has often been employed by the poets to furnish a simile for a bright eye.

Jamshed (جمشید), this title is sometimes given by the Musalmāns to king Solomon the son of David, and they say that his magic ring and throne possessed extraordinary powers, and his control was absolute over genii and men.

Jamshed Qutb Shah (جمشید قطب شاه), son of Qulī Qutb Shāh I.

ascended the throne of Gōlkonda in the Deccan after the death of his father in September, A.D. 1543, Jumāda II. A.H. 950. He reigned seven years and some months, and was succeeded by his brother Ibrāhīm Qutb Shāh in A.D. 1550, A.H. 957.

Jan (جان صاحب), or Jān Sāhib, poetical name of Mir Yar 'Alī, who is the author of a Diwān.

Janabi (جنابی), the surname of Abū

Muhammad Mustafa bin-Sayyad Hasan-al-Husaini, a celebrated historian and author of a work called Tārīkh-ul-Janābī, of which the correct name is supposed to be Bahr-uz-Zakḥkhār, the Swelling of the Sea; it comprises a general history from the beginning of the world to A.D. 1589, A.H. 997. It was originally written in Arabic, and translated by the author into Turkish. Janābī died in A.D. 1691, A.H. 999.

Jan Fishan Khan Bahadur (جان

نشان خان بهادر نواب), Nawāb of Sardhānā. A Cabuli of Persian extraction, who for his conspicuous loyalty during the mutiny of 1857, was ordered by Government to be rewarded with a pension of 1000 rupees a month in perpetuity to his male heirs, and a grant of confiscated villages of 10,000 rupees per annum to be conferred upon him with remission of one half of revenue for his life, and a quarter for two generations.

Jangez Khan (جنگیز خان). Vide
Changez Khān.

Jani (جانی). There have been three authors of this name. The first, 'Abū 'Abdullah Muhammad ibn - Mālik Atā, a native of Damascus; the second, Basar Jāni; and the third, Manūr-bin' Umar - al - Adīb, a native of Isfahān, who died A.D. 1025.

Jani (جانی), the poetical name of Mirzā Jān, the father of Mirzā Jān Jānān.

Jani Begam (جانی بیگم), daughter of 'Abdul Rahīm Khān, Khān-Khānān, who was married to prince Dāūd, the son of the emperor Akbar in A.D. 1599, A.H. 1007.

Jani Beg Sultan (جانی بیگ سلطان), son of 'Abdullah Khān Uzbek's sister. His son, Dīn Muhammad Khān, was raised to the throne of Samarcand after the death of 'Abdul Momim Khān, the son of 'Abdullah Khān Uzbek.

Jani Beg Turkhan, Mirza (جانی بیگ ترخان مرزا), ruler of Thatta, succeeded his grandfather Mirzā Muhammad Bāqī, in the government of Thatta, the remaining province of Sindh, in A.D. 1584, A.H. 993. Akbar Shāh who before the death of Muhammad Bāqī had gone to Lahore, and had remained there for some years, expected a personal visit from Jāni Beg; but being disappointed he proceeded to take measures for the subjugation of that country. He therefore in the year A.D. 1591, A.H. 999, directed his commander-in-chief 'Abdul Rahīm Khān, the son of Bairām Khān, to proceed and occupy the place in his name. The first action took place on the 3rd November, A.D. 1591, 26th Muharram A.H. 1000, when the Sindhis were totally defeated. Notwithstanding, daily skirmishes took place between the two armies; at last Mirzā Jāni Beg offered to acknowledge fealty to the emperor and to proceed to the presence. Shortly after 'Abdul Rahīm Khān celebrated the nuptials of his son Mirzā Irich with the daughter of Jāni Beg, and after the rainy season of the year A.D. 1592, A.H. 1001, accompanied Mirzā Jāni Beg to the presence of Akbar, who created the latter a noble of the realm; and from that date the whole kingdom of Sindh reverted to the sovereignty of the empire of Delhi. Mirzā Jāni Beg died at Burhānpur in A.D. 1599, A.H. 1008, and the government of Thatta was conferred on his son Mirzā Ghāzi.

Jan Janan, Mirza (جان جانان مرزا), son of Mirzā Jān, a learned Musalmān and a good poet, distinguished no less for the grace and spirit of his compositions than for the independent spirituality and anti-idolatrous nature of his sentiments. His poetical name was Mazhar; was born at Agra about the year A.D. 1698, A.H. 1110, but resided at Delhi. In the month of Muharram or 3rd January, A.D. 1781, 7th Muharram A.H. 1195, having expressed his contempt for a superstitious ceremony—the commemoration of the death of Husain—he was shot on the terrace of his own house, by a vindictive partizan of that martyr, and died on the 6th of that month, 10th Muharram, A.H. 1195. He was the author of a Diwān.

Jan Muhammad, Munshi (جان محمد منشی), author of an Inshā or collection of letters which goes by his name.

title given to the emperor Humāyūn after his death.

Jannati (جنتی), a poetical name.
[From Jannat = "Paradise."]

Jan Nisar Khan (جان نثار خان), title of Kamāl-uddīn Husain, an Amīr of 3000 under the emperor Shāh Jahān. At the time of his death he was governor of Sistan, and died there A.D. 1639, A.H. 1049. [The word is the same as Jaisaiy.]

Jan Nisar Khan, Nawab (جان نثار خان نواب), was brother-in-law to the wazīr Qamar-uddīn Khān who had married his sister. He was appointed Chakladār of the districts of Korā Jahānābād in the province of Allahābād, and was assassinated by Arārū Bhagwant Singh, a zamindār of that place in A.D. 1731, A.H. 1144.

Jan Nisar Khan, Sayyad (جان نثار خان سید), son-in-law of the wazīr

Qamar-uddīn Khān, was put to death, together with several others, by Nādir Shāh, on account of the resistance shown by them in endeavouring to protect their family in the general massacre. This event took place in March, A.D. 1739, Zil-hijja A.H. 1151.

Janoji Bhosla (جانوجی بھوسلا), the second Rāja of Berar, succeeded his father Rāghōji Bhōsela in A.D. 1749, and died in A.D. 1772. He was succeeded by his younger brother Madhōji Bhōsela.

[Fide Rāghōji Bhōsela the first Rāja of Berar.]

Jansipar Khan Turkman (جان سپار خان ترکمان), an Amīr of 4000 in the reign of the emperor Jahāngīr. He was appointed governor of Allahābād in the first year of Shāh Jahān A.D. 1628, A.H. 1037, and died there the same year.

Jansipar Khan (جان سپار خان), second son of Mukhtār Khān Sabzwūrī, an amīr of the reign of the emperor 'Alamgīr. At the time of his death he held the sūbadārī of Haidrābād, and died there in A.D. 1701, A.H. 1113.

Jarir (جریر). Fide Jurīr which is the correct pronunciation.

Jarjis (جرجیس), George, and in particular St. George the martyr, very well known in the East, and even by the Muhammadans, who put him amongst the number of the prophets, and confound him with Elias.

Jarz Tamas (جارج طامس). Fide George Thomas.

Jarraz (جراز), the surname of Ahmad bin-Ibrāhīm al-Tabīd al-Afrīkī, who is often cited under the name of Ibn-Jarrāz. He was a physician and an author, and a native of Africa. He died A.D. 1009, A.H. 400.

Jarullah Zamakhshari (جارالله زماخشری), surname of Mahmūd bin-'Umar-al-Zamakhshari, the Ma'tzalite of Zāmakhshar, a village in Khwarizm. He was the author of an excellent commentary on the Qurān called Kashshāf, which he wrote in the name of one of the princes of Mecca. He obtained the surname of Jārullāh (or neighbour of God) on account of his residing for a long period at Mecca. He was born in A.D. 1074, A.H. 467, and died in the place of his nativity in the year A.D. 1142 or 1144, A.H. 537 or 539. He was also the author of many other works, such as—

Kitāb Faḡl-dar-Nahr.

Ahmad bin-'Alī Rāzī, which see.

Jaswant Rae (جسونت رای), a

Hindū who was a poet and the author of a Diwān, a copy of which was found in the Library of Tipū Sulṭān.

Jaswant Rao Holkar (جسونت راو),

(هلکر), the son of Takoji Holkar, and brother of Kūshī Rāo, whom he succeeded as chieftain of Indur about the year 1802. He made a rapid incursion into the Doab and committed some ravages, but was defeated and pursued by Lord Lake to the Sikh country as far as the Bias in 1803, and all his territories occupied by a British force. The whole was restored to him at the peace. He became iusame in 1806, and Tulshī Bāi, his wife, was acknowledged regent. He died on 20th October, 1811, and was succeeded by Malhār Rāo III. his son, by a woman of low birth. Tulshī Bāi, however, continued to act as regent. On the 20th December, 1816, a company of armed men seized Tulshī Bāi, conveyed her forcibly to the neighbouring river of Sīpra, and cutting off her head on the bank, threw the lifeless trunk into the water.

Jaswant Singh (جسونت سنگه),

Rāja of Jodhpūr Mārwar, succeeded to the gaddi after the death of his father Takhat Singh in February, A.D. 1873, A.H. 1289.

Jaswant Singh (جسونت سنگه), son of Balwant Singh Mahārājā of Bhartpur. He was born on the 28th February, 1851, and succeeded his father on the 16th March, 1853, when he was but two years old.

Jaswant Singh Bundela (جسونت سنگه بنديله), son of Rājā Indārman.

He held a suitable rank in the army in the reign of the emperor 'Alamgir, and died about the year A.D. 1687, A.H. 1099. After his death the zamindari of Ureha was conferred on Bhagwant Singh his son, an infant of four years, with the title of Rājā, but he dying about the year A.D. 1693, A.H. 1105, there remained no one of the family of Rājās Shujān Singh or of his brother Indārman, to succeed him; upon which the Rānī Amar Kūnwār, grandmother to the deceased prince, placed on the Rājā Udaṭ Singh, who was descended from Mudhukar Sāh, father to Rājā Bir Singh Deo, which was approved by the emperor, who conferred on him the title of Rājā with a suitable manṣab.

Jaswant Singh, Kunwar (جسونت سنگه کنور). Vide Parwāna.

Jaswant Singh, Maharaja (جسونت سنگه مہاراجہ), the celebrated Rājā

of Jodhpūr or Mārwar, of the tribe of Rāghor Rājputs, who acted so capital a part in the competitions of 'Alamgir and his brother Dārā Shikōh whose cause he espoused, and was guilty of great impropriety. He was the son of Rājā Gaj Singh and a descendant of Rāo Mādeo. Jaswant Singh, subsequently became one of the best generals of 'Alamgir, and held the rank of 7000 for several years. He died near Kābul about the 11th December, A.D. 1678, 6th Zil-qada A.H. 1089. He had built a fine house at Āgra on the banks of the Jamna, the surrounding walls of which are still standing, and his followers brought his infant children and his women who did not burn with him, towards their native country. Orders were sent by the emperor 'Alamgir to conduct them to court, where, on their arrival, he insisted on the children being made Musalmāns. Upon this the rājput attendants determined to die rather than submit to this order, fled with their charge towards the Rājā's territories, and being pursued by the emperor's troops fought valiantly, and were mostly cut to pieces, but the women and infants arrived safe at Jodhpūr; they were, however, compelled to take refuge in the hills and the woods, and on the death of 'Alamgir in A.D. 1707, regained their former possession. Ajit Singh, his son (q.v.), was restored to the throne of his ancestors in the year A.D. 1711, by the emperor Farrukh-siyar who married his daughter.

Jat (جاث), a tribe of Hindū labourers who made no figure in the Mughul empire, as a nation, till the reign of 'Alamgir, in whose expedition to the Deccan, they were first heard of as a gang of banditti, under an intrepid leader Chūrāman. They were then so daring as to harass the rear of the imperial army. After the death of that monarch they took advantage of the growing imbecility of the empire, and fortifying themselves, spread their depredations to the gates of Āgra. Mukham Singh, who after the death of Chūrāman commanded the Jāts and took upon himself the title of Rājā, but their power increased under Badan Singh and Sūrajmal (q.v.).

Jawad 'Ali, Mirza (جواد علی مرزا), or more properly Mirzā Muhammad Jawād 'Ali Sikandar Hashmat Bahādur, son of Amjad 'Ali Shāh, and brother of Wajid 'Ali Shāh, the ex-king of Lucknow. He accompanied his mother, the dowager Queen of Aūd, after the annexation of that country to the British possessions in 1856, to England, and died there after the death of his mother, on the 25th February, 1858, aged 30 lunar years. The body of the prince was transferred from London to Paris, to be buried on French soil beside that of the Queen his mother. An immense crowd assembled to witness the procession, attended by Mirzā Hamid 'Ali, the nephew of the deceased.

Jawahir Singh (جواہر سنگه). Vide

Jouhar.

Jawahir Singh (جواہر سنگه), the Jāt

Rājā of Dig and Bhartpur, was the son of Sūrajmal Jāt. He succeeded to the Rāj after his father's death in December, A.D. 1763, A.H. 1177, was secretly murdered in 1768, and was succeeded by his brother Rāo Ratan Singh, who did not escape suspicion of having been accessory to his brother's murder. Ratan Singh reigned ten months and thirteen days and was stabbed by a faqir named Rūpanand, who pretended to transmute copper into gold.

[Vide Ratan Singh.]

Jawahir Singh (جواہر سنگه), a Sikh

chief who became the minister of Mahārājā Dilip Singh after the death of Hirā Singh, and was murdered by the troops at Lāhore on the 21st September, A.D. 1845. Rājā Lāl Singh succeeded him.

Munshī Sewa Rām of Shāhjahanpūr, who flourished in the time of Akbar Shāh II. and was the author of several works in Persian, such as Jouhar-ul-Ta'lim, Jouhar-ul-Tarkīb, etc.; the last-named work he wrote in A.D. 1820, A.D. 1235.

Jouhari Farabi (جوهری فارابی), surname of Abū Naṣr Ismā'il bin-Hammād. Although he was a Turk, yet he made such progress in the Arabic language, which he studied in Mesopotamia and Egypt, that he was styled "Imām-ul-Lughāt," or master of the language. He is the author of a very large Arabic Dictionary entitled Sahāh-ul-Lughāt, the purity of the tongue. He is often called after this work, "Sāhib-us-Sahāh," or the author of the Sahāh. He is commonly called Fārābī or Fārābī-al-Turkī, because he was a native of Fārāb in Turkistan. He died A.D. 1002, A.H. 393. Some authors say that his death took in A.D. 992, A.H. 382.

Juji Khan (جوی خان) was the eldest son of Chingiz Khān the Tartar, from whom he had received for his share the wide regions of Qapchāq; but this prince died a few months before his father in A.D. 1226, and left his territories to his son Batā Khān, who conquered Russia and Bulgaria, ravaged the countries of Poland, Moravia, and Dalmatia, and had marched into Hungary in order to attack Constantinople, when death ended his victorious career.

Junaid Baghdadi, Shaikh (جنید)

(بغدادی شیخ), a celebrated ascetic whose father was a glass-blower, of Nahāwand. He was born and brought up at Baghdād, and became one of the best disciples of Shāfa'i, but followed the system of Sūfīan Sourī. He made thirty pilgrimages to Mecca, alone and on foot. He died at Baghdād in the year A.D. 911, A.H. 298, and was buried near the tomb of his master and maternal uncle, Sari Saqī.

Junaid, Shaikh or Sultan (جنید)

(سلطان), third in descent from the celebrated Shaikh Safī-uddin Ardibeli, and grandfather of Shāh Ismā'il I. of Persia, founder of the Safwī dynasty which was extirpated by Nādir Shāh. He was a Sūfī or mystic philosopher, but being expelled from Azarbaijān by the Turkman ruler Jahān Shāh, established himself in Deyarbikar. In the latter period of his life, he went to Shirwān with his disciples, and was killed in A.D. 1456, A.H. 860, in a conflict with the troops of Amīr Khalīl-ullāh, ruler of that province.

Jununi (جنونی), author of a poem called Latīf Shouq, a collection of entertaining and witty tales, which he composed in the year A.D. 1689, A.H. 1100, and dedicated to the emperor 'Alamgir, but many were rather obscure.

Jununi, Maulana (خنونی مولانا), a sprightly satirical poet of Herāt who flourished in the time of Amīr Ghayās-uddin Sultān Husain, son of Fīroz Shāh, about the 9th century of the Hijri era.

Jurat (جرات), poetical title of Kalādar Bakhsh, a son of Yehia Amān and pupil of Hasrat. He was first supported by Nawāb Muhabbat Khān, but in A.D. 1800, A.H. 1216, he was in the service of prince Sulaimān Shikōh at Lucknow. While still in the prime of life he became blind, but became a good musician and an excellent player on the guitar. It appears that Jurat and his family had the family name of Yehia Mān, because they said that they were descended from Yehia Rāi Mān, who resided in a street at Dehlī which is close to the Chāndni Chouk, and is still called the Rāi Mān Street. It is also stated that this Rāi Mān was executed by Nādir Shāh. Jurat died in the year A.D. 1810, A.H. 1225. He was the author of an Urdū Dīwān and two Maṣnawīs.

Jurir (جریر), or Abū Hazrā Jarir ibn-

Atiya, was one of the greatest and most celebrated poets. He flourished in the reign of the Khalīf 'Abdulmalik of the house of Umayya, and received from him a handsome salary. He was once rewarded by the prince for a single panegyric ode, with 100 camels, 18 slaves, and a silver jug. Abū'l Faraj ibn-ul-Jauzī places the death of Jurir in the year A.D. 729, A.H. 111, aged 80 years.

KA'B

Ka'b (كعب ابن زهير), or Kaa'b ibn-

Zahīr of Mecca, was an Arabian poet, and author of the Qasā'id Bānat Sa'ād, a poem in Arabic held in the highest estimation, containing a panegyric on Muhammad. A translation of part of it may be found in Sir William Jones's second volume of the Asiatic Researches. The author was a Jewish Rabbi, contemporary and opponent of Muhammad, and had written some satirical verses upon him; but afterwards being desirous of a reconciliation with the prophet, he wrote the above poem, which had the desired effect. Some authors say that he died in the first year of the Hijra, that is, A.D. 622, A.H. 1. But, according to Ockley's History of the Saracens, "Ka'b came in the ninth year of the Hijra, and made his peace with Muhammad with a poem in his praise." By this it appears that he was living in A.D. 631. He is said to have assisted Muhammad greatly in the compilation of the Qurān. Vide Wilkin's Biographical Dictionary under Coab.

Ka'b-al-'Ahbar (كعب العبر), a famous traditionist of the tribe of Hamyar, who embraced Islamism in the reign of 'Umar, and died A.D. 652, A.H. 32, during the reign of 'Usmān.

Kabir (کبیر), a celebrated Hindī poet, by trade a Musalmān weaver, who, according to the Akbar-nāma, was contemporary with Sikandar Shāh Lōdī, king of Dehli. Kabir was a Sūfi or Deist of the most exalted sentiments and of benevolence unbounded. His poems, which are still universally esteemed, inculcate the purest morality, good will and hospitality towards all men, and breathe so fine a spirit of toleration that both Hindūs and Musalmāns contend for the honour of his having been born of their religion. From the disinterested, yet alluring, doctrines his poems contain a sect has sprung up in Hindūstān, under the name of Kabir Panthī, who are so universally esteemed for veracity and other virtues, among both Hindūs and Musalmāns, that they may be with propriety considered the Quakers of the country. The time of Kabir's death seems involved in equal obscurity with the manner of his decease and burial. They relate that he lived a long time at Kāsī (Benāras) and Gayā, and sojourned also at Jagannāth, where he gave great offence to the Brāhmins by his conduct and tolerant doctrine. When stricken in years, he departed this life among a concourse of his disciples, both Musalmāns and Hindūs. He is buried at Ratnapūr, where his tomb is said to be seen to this day.

Kabir, Shaikh (کبیر شیخ), surnamed

Bala Pīr, was the Shaikh Qāsim Qādirī, whose tomb is at Chunār. Shaikh Kabir died at Qanauj on Monday the 4th November, A.D. 1644, 12th Ramazān, A.H. 1054, where a splendid mausoleum was built on his tomb by one of his sons, named Shaikh Mahdī, who died A.D. 1677, A.H. 1088, and is also buried there.

Kifāyet 'Alī, was a poet of Murādābād, and author of the Bahār Khuld, which is a translation of the Shimūl.

Kafi-ul-Kafat (کافی الکفات). Vide Ibn-'Ibād.

Kafur, Malik (کافور ملک), a favourite eunuch of Sultān 'Alā-uddīn Khiljī, king of Dehli, probably of Hindū birth, who was raised to the high rank of wazīr. After the king's death the first step which the traitor took was to send a person to Gwālīar, to put out the eyes of Khizir Khān and Shādī Khān, the two sons of the deceased Sultān. His orders were inhumanly executed. He then placed Shuhāb-uddīn, the king's youngest son (a boy of seven years of age) on the throne, and began his administration; but was assassinated thirty-five days after the king's death, in January, A.D. 1317, A.H. 716, when Mubārīk, the third son of the king, was raised to the throne.

Kahaj Tabrezi, Shaikh (کج تبریزی), a learned Musalmān who held (شیخ), the office of Shaikh-ul-Islām at Tabrez during the reign of Sulṭān Awīs and Sulṭān Husain of Baghdād. He was the author of a Dīwān.

Kahi (کاهی). Vide Qāsim Kāhi.

Kaikaus (کیکاووس), second king of the Kayanian dynasty of Persia, was the son of Kaiqubād. He was vain and proud; and appears to have been in continual distress from the unfortunate result of schemes that his ambition led him to form, but which he wanted ability to execute. His life is connected with a thousand fables, which though improper in this place form excellent materials for Firdausi, who has given, in his history of this period, the extraordinary and affecting tale of the combat between Rustam and his unknown son, Suhrāb, who is killed by his father. This part of the Shāh-nāma has been translated in English verse by J. Atkinson, Assistant Surgeon on the Bengal Establishment, and member of the Asiatic Society in 1814. Kaikāūs, when grown old, resigned his crown in favour of his grandson Kaikhusro, the son of Siāwaksh (corresponds to Cambyse I.; vide Achæmenis).

Kaikaus, Amir (کیکاووس امیر), grandson of Qābūs, prince of Jurjān, and one of the noblemen who lived at the court of Sulṭān Maḥmūd, the grandson of Sulṭān Maḥmūd of Ghazni. He is the author of the work called Qābūs-nāma.

Kaikhusro (کیخسرو), the third king of the Kayanian dynasty of Persia and the grandson of Kaikāūs. He ascended the throne in the lifetime of his father, who resigned the crown in his favour. He had several battles with Afrasiāb the king of Tūrān, who was at last defeated, taken prisoner, and slain. Soon after these events Kaikhusro resolved to devote the remainder of his life to religious retirement: he delivered over Kābul, Zabulistān and Nimrōz to Rustam, as hereditary possessions; and resigned his throne to Luhrāsp, the son-in-law of Kaikāūs and his own son by adoption and affection. After these arrangements, he went, accompanied by some nobles, to a spring which he had fixed upon as the place of his repose. Here he disappeared, and all those that went with him were destroyed on their return by a violent tempest. He lived 90 years and reigned 60.

Kaikhusro (کیخسرو), the son of Sulṭān Muhammad Khān, governor of Multān, who was the oldest son of Sulṭān Ghayās-uddīn Balban, king of Dehli. After his father's death in A.D. 1285 he was made governor of Multān by his grandfather, and after his decease in A.D. 1286 was murdered at Rohtāk by Malik Nizām-uddīn, wazir of Kaiqubād, who ascended the throne as king of Dehli.

Kaiomurs (کیومرِس), the first monarch of Persia, according to all Muhammadan writers. This king is stated to have re-claimed his subjects from a state of the most savage barbarity. They say he was the grandson of Noah, and the founder of the first dynasty of Persian kings, called Pishdādian. His son Siāmāk was killed in one of the battles with the barbarians or Devs; and when that monarch carried Hoshang, the infant son of Siāwak, to share in the revenge he meant to take upon his enemies, his army was joined by all the lions, tigers and panthers in his dominions, and the Devs were routed and torn to pieces by the auxiliaries, who had left their native forest to aid the just king. After this victory, Kaiomurs returned to his capital Balkh. He reigned 30 years, and was succeeded by his grandson Hoshang.

The following is a list of kings of the first or Pishdādian dynasty:—

1. Kaiomurs.
2. Hoshang.
3. Tuhmurs, surnamed Dooband.
4. Jam-hed, reigned at Persipoli.
5. Zuhāk, surnamed Alwanī.
6. Faridūn, restored by Kawa.
7. Manūchehr.
8. Naudar or Nauzar.
9. Afrasiāb, king of Turkistān.
10. Zāb, brother of Naudar.
11. Garshāsp.

Kaiqubad (کیقباد), the founder of the second or Kayanian dynasty of the kings of Persia, was a lineal descendant of Manūchehr, according to some accounts he was his great-grandson. This prince had retired to the mountain of Alburz, from which place he was brought by Rustam the son of Zāl and proclaimed king of Persia. He committed the administration of government into the hands of Zāl, whose son Rustam was appointed to lead the Persians against the dreaded Afrasiāb, who had again passed the Oxus and invaded Persia. In this battle Rustam overcame Afrasiāb, and afterwards a peace was concluded, by which it was agreed that the Oxus should remain as it had been heretofore, the boundary between the two kingdoms. Kaiqubād lived some time after this in peace: he is said to have reigned 120 years, and to have left four sons—Kaikāūs, Arish, Kūm and Armen. To the former he bequeathed his throne, and enjoined all the others to obey him.

Kaiqubad (كعباد), surnamed Mu'izzuddin the grandson of Sultan Ghiyas-uddin Balban, whom he succeeded in A.D. 1286, A.H. 695, on the throne of Delhi in the absence of his father Nasir-uddin Bihman Khan who was then in Bengal. In the year A.D. 1297, A.H. 696 his father having heard the state of affairs at Delhi marched from Bengal to visit and advise his son. They met on the banks of the Ghagra at Behar and the whole scene was so affecting that almost all the court shed tears. On this occasion the celebrated poet Amir Khusro wrote the poem called the Kam-us-Salam on the conjunction of the two planets. Kaiqubad was assassinated in A.D. 1298 through the instigation of the Lur Malik Khilji who ascended the throne by the title of Jalal-uddin Iltutash Shah Khilji and became the first Sultan of the second branch of the Turk dynasty called Khilji.

Kalb Ali Khan (كلب علي خان),

Nawab of Rampur in 1869-70

Kalb Husain Khan, Mirza 'كلب

(حسن خان مرزا), Deputy Collector of Etawah the son of Ahtir-ram-uddaula Dabir-ul-Mulk Kalb 'Ali Khan Bahadur. He is the author of four Diwans and a biography called Shaukat Nadiri. He was living in A.D. 1864, A.H. 1281.

• Kalhana (كلهانه), a Brāhman and author of a history of Kashmir, called Rajatarangina. There are four chronicles of the history of Kashmir written in Sanskrit verse, the first by Kalhana, bringing the history of Kashmere to about A.D. 1418 after Christ; the second, a continuation of the former, by Jauharaja, to A.D. 1412, the third, a continuation of the second, by Srivara, a pupil of Jauharaja, to A.D. 1477, and the fourth, by Prayabhatta, from that date to the conquest of the valley by the emperor Akbar. The author of the work, the Pandit Kalhana, of whom we merely know that he was the son of Champaka, and lived about A.D. 1150, under the reign of Sūrha Deva of Kashmir—reports that before entering on his task he had studied eleven historical works written previously to his time and also a history of Kashmir by the sage Nila, which seems to be the oldest of all. Kalhana begins his work with the mythological history of the country, the first king named by him is Govinda, who, according to his chronology, would have reigned in the year B.C. 2448, and the last mentioned by him is Sūrha Deva, about 1150 after Christ.

Kali Das (کالی داس), a celebrated

Hindu poet traditionally said to have lived towards the commencement of the Christian era and to have been one of the nine splendid gems that adorned the court of Raja Bikarnasit Vikramaditya. Some say that he flourished in the time of Raja Bhog (1040-90 A.D.). He wrote the Naladia for the purpose of exhibiting his unbounded skill in alliteration. In four books containing on the average fifty-four stanzas each, he has given such illustrations of this art as can never be surpassed. This work has been published in Europe with a Latin translation by a continuous scholar, Ictinandus Benaw. No reason can be imagined why Kali Das should again write the history of Nala and Damayanti, after it had been so elegantly written in flowing verse by Vyasa Deva, except that he intended in this simple story to shew forth his magnuity in alliteration. He is also the author of the poem called Kamisa Sambhava, and of another called Maha Natya.

Kalim-ullah (کليم الله), the last king of the Bahmani dynasty of Kulbarga or Ahmadābād Bidar in the Deccan. He was expelled in A.D. 1527 by Amir Barid his warir, who mounted the throne and took possession of that kingdom.

Kalim-ullah (کليم الله), author of a work called Kashkol Turan-naf, an exposition of the mystical phrases of the Sūfis.

Kali Sahib (کالی صاحب), surname of Ghulam Nasir-uddin, the son of Maulana Quthb-uddin, the son of Maulana Fakhr-uddin. Although he was the Murshid or spiritual guide of the king of Delhi, he preferred the habit of a Derwiah. He died in A.D. 1852, A.H. 1268.

Kamal (کمال), a poet of Isfahan.

Kamal (کمال), poetical title of Mir

Kamal 'Ali of Gaya Mānpūr. He wrote Persian and Rekhta verses, and is the author of a large work called Kamāl-ul-Ilkmat, on philosophy, and one called Chahārdah Darūd, i.e. the fourteen blessings, containing an account of the Imāms. He died in A.D. 1800, A.H. 1215, and the chronogram of the Hijri year of his death is contained in the word Dareghā.

Kamal Ghayas, Maulana (کمال غیاس مولانا شیرازی), of Shirāz, a poet and physician who flourished in the time of Ibrahim Sultān.

Kamal Khan, Gikhar (کمال خان گیکھر), prince of the Gikhars, was the son of Sultān Sārang, the son of Malik Kalān II. the son of Malik Kalān I. the son of Malik Khar, who was the founder of the principality of the Gikhars. Their country lies among the mountains between Bhat and Sindh, which formerly belonged to the government of Kashmir. Malik Kalān II. had several battles with Sher Shāh, but was at last taken prisoner and put to death by that monarch, and his son or grandson Kamāl Khān imprisoned in the fortress of Gwāliar. He was, however, after some years released by Salim Shāh the son of Sher Shāh, but during his confinement his uncle Sultān Adam had taken possession of the country. In the first year of the reign of Akbar he was introduced to that monarch and was employed in his service. He by degrees rose to the rank of 5000, and was afterwards put in possession of his dominions by that emperor, and Sultān Adam his uncle taken prisoner and made over to Kamāl Khān, who put him in confinement, where he died. Kamāl Khān, who became tributary to Akbar, died in A.D. 1562, A.H. 970.

Kamal-uddin Isma'il (کمال الدین اسماعیل), son of Jamāl-uddin Muhammad 'Abdul Razzāq, of Isfahan, a celebrated poet of Persia, styled Malik-ush-Shu'arā, that is to say, king of the poets, and is the author of a Diwān. In the year A.D. 1237, 2nd Jumāda I. A.H. 635, on the 21st December, when Oqtāi Khān, the son of Chāngēz Khān, invaded Isfahan and massacred the inhabitants of that city, he also fell a martyr. It is said that he was tortured to death by the Mughuls, who expected to find hidden property in his house.

Kamal - uddin Khujandi, Shaikh

(کمال الدین خجندی شیع), was a great Shaikh and lyric poet, and a contemporary of Hāfiz, who, though they never saw each other, much esteemed him, considering him and Salmān Sawās amongst the first poets of their time. He is commonly called Kamāl Khujandi, born at Khujand, a town situated in one of the most beautiful and fertile districts of Persia. After having made the pilgrimage to Mecca he settled at Tabrez, a place which he found extremely agreeable during the reign of the princes of the family of Jalayer. The principal personages of Tabrez became his pupils, and he led a life of literary ease and enjoyment; but when Tuqtamish Khān surprised Tabrez, Shaikh Kamāl was made prisoner, and was carried to Serai in Kapjak by order of Mangū Khān the grandson of Chāngēz Khān, where he remained four years, after which he was permitted to return to Tabrez, near which city the Sultān Awes Jalayer built him a house. Kamāl did not sing the praise of princes in Qasida, nor did he write Masnawī, but only Ghazals and fragments. He died in the year A.D. 1390, A.H. 792, and was buried at Tabrez. A MS. of the Diwān of Kamāl, which had been the property of a Sultān, is possessed by the Imperial Library at Vienna, and is a great treasure as a specimen of splendid writing, and also for the superbly executed miniatures which adorn it, illustrating the poems. These pictures are not more than a square inch in size: there are two on each side of the concluding verse; and though so small, represent with the greatest correctness, either allegorically or simply, the meaning of the poet. —Dublin University Magazine, 1840.

Kam Bakhsh (prince) (کامبخش)

(شهزادہ), youngest son of the emperor

'Alamgīr, a vain and violent young man, who had received from his father the kingdom of the Deccan, but as he refused to acknowledge the sovereignty of the emperor Bahādūr Shāh, his eldest brother, and struck coin in his own name, that monarch, after attempting in vain to win him over by concessions, marched against him with a powerful army to the Deccan, and defeated him in a battle near Haidarābād, where Kam Bakhsh died of his wounds on the same day in the month of February or March, A.D. 1708, Zil-hijja, A.H. 1119. His mother's name was Udaipuri Mahal, and he was born on the 25th February, A.D. 1607, 10th Ramazān, A.H. 1077.

Kami (کامی), whose proper name is Mirzā Alā-ud-daula Qazwīnī, was the son of Mir Yuhya bin-'Abdul Latif, and is the author of the work called Nafīs-ul-Mānir, a Biographical Dictionary of Persian poets. It contains notices of about 350 poets in alphabetical order. Most of them flourished in India during the reign of Akbar, to whom the book is dedicated. It was finished in A.D. 1571, A.H. 979, but there occur much later dates in it. He is supposed by some to have died in A.D. 1563, A.H. 971, and by others in A.D. 1573, A.H. 981, but the latter date appears to be correct. The discrepancy arises from the chronogram of his death, in which the number of the last word is considered by some to be 60 and by others 70, a difference of ten years.

[Vide Yahya bin-'Abdul Latif.]

Kamil (کامل), author of a poetical work, entitled Chirāghnāma. It consists of Ghazals all of which rhyme in Chirāgh (lamp), and the first letter of every verse of the first Ghazal is ل or ا, of the second ب or ب, and so on.

Kamran Mirza (کامران مرزا), second son of the emperor Bābar Shāh, and brother to the emperor Humāyūn, who, after his accession to the throne in A.D. 1530, A.H. 937, conferred on him the government of Kābul, Qandahār, Ghaznī and the Panjāb. He was deprived of his sight by Humāyūn when at Kābul in the year A.D. 1553, A.H. 960, on account of his repeated offences, and continually raising disturbances in the government. The operation was performed by piercing his eyes repeatedly with a lancet. Kāmran bore the torture without a groan until lemon-juice and salt were squeezed into his eyes, when he called out "O Lord my God! whatever sins I have committed I have been amply punished in this world, have compassion on me in the next." Kāmran eventually obtained permission to proceed to Mecca, where he resided three years and died a natural death in A.D. 1556, A.H. 964. He left three daughters and one son, named Abū'l Qāsim Mirza, who was imprisoned in the fort of Gwāhar, and put to death by order of the emperor Akbar, his cousin, in the year A.D. 1565, A.H. 973.

chief, who surrendered himself to the British Government on the 15th February, 1818, and received for his support the Tālūqa of Burhiapār in the Gorakhpūr district, which was held by his descendants up to the mutiny in 1857.

Karim Khan Zand (کریم خان زند).

The history of Persia, from the death of Nādir Shāh till the elevation of 'Aqā Muhammad, though it occupies nearly half a century, presents no one striking feature, except the life of Karim Khān, a chief of the tribe of Zand. He collected an army chiefly composed of the different tribes of Zand and Maffi, defeated the Afghāns in several engagements, finally drove them out of the country, and secured to himself the kingdom of Fārs, or the southern division of Persia, while Khurāsān partially remained in possession of the descendants of Nādir Shāh; and the countries bordering on the Caspian Sea were retained by Muhammad Hasan Khān Qājār, ruler of Māzandarān, the great-grandfather of 'Aqā Muhammad Shāh Qājār. Karim Khān, after subduing his enemies, enjoyed independent power for twenty-six years; and during the last twenty, viz. from 1759 to 1779, he had been, without a competitor, the acknowledged ruler of Persia. His capital was Shirāz. He died at an advanced period of life on the 2nd March, A.D. 1779, 13th Safar, A.H. 1193, being nearly 80 years of age. After his death Zaki Khān assumed the reins of government, and was assassinated two months after. Sādiq Khān, brother of Karim Khān, took possession of Shirāz after the death of Zaki Khān, and was put to death on the 14th March, A.D. 1781, 18th Rabi' I. A.H. 1195, by 'Ali Murād Khān, who now became the sovereign of Persia, and died on the 11th January, A.D. 1785, 28th Safar, A.H. 1199. After his death Lutfi 'Ali Khān reigned for some years at Shirāz. He was defeated in 1794 and slain afterwards by 'Aqā Muhammad Khān Qājār, who took possession of the throne of Persia.

Kashi Rao Holkar (کاشی راو هلکر), the eldest of the four sons of Tukājī Holkar, after whose death in A.D. 1797 disputes arose between Kāshī Rāo and his brother Mulhār Rāo, and both repaired to the court of the Peshwā at Pūna, where, on their arrival, Daulat Rāo Sindhiā, with a view of usurping the possessions of the family, espoused the cause of Kāshī Rāo, and made a sudden and unexpected attack in the month of September on Mulhār Rāo, whom he slew with most of his adherents. After this, Sindhiā pretended to govern the possessions of the Holkar family in the name of Kāshī Rāo, whom he kept in a state of dependence and appropriated the revenue to his own use. A long contest ensued between Daulat Rāo and Jaswant Rāo Holkar, the brother of Kāshī Rāo, and continued till the year A.D. 1802, when Jaswant Rāo appears to have taken possession of Indor, the territory of his father.

Kashifi (کاشیفی), the poetical name

Khaef Kashmiri, Maulana (خایف)

(کشمیری مولانا), a poet.

Khafī (خانی), poetical title of Mir

Abūl Hasan Khān, author of a poem called Chahār Dervish.

Khafī Khan (خانی خان), whose original name is Muhammad Hāshim, was the author of the work called Tārīkh Khafī Khān, which is also called Muntakhab-ul-Lubāb, an excellent history of Hindūstān, commencing with the invasion of the emperor Bābur Shāh, A.D. 1519, A.H. 925, and continued to the accession of Muhammad Shāh; comprehending the whole of the reign of the emperor 'Alamgir, also those of Bahādūr Shāh, Jahāndār Shāh, Farrakh-siyar, and Rafi-ud-darjāt; all of which, except the first ten years of 'Alamgir's reign,

Colonel Dow was obliged to pass over, for want of documents. There are few works in the Persian language (says Stewart) so worthy of being translated. The author was a person of good family, who resided at Delhi during the latter part of the reign of 'Alamgir, where he compiled his history; but in consequence of the well-known prohibition of that monarch he was obliged to conceal his intentions, and for some other causes did not publish it till the 14th year of the emperor Muhammad Shāh, A.D. 1732, A.H. 1145. The work was well received, and the author was honoured with the title of Khāfi Khān, or the "concealed."

Khaki (خاکی), author of the Munāqib-ul-'Arifin. This book contains the memoirs of three very celebrated Sūfi Shaikhs, viz. Khwāja Bahā-uddīn, Burhān-uddīn, and Julāl-uddīn. The former of these was reputed a great saint, and was the founder of an Order of Sūfīs, distinguished by the title of Naqshbandī. He died at Harāfa in Persia, A.D. 1453, A.H. 857. The two others were authors of commentaries on the Qurān, and were held in much veneration. The above-mentioned book was dedicated to Bahā-uddīn.

Khaki Shirazi (خاکى شيرازى), author of a Persian Diwān.

Khaksar (خاکسار), poetical name of Shukr-ullāh Khān, who died in A.D. 1696, A.H. 1108, and has left a Diwān.

Khaldun (خالدون). Vide Khālīdūn.

Khalid ibn-Barmak (خالد ابن برمک) was the first of the Barmacides, who acted as wazīr to Abū'l-'Abbās Saffāh. He was the grandfather of Ja'far, wazīr to Hārūn-al-Rashīd. He died in the year A.D. 780 or 782, A.H. 163 or 165.

Khalid ibn-Walid (خالد ابن واليد), who became a proselyte to Muhammadanism in A.D. 630, and afterwards so terrible to the Greeks, was called from his courage, the Sword of God. In spreading the doctrines of the Qurān, and the dominion of the prophet, he committed atrocious cruelties, and was at last cut off by the plague in A.D. 639, but according to Ockley's History of the Saracens Abū Ubeda died that year, and Khālīd survived him about three years, and then died.

Khalid ibn - Yezid ibn - Mua'wia

(خالد ابن یزید). He is reported to have been the most learned of the tribe of Quresh in all the different branches of knowledge, and skilled in the art of alchemy. He died in A.D. 704, A.H. 85.

Khalidi (خالدى), surname of Abū'l

Faraj, one of the first poets of the court of the Sultān Saif-uddaula Hamdānī. He was a native of Khāldia or Chaldea, consequently he is called Khālīdī.

Khalidun (خالدون), or 'Abdul Rahmān bin - Muhammad bin - Khālīdūn, surnamed 'Alhazramī, was an author and Qāzi of the city of Aleppo when Anūr Timur took it, who carried him away to Samargand as a slave, where he died A.D. 1403, A.H. 808.

Khalif or Khalifa (خلیفه). This Arabic word (which signifies vicar or successor), from which we have formed that of Khālīf or Caliph, is the name of a sovereign dignity amongst the Musalmāns, which comprehends an absolute power, and an independent authority over all that regards religion and political government. Not only the first four immediate successors of Muhammad, but the rulers of the house of Umayya (written by us Ommaydes), who reigned in Damascus, and the 'Abbasides, who reigned in Baghdad, were also called Khālīfas. There were in all 56 Khālīfas, 4 of whom were of the house of the prophet, 15 of the house of Umayya, and 37 of the house of 'Abbas.

Khalif or Khalifas (خلیفه), of the house of Muhammad. See Abū Bakr Siddiq.

Khalil (خلیل), the poetical title of Ali Ibrāhīm Khān, which see.

Khalil (خليل), the poetical appellation of Mirzā Muhammad Ibrāhīm, whose title was Asālat Khān. He served under the emperor 'Alamgīr, and was living in Patna in A.D. 1690, A.H. 1102. He was a native of Khurāsān, but brought up in India.

Khalil bin-Ahmad (خليل بن احمد), (بصرى), of Basra, a very learned man who is said to be the first that wrote on the art of writing poetry. He wrote several works and died about the year A.H. 175.

Khalil ibn-Is-haq (خليل ابن اسحاق), author of a Mukhtasir which goes after his name. This is a work professing treating of the law according to the Maliki doctrines, and has been translated into French by M. Perron and published in the year 1849.

Khalil Khan (خليل خان), a mansabdār of 3000 of the court of Shāh Jahān, but of a very bad temper. It was he who instigated 'Alamgīr to confine his father Shāh Jahān. He had built a fine house at Agra on the banks of the Jamuna, of which some traces are still to be seen.

Khalil, Maulana (خليل مولانا), a poet of Persia, who flourished in the time of Shāh Tahmasp Safwī, and was living about the year A.D. 1639, A.H. 946.

Khalil, Sultan (خليل سلطان), son of Shaikh Ibrāhīm Shīrwānī, ruler of Shīrwān. He reigned about the beginning of the 15th century of the Christian era.

Khalil, Sultan (خليل سلطان), also called Mirzā Khalil and Khalil-ullāh, was the son of Mirānshāh, and grandson of Amīr Timur, at whose death he, being present with the army at Samargand, took possession of that country. This prince, who was a person of excellent temper and had many good qualities, might have preserved the power he had acquired, had not his violent love for Shād-ul-Mulk, a celebrated courtesan, whom he had secretly married, diverted him from the cares of government. He had scarcely reigned four years, when he was seized by the chiefs who had raised him to the throne, and sent a prisoner to the country of Kashghar in A.D. 1408, A.H. 811, where instead of endeavouring to effect his release and recover his power, he spent the whole of his time in writing verses to his beloved mistress, who had been exposed, by the reverse of his fortune, to the most cruel indignities. He was at last released by Mirzā Shāhruhkh his uncle, who had taken possession of his kingdom, and who not only gave him the government of Rei, Kum and Hamdān, but restored his beautiful mistress to his arms. After this he lived two years and a half and died 6th November, A.D. 1411, 18th Rajab, A.H. 814, aged 28 years, and Shād-ul-Mulk, on the occurrence of this event, acted a part which has given fame to her memory—she struck a poniard to her breast: and the lovers were buried in one tomb in the city of Rei.

Khalil-ullah (خليل الله), the Friend of God, a title of Abraham the patriarch.

Khalil-ullah Hirwi, Mir (خليل الله) (هروى مير), a descendant of Shaikh Na'mat-ullāh Walī.

Khalil-ullah Khan (خليل الله خان), entitled Umdāt-ul-Mulk, brother of Asālat Khān Mir Bakhtshī, served under the emperor Shāh Jahān, was appointed governor of Delhi about the year A.D. 1653, A.H. 1063, and was raised to the rank of 6000 in the first year of 'Alamgīr, A.D. 1658, A.H. 1068. He died on the 11th February, A.D. 1662, 2nd Rajab, A.H. 1072.

Khamosh (خاموش), poetical name of Rāc Sāhib Rām of Delhi. He was for some time Tahsildār under Mr. Jonathan Duncan in Benares. He has left a large Diwān.

Khan (خان). This word, which appears to be a corruption of Qiān, is a Turkish title and means powerful lord. The most powerful kings of Turkistān, of Great Tartary and of the Khatāyans have borne this title. Chāngcz, the great conqueror, had no other, and it makes even part of his name, for he is called by the Orientals, Chāngcz Khān. It means the same as Khākān or Qiān.

Khan (خان), the poetical name of Mirzā Sharif.

Khan 'Alam (خان عالم), title of Mirzā Barkhurdār, son of Mirzā 'Abdul Rahmān Dauldī, a nobleman who served under the emperor Shāh Jahān, and was raised to the rank of 5000; he was also in favour under 'Alamgir (Aurangzeb). In the latter part of his life, he was pensioned by the emperor and received one lac of rupees annually. He had a house and garden in Agra on the banks of the river Jamna built of red stone touching the northern Burj of the Rauza of Tājganj in a spot consisting of 50 bighas. In the latter part of his life he was raised to 6000 and appointed governor of Bihār.

Khan 'Alam (خان عالم), title of Ikhlas Khān, the son of Khān Zamān Shaikh Nizām. He served under the emperor 'Alamgir and was raised to the rank of 5000 in A.D. 1689, A.H. 1100, with the title of Khān 'Alam. In A.D. 1696 the rank of 6000 was conferred on him. After the death of that emperor he espoused the cause of 'Azim Shāh against his brother Bahādūr Shāh, and fell in battle A.D. 1707, A.H. 1119. After his death his son was honoured with the same title.

Khanam Sultān (خانم سلطان), a daughter of the emperor Akbar, married to Muzaffar Husain Mirzā, the son of Ibrāhīm Husain Mirzā, in A.D. 1593. [The word is the feminine of Khān, as Begam is of Beg.]

Khan 'Azim (خان عظم). Vide 'Azīm Khān.

Khanazad Begam (خانزاد بیگم), the sister of the emperor Bābar, was five years older than he. Another daughter of 'Umar Shaikh was Mehr Bāno, eight years younger than Bābar. Another daughter was Yādgar Sultān Begum, whose mother name is Aghā Sultān Ghunchi-hī; the fourth daughter was named Rūqia Sultān Begam, whose mother's name was Mukhdūma Sultān Begam, who was also called Qurā Qūr Begam; the last two daughters were born after the death of their father.

Khanazad Khān (خانزاد خان).

Vide Khān Zamān Bahādūr and Rūh-ullāh Khān.

Khanazad Khan (خانزاد خان), son of Sarbuland Khān, was governor of Peshāwar in A.D. 1723, A.H. 1135. When the government of Allahābad was conferred on his father by the emperor Muhammad Shāh, in A.D. 1732, A.H. 1145, he was deputed to act for him as governor of that province.

Khan Bahadur (خان بہادر), son of Rāja Mittra Jit of Patna. He is the compiler of the work called Jama' Bahādūr Khāni, an epitome of European Sciences in the Persian language, including treatises on astronomy, optics, and mathematics, and copious tables of logarithms for natural numbers, sines, tangents, etc., also of a small octavo volume of Perspective called Ilm-ul-Manāzarat, in the Persian language, which he presented to the Asiatic Society in A.D. 1835, A.H. 1251.

Khan Bahadur Khan. A descendant of Hāfiz Rahmat (q.v.) who was sub-judge of Bareilly in 1857, and took advantage of the Sepoy mutiny to assume power there. He committed many crimes, but was driven out at the end of the year. The date of his death is uncertain.

Khan Bahadur Khan (خان بہادر خان),

the son of Julāl-uddīn Khān, the son of Hāfiz Rahmat Khān. Vide Masrūf.

Khande Rao Gaeqwar (کہاندی راو)

(گدقوار), Rāja of Baroda. He died in

A.D. 1870, and was succeeded by his brother Malhār Rāo, the deposed (1875) Rāja of Baroda.

Khande Rao Holkar (کہاندی راو ہولکر), the only son of Malhār Rāo Holkar I. He was killed in a battle at Dig against Sārāj Mal Jāt in A.D. 1754, many years previous to his father's death, and left an only son, Malī Rāo, who succeeded his grandfather and died nine months after.

[Vide Malhār Rāo I. and Ahlia Bāi.]

Khan Duran I. (خان دوران اوی), whose proper name is Shāh Beg Khān Kābulī, was an Amīr in the time of the emperor Akbar. He received the title of Khān Dourān from Jahāngīr in the year A.D. 1607, A.H. 1016, and was appointed governor of Kābul. He died in Lahore in the year A.D. 1620, A.H. 1029, aged 90 years.

Khan Duran Khan II. (خان دوران)

(خان ثانی نصرت جنگ), Nasrat

Jang, title of Khwāja Sūbir, son of Khwaja Hisārī Naqshbandī. He was an officer of state in the service of the emperor Shāh Jahān and held the rank of 7000. He was stabbed one night whilst asleep by a young Kashmerian Brāhman whom he had converted to Muhammadanism, and died after a few days on the 12th July, A.D. 1645, 27th Jumādā I. A.H. 1055, at Lāhore. His remains were transported to Gwāliar and buried there in the cemetery of his ancestors.

Khan Duran III. (خان دوران سوم)

(نصرت خان), Nasrat Khān, son of Khān Dourān Nasrat Jang. He held the rank of 5000 in the reign of the emperor 'Alamgir. In the latter part of his life he was appointed governor of Orissa, which post he held for several years and died there, A.D. 1667, A.H. 1077. ¶

Khan Duran IV. (خان دوران چهارم)

Vide Ābdus Samad Khān Bahādur Jang.

Khan Jahan (خان جهان), title of Husain Qulī Beg, a mansabdār of 5000 in the reign of the emperor Akbar. He was appointed governor of Bengal after the death of Munaim Khān, about the year A.D. 1576, A.H. 984. He defeated, took prisoner, and slew Dāūd Khān, the ex-king of Bengal, who had again rebelled against the emperor, and sent his head to Agra the same year. Khān Jahān died at Tānda in A.H. 1578, A.H. 986, and was succeeded by Muzaffar Khān.

Khan Jahan Barha (خان جهان بارها)

(بارها), title of Sayyid Muzaffar Khān of Bārha Zilla Muzafarnagar, an officer of the rank of 6,000, who died in the time of the emperor Shāh Jahān at Lāhore, A.D. 1646, A.D. 1055.

Khan Jahan Kokaltash (خان جهان ککولتاش)

(ککولتاش), whose proper name was Mir Malik Husain, the son of Mir Abū'l Ma'ālī Khwāfī. He was a nobleman of high dignity, and being the foster-brother of the emperor 'Alamgir, thought himself superior to all the other 'Umrā. He was appointed governor of the Deccan in A.D. 1670, A.H. 1081, and promoted by that monarch about the year A.D. 1674 from the rank of 700 to that of 7000 horse, and the title of Khān Jahān Bahādur Kokaltash Zafar Jang. His former title was Bahādur Khān. He died on the 24th November, A.D. 1697, 19th Jumādā I. A.H. 1109. He seems to be identical with the author of the Tārīkh Asām or the Invasion of Asām.

Khan Jahan Kokaltash Khan Zafar

Jang (خان جهان ککولتاش خان), a title of Ali Murād, a foster-brother of Jahāndār Shāh. In the time of Bahādur Shāh he was honoured with the title of Kokaltash Khān, and when Jahāndār Shāh ascended the throne, the rank of 9000 was conferred on him with the title of Khān Jahān Zafar Jang and the office of Mir Bakhshiyārī. But he did not long enjoy this high station, for he soon after fell in the battle which took place between his master and Farrukh-siyar A.D. 1713, A.H. 1125.

Khan Jahan Lodi (خان جهان لودی), an Afghān probably of obscure birth, but with all the pride and ambition of his nation in India. He is by some said to have been a descendant of Sultān Bahlōl Lōdī, and by others of Iqbalat Khān Lōdī Shāhū Khail. He had held great military charges, was raised to the rank of 5000 in the reign of the emperor Jahāngir, and commanded in the Deccan under prince Parwez at the time of that prince's death. On the accession of Shāh Jahān, he entered into a close intimacy with his late enemies, and seemed to be aiming at independence. He was at last killed, together with his son, in an engagement with the royal troops on the 28th January, A.D. 1631, 1st Rajab, A.H. 1040, and their heads sent as a most acceptable present to Shāh Jahān. An affecting account of his death may be found in the third volume of Dow's History. The Tārīkh Khān Jahān Lōdī, which is also called Makhsan Alghāni, contains the memoirs of this chief, written by Haibat Khān in A.D. 1676.

[Vide Sketch of History of Hindūstān.]

Khan Jahan Maqbul, Malik (خان جهان مقبول ملک)

(جهان مقبول ملک), entitled Kawām-ul-Mulk, was the prime minister of Sultān Firōz Shāh Bārbak, who ascended the throne of Dehli in A.D. 1351. He was originally a Hindū by name Kattē. On his conversion to Muhammadanism in his youth, Sultān Muhammad, the predecessor of Firōz Shāh, changed his name to Maqbul, and appointed him to the government of Multān. He afterwards became Naib wazīr under the wazirship of Khwāja Jahān, whom he at first supported in his attempt to place a son of Sulṭān Muhammad on the throne, but went over to Sulṭān Firōz on his approach to Delhi, and was appointed by him wazir of the kingdom. According to the historian Shamsi Sirāj Afif, he died in the year A.D. 1374, A.H. 776, but by others in A.H. 772. After his death his son Jahān Shāh was honoured with his place and title of Khān Jahān by the king, who placed as much confidence in him as he had done in his father. He filled the office of prime minister for twenty years.

Khan Khanan (خان خانان). This word is a title of honour, and means Lord of Lords. Bairām Khān and his son 'Abdur Rahīm Khān, both ministers to the emperor Akbar, and several others were honoured with this title. Like the later title, Amir-ul-Anara, it originally implied military command of the highest rank, but became an honorific title in later days.

Khan Mirza (خان میرزا), ruler of Badakhshān, was the son of Sulṭān Mahmūd Mirzā, the son of Sulṭān Abū Saīd Mirzā, a descendant of Amir Taimūr. He died in A.D. 1621, A.H. 927, leaving behind a son of seven years of age named Mirzā Sulaimān. Khān Mirzā was a cousin of the emperor Bābar, who on Mirzā's death appointed his own son Humāyūn to that government.

Khan Mirza (خان میرزا), surname of

'Abdur Rahīm Khān (q.v.), Khān Khānān in the time of the emperor Akbar.

Khan Zaman (خان زمان), title of

'Alī Qulī Khān; he and his brother Bahādur Khān were the sons of Haider Sulṭān Uzbek, who was an officer of state in the service of the emperor Humāyūn. In the reign of Akbar Shāh, these two brothers, for their good services, were raised to higher ranks and honoured with the post of jāgirdār of Jaunpūr and the lower provinces. They at last raised a rebellion in the name of the emperor's brother Mirzā 'Isakīm, which induced the emperor to march against them with a large force; a battle ensued wherein both brothers were slain. This event took place on Monday the 9th Juno, A.D. 1567, 1st Zil-hijja, A.H. 974, at a place some distance west of Allāhābād, which on account of this victory was named Fathapūr. The date of this transaction is commemorated in the words "Fatha Akbar Muḥarik," i.e. May this great victory be prosperous.

Khan Zaman (خان زمان), title of

Mir Khalil, second son of 'Azīm Khān the brother of 'Asaf Khān Ja'far Beg, and son-in-law of Yemin-uddaula 'Asaf Khān. He served under the emperor Shāh Jahān for several years, and in the reign of 'Alamgir was raised to the rank of 5000. At the time of his death he was governor of Mālwa, where he died A.D. 1684, A.H. 1095.

Khan Zaman Bahādur (خان زمان بهادر), whose former title was Khānazād Khān and proper name Mirzā Aman-ullah, was the eldest son of Mahābat Khān, the surname of Zamāna Beg. He was an officer of state in the time of the emperor Jahāngir, and was appointed governor of Bengal A.D. 1625, A.H. 1033. In the first year of Shāh Jahān, the rank of 5000 was conferred on him with the title of Khān Zaman Bahādur. He was a good poet, and is the author of a work, called Majma'at, containing the history of all the Muhammadan kings who reigned in different parts of the world before his time, and of a Diwān. He died in Daulatābād in A.D. 1637, A.H. 1047, in which year Bāqir Khān also died. His poetical name was Anāni.

Khan Zaman Fatha Jang (خان زمان فتح جنگ)

was the title of Shaikh

Nizām Haidarābādī. He at first served under Abū'l Hasan ruler of Haidarābād for several years, and then left him and was employed by the emperor 'Alamgir. In the year A.D. 1689, A.H. 1100, he took prisoner Sambha, the Marhatta chief, together with his wife and children; on which account he was raised to the rank of 7000 with the above title. He died A.D. 1696, A.H. 1108.

Khaqan (خاقان), the title of Chagcoz

Khān and his descendants. It means an emperor in the Turkish dialect.

Khaqani (خاقانی), a celebrated Persian poet surnamed Afzal-uddīn Ibrāhīm bin-'Alī Shirwānī. He was a native of Shirwān, and the pupil of Fakāki the poet. He flourished in the reign of Khāqān Manūchehr, prince of Shirwān, who conferred on him the title of Khāqānī. He is the author of the book called Tuhfat-ul-Iraqin, a poetical description of the two provinces of 'Irāq 'Ajam and 'Irāq 'Arab, composed by him while travelling through them on a pilgrimage to Mecca. He is considered the most learned of the lyric poets of Persia, and was called "Sulṭān-ush-Shu'arā" or king of poets. He is also the author of a Diwān, according to Daulat Shāh, and the book called Haft Aqlim. He died at Tabrez in the year A.D. 1186, A.H. 582, and is buried at Surkhāb, where, close to his tomb, Zahir-uddīn Faryābī and Shāh Ghafūr Naishāpūrī are also interred. The chronogram of the year of his death, given in the work Mukhtār-ul-Wasit, shews that he died in A.D. 1199, A.H. 595.

Kharag Singh, Maharaja (کهرگ سنگه), the ruler of Lāhore and the Panjāb, was the eldest son of Mahārāja Ranjit Singh, whom he succeeded on the 27th June, A.D. 1839, A.H. 1255. He reigned one year and four months, and died on the 5th November, A.D. 1840, A.H. 1259, aged 46 years. He was succeeded by his son Rājā Nau Nihāl Singh, who, after having performed the customary rites at his father's funeral, was returning home, and as he passed the Lahore gate a part of the building gave way and fell over him, from the effects of which accident he died. This event took place on the 17th November the same year. After his death his mother Rānī Chānd Kūnwar managed the affairs of her country for two months, when her second son Rājā Sher Singh deprived her of that power, and became the sole manager of the government. He reigned about two years and eight months, and was murdered, together with his son Rājā Partāb Singh, by Sardār Ajit Singh, on the 13th September, A.D. 1843. Rājā Dalip Singh, the youngest son of Mahārāja Ranjit Singh, who was only ten years of age, was then raised to the maṣnad.

Khasha (خاشع), the poetical title of a person who is the author of a Dīwān, which he completed in A.D. 1681, A.H. 1092.

Khassaf or Al-Khassaf (خفاف).
Vide Abū Bakr Aḥmad bin-ʿUmar al-Khassaf.

Khatib (خطیب), surname of Shams-uddīn Muhammad bin-Ibrāhīm al-Mālikī, commonly called Khatīb-al-Wazīrī, an author who died in the year A.D. 1486, A.H. 891.

Khattabi (خطابی), surname of Abū Sulaimān Ḥamīd bin-Muhammad, an author who died in A.D. 998, A.H. 388.

Khatun Jannat (خاتون جنت), i.e. the lady of paradise, a title of Fātima, the daughter of Muhammad, and wife of ʿAlī.

Khatun Turkan (خاتون ترکان). This name or title means the "Turkish lady," and was always given to princesses of Turkish descent. The wife of Sulṭān Malikshāh Saljūki bore the same title. She was the mother of Mahmūd, a boy of four years of age, whom she raised to the throne after the death of her husband in A.D. 1092, A.H. 485, but he died soon after, and Barkayārak his eldest brother mounted the throne. The wife of Sulṭān Sanjar was also called Khatūn Turkan. She died in A.D. 1156.

Khawari (خاوری), poetical title of Mir ʿAbūʾl Fatḥa.

Khawas Khan (خواص خان), an amīr

in the service of Salīm Shāh, justly renowned for personal courage, strict honour, great abilities in war, and extensive generosity, was long driven about from place to place on account of his fighting against the king in favour of his brother ʿAdīl Shāh. He at last took protection with Taj Khān, governor of Sambhal, who to ingratiate himself with Salīm Shāh basely assassinated him about the year A.D. 1551, A.H. 958. His body was carried to Delhi and there interred. His tomb is frequented to this day, by the devout who number him among their saints.

Khawas Khan (خواص خان), an amīr

in the service of the emperor Jahāngīr. He had a jāgīr in Kanauj, and died there in the year A.D. 1521.

Khawind Shah or Khawand Shah

(خاوند شاه امیر), also called Mir

Khāwand, and Amīr Khān, and Shāh, a celebrated Persian historian, known amongst us by the name of Mirkhond, as he calls himself in the preface of the life of Muhammad, but his true name at length is Muhammad bin-Khāwand Shāh bin-Mahmūd. He is the author of the work called Rauzat-us-Safā, the Garden of Purity. He was born towards the close of the year A.D. 1433 or the beginning of 1434, A.H. 836 or 837. His father's name was Sayyad Burhān-uddīn Khāwand Shāh, a native of Māvarunnahr, after whose death he found means to be introduced to the excellent Amīr ʿAlīshir, prime minister to Sulṭān Husain Mirzā of Herāt, from whom he experienced every mark of kindness and encouragement, and to whom he dedicated the above work. He died at Balkh after a lingering illness on the 23rd June, A.D. 1498, 2nd Zi-Qaʿda, A.H. 903, aged 66 years. There is no Oriental work (says Sir H. M. Elliot) that stands higher in public estimation than the Rauzat-us-Safā. This work is written in seven books. The author had just completed the 6th book when he died, and his son Khonda Mir wrote the 7th book, and finished it in A.D. 1523, A.H. 929. [The Rauzat-us-Safā was translated by the late David Shea, and published with illustrative notes by the translator, for the Oriental Translation Fund of Great Britain and Ireland in 1832. It is little more than a prose epitome of the Shāhnāma.]

Khayal (خیال), the poetical title of Mir Muhammad Taqī, author of the work called Dostān Khayāl, the Garden of Imagination. He flourished about the year A.D. 1766, A.H. 1170.

Khayali (خیالی بخاری), of Bukhārā, a pupil of Khwāja 'Ismat-ullāh, and though he spent the greater part of his life in his native country he was two years at Herāt in the service of Mirzā Ulugh Beg, during whose reign he died and left a Diwān.

Khazini (خازنی), an astronomer whose proper name was 'Abdul Rahmān.

Khink Sawar (خنک سوار). Vide Sayyad Husain Khink Sawār.

Khīrad (خرد), the poetical name of Bāqir Kāshī, which see.

Khitabi (خطابی), the poetical title of Shāh Ismā'īl Safawī I.

Khizr Khan (خضر خان), king of Dehli. Firishṭa says that both the authors of the Tuhkāt Mahmūd Shāhī and the Tawārīkh Mubārīk style him a Sayyad or descendant of the prophet. His father Malik Sulaimān was governor of Multān, and he succeeded him in that office. He defeated Daulat Khān Lodi in a battle, and having taken him prisoner ascended the throne of Dehli on the 4th June, A.D. 1414, 15th Rabi' I. A.H. 817. He died after a reign of seven lunar years two months and two days on the 4th June, A.D. 1421, 17th Jumādā I. A.H. 824, and was succeeded by his son Mubārīk Shāh. Khizr Khān did not assume the title of emperor, but professed to hold the empire for Shāhrukh Mirzā the son of Amīr Taimūr, in whose name he struck coins.

The following is a list of the kings of the 4th or Sayyad Dynasty of Delhi.

	A.D.	A.H.
Khizr Khān, a Sayyad	1414	817
Mubārīk Shāh, son of Khizr Khān	1421	824
Muhammad Shāh, the son of Furīd, the son of Khizr	1434	837
'Alā-uddīn, son of Muhammad Shāh, the last of the Sayyads, who abdicated in favour of Bahlol Lodi	1446	849

Khizr Khan, (خضر خان), the son of Sultān 'Alā-uddīn Khiljī. This prince fell in love with Dewal Devi, the daughter of Rāi Karan, Rāja of Gujrat, and married her. The history of their love is written in a poem, entitled Ishqia, by Amīr Khusrō.

[Vide Kula Devi.]

Khizr Khan Khwaja (خضر خان)

(خواجه), a descendant of the kings of Kāshghar. He served under the emperor Humāyūn, who gave him his sister, named Gulbadan, in marriage, and appointed him governor of Lāhore and afterwards of Behār, where he died about the year A.D. 1559, A.H. 966.

Khizr, Khwaja (خضر خواجه), name of a prophet who, the Orientals say, is still living, and sometimes appears to travellers who have lost their way. He is said to have accompanied Alexander the Great to the dark regions of Zulmāt, where he was told he would find the Water of Life.

Khojam (خوجم), the poetical name of Khwāja Sulhān, the author of a poem in Urdū containing the story of Shamsād Shāh, dedicated to Sa'ādāt 'Alī Khān, the Nawāb of Lucknow, about A.D. 1798.

Khondamir (خوندامیر), the son of the celebrated Amīr Khawand Shāh (Mirkhond). His full name is Ghayās-uddīn Muhammad bin-Hamid-uddīn Khond Amīr. He is the author of the history called Khulāsat-ul-Akhbār, which is considered to be an abridgment of the Rauzat-us-Safā; this book he wrote in A.D. 1498, A.H. 904, and dedicated it to Amīr 'Alīsher his patron. He was born, says Sir H. M. Elliot, at Herāt about the year A.D. 1475, A.H. 880, for he states in the preface to the Habīb-us-Sīar that when he commenced it in the year A.D. 1521, A.H. 927, he had advanced through seven or eight stages beyond the fortieth year of his life. It was after the name of his patron Karīm-uddīn Habīb-ullah, a native of Ardibel, that he entitled his work Habīb-us-Sīar. Besides the above mentioned works, he composed the Māsir-ul-Malūk, the Akhbār-ul-Akhbār, the Dastūr-ul-Wazra, the Mukārim-ul-Akhbār, and the Mantakhib Tārīkh Nassāf. There are two other works ascribed to him, called Gharāeb-ul-Asvār and Jawāhir-ul-Akhbār. He was compelled to leave Herāt on account of the disturbed state of the country in A.D. 1527, A.H. 933, and afterwards took a journey to Hindūstān in company with Maulānā Shuhāb-uddīn the punster, and Mirzā Ibrāhīm Qānūnī, esteemed the most literary men of the age. On Saturday the 19th September, A.D. 1528, 4th Muharram, A.H. 935, they reached the metropolis of Agra, and were introduced to the emperor Bābar Shāh. They were loaded with presents and directed to remain in future about his person. Khondamir accompanied the emperor on his expedition to Bengal, and after his death attached himself to his son Humāyūn, in whose name he wrote the Qanūn Humāyūnī, which is quoted by Abū'l Fazl in the Akbar-Khusro Malik. A converted Hindu, who held possession of the throne on the death of Mubarik Shāh Khilji (q.v.). He called himself Khusro Shāh; but after a brief orgy was overthrown and slain by Ghāzi Beg Tughlaq A.D. 1321.

[Vide Ghāyas-uddin]

Khusro Malik (خسرو ملک), the brother-in-law of Sultān Muhammad Shāh I. Tughlaq, whose sister named Khudāwandzāda he had married. He had once formed the project of taking the life of Sultān Firōz Shāh, the successor of Muhammad Shāh, by concealing a number of persons in the rooms adjacent to where the king sat, but the king was saved by Dāwar Malik, the son of Khusro Malik, who made a sign to him that danger was to be apprehended, upon which he left the room and took refuge on the top of the house.

Khusro Parwez (خسرو پرویز), the son of Hurmuz III. (or IV.) king of Persia of the Sassanian race. He, by the assistance of the Roman emperor Maurice, after defeating Bahram Chobin, his father's general, who had taken possession of the kingdom, ascended the throne of Persia A.D. 591. The moment he was firmly established on the throne he fulfilled in a most faithful manner the engagements he had entered into with his ally, and publicly adopted the emperor Maurice as his father; but when that emperor was slain in A.D. 603 he instantly declared war, on the grounds of avenging his benefactor. His generals invaded the Roman territories; Dara, Edessa, and other strong places on the frontier, were soon subdued; Syria was completely pillaged, Palestine overrun, Jerusalem taken, and the true cross, which had been enclosed in a golden case and buried deep in the earth, is said to have been discovered, and borne in triumph to Persia. His reign of more than 30 years was marked by a success never surpassed by the most renowned of his ancestors. Persia was, however, invaded by Heraclius the Roman emperor, who defeated the troops of Khusro wherever he encountered them, and marched, in one direction, as far as the Caspian, in another to Isfahan; destroying in his progress all his splendid palaces, plundering his hoarded treasures, and dispersing, in every direction, the countless slaves of his pleasure. The subjects of Khusro now lost all regard for a monarch whom they deemed the sole cause of the desolation of his country: a conspiracy was formed against him; he was seized by his eldest son Sheroya or Siroes; his 18 sons were massacred before his face, and he was cast into a dungeon, and soon afterwards died or was put to death in A.D. 628, A.H. 7, after he had reigned 38 years. The glory of the house of Chosroes (Nausherwān) ended with the life of Khusro; his unnatural son enjoyed only eight months the fruit of his crime.

The Muhammadan authors say that Khusro had received an epistle from Muhammad, inviting him to acknowledge Muhammad as the apostle of God. He rejected the invitation, and tore the epistle. "It is thus," exclaimed the Arabian prophet, "that God will tear the kingdom, and reject the supplications of Khusro." The historians of Muhammad, says Gibbon, date this embassy in the seventh year of the Hijra, which commenced the 11th May, A.D. 628. Their chronology is apparently erroneous, since Khusro died in the month of February of the same year (Gibbon, vol. viii. p. 205).

Khusro Shah (خسرو شاه), a descendant of the ancient kings of Badakhshān, whom Bābar Shāh defeated about the year A.D. 1505, and took possession of his country and made it over to his cousin Khān Mirzā.

Khusro Shah (خسرو شاه), surnamed

Nizām-uddin, was the son of Bahram Shāh of Ghazni. He succeeded his father at Lahore in A.D. 1152, A.H. 547, and died there after a reign of seven years in A.D. 1160, A.H. 555. He was succeeded by his son Khusro Malik.

Khusro Shah (خسرو شاه). Vide Malik Khusro.

Khusro, Sultan (خسرو سلطان), the eldest son of the emperor Jahāngir; was born in the month of August, A.D. 1587, Ramazān, A.H. 995, at Lahore. His mother was the sister of Rāja Mān Singh, the son of Rāja Bhagwān Dās, and after the birth of Khusro she got the title of Shāh Begam. He died in the Decan on the 16th January, A.D. 1622, 13th Rabi' I. A.H. 1031, aged 36 lunar years; and his remains are said to have been transported to Allahābād, where his monument is to be seen in a garden surrounded by masonry walls, called the garden of Sultān Khusro, or "Khusro-Bāgli," and where his mother Shāh Begam is also buried. The dome over his tomb has a pathetic inscription of several Persian verses, and contains the chronogram of the year of his death in the words "Faiz Lāeq." It is related in the work called Maujir Qutb Shāhi that Khusro was strangled by a man named Razā by the order of Shāh Jahān his younger brother.

Khuzai (خزاعی), a celebrated author, descendant from a tribe of Arabs called Khuzāq.

Khawaja Hasan Sadr Nizami (خواجہ حسن سدر نظامی), author of the work entitled Tāj-ul-Maʿāqir, which he dedicated to Sulṭān Qutb-ʿaddīn Aibak, king of Delhi, about the year A.D. 1208, A.H. 605.

Khawaja Hashim Kashmin (خواجہ ہاشم کشمینی), author of a Persian work entitled Zuhdat-ul-Muḡāmat, containing the (pretended) miracles of Ahmad Sarhindī, a Muhammadan saint, and others.

Khawaja Husain Marwi (خواجہ حسین مروی), a native of Marv in Persia, was an excellent poet. He flourished in the time of the emperor Akbar, and wrote ephrograms at the birth of Sulṭān Shāh Murād, second son of the emperor, who was born in the year A.D. 1570, A.H. 978. He put the Sughasan Battisi into Persian verse, but did not complete it. He is the author of a Diwān.

Khawaja Husain Sanai (خواجہ حسین سنائی مشہدی), of Mashhad. He and his father were protégés of Sulṭān Ibrāhīm Mirzā. He flourished about the beginning of the 11th century of the Hijra, left Qasidas and a Maṣnawī called Saddle Sikandar.

Khawaja Husain Sanai (خواجہ حسین سنائی), a Persian poet, and son of Ghayās-uddīn Muhammad. He came to India in the time of Akbar, died in A.D. 1588, A.H. 996, and left a thick Diwān.

Khawaja Jahan (خواجہ جہان), honorific name of Malik Sarwar, founder of the race of the kings of the East, or Sharqī dynasty of Jaunpūr. The different rulers who have governed in the provinces of Jaunpūr and Antarbēd (territories south of Delhi lying between the rivers Jamna and Ganges) are styled by historians the Sharqī kings. It appears from the Tawārīkh Muḡbarik Shāhi that Sulṭān Muhammad Shāh, son of Firōz Shāh Tughlaq, king of Delhi, created one of his eunuchs, named Malik Sarwar, his prime minister, and honoured him with the title of Khawāja Jahan; that upon the death of Muhammad Shāh, and on the accession of his son Sulṭān Mahmūd Shāh Tughlaq, a boy of ten years of age, in A.D. 1394, A.H. 796, he was appointed governor of the Eastern provinces of the empire, viz. Qanauj, Audh, Kaṣa and Jaunpūr, the latter of which he made the seat of his government. The reign of Mahmūd Shāh was interrupted by serious internal commotions; and Khawāja Jahan taking advantage of these circumstances, and perceiving the weakness of the government arising out of the king's minority, assumed the title of Malik-ush-Sharq (king of the East), founded an independent kingdom at Jaunpūr, and died in the year A.D. 1400, A.H. 802, after a short reign of six years. He was succeeded by his adopted son Malik Wāsil or Qaranfal, who assumed the title of Muḡbarik Shāh Sharqī, and died in A.D. 1402, A.H. 804. After his death his brother Ibrāhīm Shāh Sharqī succeeded him, and died about the year A.D. 1441, A.H. 845, after a reign of more than forty years. He was succeeded by Sulṭān Mahmūd Shāh Sharqī, who died in A.D. 1452, A.H. 856, and left the kingdom to his son Muhammad Shāh, who was killed in battle about the year A.D. 1458, A.H. 861 or 862, when Husain Shāh, his brother, succeeded him. He had several battles with Bahlōl Lodi, king of Delhi, and was at last obliged to seek refuge in the court of Sulṭān 'Alā-uddīn, king of Bengal, where he died in A.D. 1499, A.H. 905. There are at Jaunpūr several fine specimens of Puthān architecture—chiefly Mosques—dating from this dynasty.

[For details vide Imperial Gazetteer, in loc. Jaunpūr.]

Khawaja Jahan (خواجہ جہان), an Amīr or Maṣṣabdar of 5600, who died in the time of Juhāngīr, in the year A.D. 1619, A.H. 1029, at Lāhore.

Khawaja Kirmani (خواجہ کرمانی), an excellent Persian poet of Kirmānīn, surnamed Malik-ul-Fuzlā, or king of the learned. He assumed for his poetical title Khwāja and Khwājū; was contemporary with Sa'di of Shirāz and a disciple of Shaikh 'Alā-uddin Spānīnī, whom he outlived, and died some years after A.D. 1345, A.D. 747, for he completed his Gauhar-nāma in that year. He has written about 20,000 verses, and one of his poetical compositions is called Humāe Humāyūn. Mir or Amir Kirmānī and Ahmad Kirmānī were also two Persian poets.

[Vide Kirmānī.]

Khawaja Mansur Qarabuqa (خواجہ منصور قراوقا),

(منصور قراوقا طوس), a poet of Tūs in Khurāsān who flourished in the reign of Shāhrukh Mirzā, and was employed by the Prince 'Alā-ud-daula. He died A.D. 1450, A.H. 854.

Khawaja Mansur Shirazi (خواجہ منصور شیرازی),

(منصور شیرازی), also called Shāh

Mansūr, an excellent accountant who served under the emperor Akbar in the capacity of Diwān, and afterwards as his wazīr for four years. He was accused of embezzlement by Rāja Todarmal, Birbal and others, as he said, on account of his being too strict with them; and was imprisoned and afterwards impaled on the 27th February, A.D. 1581, 23rd Muharram, A.H. 989, on a supposition that he had been carrying on a correspondence with Mirzā Muhammad Hākīm (q.v.) half brother of Akbar, who had at that time invested Lāhore.

Khawaja Masa'ud (خواجہ مسعود), of Bak. Vide Masa'ud (Khwāja).

Khawaja Masa'ud (خواجہ مسعود),

a poet who died in the year A.D. 1131, A.H. 526, and left three thick Diwāns, one in the Persian, one in the Arabic, and one in the Hindūstānī language of that day. He is the earliest Musalmān poet who wrote in Hindūstānī of whom we have any account.

Khawaja Masa'ud (خواجہ مسعود),

a poet of an illustrious family of Kun, and one of the most celebrated writers of Maghāwīs in the last cycle of the greater Persian poets. He chose the admired subject of Yūsuf and Zulekhā for one of his poems. He was called to Herāt in the time of the Sultān Husain Mirzā, to celebrate the events of his reign in verse, and appears to have devoted himself to the task in a somewhat voluminous manner, for he wrote 12,000 lines of a poem on the subject dictated; and would, perhaps, have added as many more, had not death put an end to his enthusiasm. He was the author of many admired poems, among others, A Dispute between the Sun and the Moon, and Between the Pen and the Sword. He flourished about the year A.D. 1480, A.H. 885.

Khawaja Mua'zzam (خواجہ معزم), a man of a very mischievous character, was the brother of Ijamida Bāno Begam, and husband of Bibi Fātima, the emperor Akbar Shāh's aunt. He was banished the kingdom several times for improper behaviour, but he soon returned; and when in the year A.D. 1564, A.H. 973, he killed his wife, he was thrown into prison, where, by the command of the emperor, he was put to death in A.D. 1565.

Krishn (کرشن), a god of the Hindūs, was in the world in the time of the Kauras and Pandūs, or the 7th century after the commencement of the Kālijug, according to this shloka: "When something more than 650 years of the Kālijug were expired, then were the Kauras and Pandūs, in whose time the Great War took place."

Krishna Raj Udawar (کرشن راج اوداوار), the lineal descendant of the ancient family of Mysore, whose power Haidar 'Alī Khān had usurped in the year A.D. 1761. But after the defeat and death of Tipū Sultān, and the departure of his sons from Seringapatam to Vellore, Mysore was divided between the Nizām and the English. The English took the southern portion and the city of Seringapatam, by which accession their territory reached from sea to sea. The Nizām took an equal portion on the north-east. Some districts on the north-west, equal in value to more than half of each of their own portions, were offered by the allies to the Mahārājas, which they refused to take, and they were divided between Nizām and the English. The remainder was given to Krishnā Rāja, then a child of three years of age, who was raised to the throne of his ancestors on the 30th June, A.D. 1799, and Purania, a Brāhman of great ability and reputation, who had been the chief financial minister of Tipū, was appointed Diwān to the young prince by the British Government. He was, in later days, created Knight Grand Commander of the Most Exalted Order of the Star of India. He died on Friday the 27th March, A.D. 1868, aged 72 years. His adopted son, Chamrajendra Odāwar, was recognized and proclaimed as Mahārāja of Mysore. The young Mahārāja, being a minor, the government and administration of the territories of Mysore were, during his minority, conducted under the direction of the Commissioner. The state was made over to Odāwar dynasty A.D. 1881.

He was raised to the throne by the voice of the majority of the Amīrs on the death of his brother Arghūn Khān in March, A.D. 1291, Rabi' I. A.H. 690. The resentment of a personal injury led Baidū Khān, a grandson of Halākū Khān, to rebel against him, and the unfortunate monarch was, after a short struggle, made prisoner, and put to death in January, A.D. 1295, Safar, A.H. 694. Baidū Khān succeeded him.

Labid (البيد), whose full name is Abū

A'qil Labīd bin-Rabīat, was one of the most distinguished Arabian poets, and one of the seven whose verses constituted the Mu'allaqāt, a series of prizes suspended in the Ka'ba. He was still an idolater when Muhammad commenced publishing his laws. One of his poems commenced with this verse: "All praise is vain which does not refer to God: and all good which proceeds not from Him is but a shadow;" no other poet could be found to compete with it. At length the chapter of the Qur'ān, entitled Barāt, was attached to a gate in the same temple, and Labid was so overcome by the verses at the commencement as to declare that they could only be produced by the inspiration of God, and he immediately embraced Islamism. When Muhammad was apprised of the conversion of Labid, the finest genius of his time, he was exceedingly delighted, and requested him to answer the invectives and satires of Amra-alkays and other infidel poets who wrote against the new religion and its followers. The following sentence, one of the finest which ever fell from the lips of an Arab, is also attributed to him.—"Ala is vain which is not of God." Labid is said to have lived to the age of 140 years, and died at the city of Kufa in 141 of the Hijra (A.D. 758); but there seems some mistake in the year of his death. Foie Ockley's History of the Saracens. Labid is supposed to be the friend and tutor of Amra-alkai, commonly called Kaisand Majnūn, the lover of Laila.

Lachhmi Bai (الجمي), the wife of Malhār Rāo, Rāja of Baroda, who married her under suspicious circumstances; a child was born in 1874 and it has been recognised as legitimate.

Lachhmi Narayan (الجمي نارايڻ), of Benares. He is the author of a biography of Tazkira called Out-e-Ka'nā.

Lachhmi Ram (الجمي رام), a Hindū who was a poet and had adopted the word "Surūr" (happiness) for his poetical appellation.

Laddardeo (لدرديو), a Rāja of Telangana who became tributary to Sulṭān 'Alā-uddin Sikandar Sāni in the year A.D. 1310, A.H. 710.

Ladli Begam (لاڌلى بيگم) was the daughter of Shaikh Mubārik of Nāgūr, and sister to Abū'l Fazl the minister of the emperor Akbar. She was married to Nawāb Islām Khān, who had been governor of Bengal about the year A.D. 1608, A.H. 1017. She died at Agra, and is supposed to have been buried there in the cemetery of her father, which is now called Ranza Lāqli.

LAL

Laila, or Laili (ليلى), the name of the mistress of the celebrated Majnūn, whose original name was Qais. These two lovers are very famous throughout the East. Laila was the daughter of a neighbouring Chief. She was equally accomplished with her lover; and nothing seemed likely to disturb the happiness which their permitted attachment promised, till the avarice of her father destroyed at once all their hopes. Laila was commanded to think of Qais no more, as she was destined to be the bride of one more rich and powerful; and in spite of the grief and remonstrances of the unfortunate pair, they were separated. Qais became insane from disappointment, and his name was therefore changed to Majnūn (the distracted). Death at length put a period to his miseries, and his faithful mistress soon followed him, leaving her cruel parent to his late and vain remorse, and the memory of these victims of avarice to eternal honour and regret.

Laiq, or Layiq (لايڻ), the poetical name of the author of the poem called Dastūr Himmat, containing the story of Kāmruṭ in Persian verses, which he dedicated to Nimmāt Khān Bahādūr his patron. He completed this work in A.D. 1685, A.H. 1096, and found the chronogram of that year to be contained in Himmat Khān.

Lais, or Laith (ليث) is the proper name of a brazier, who by his valour raised himself to the highest posts in the dominions of Darham, who then reigned in Sajistān. He left three sons, Ya'qūb, A'mrū, and 'Alī, of whom the first, called Ya'qūb bin-Lais, was founder of the dynasty of the Safarides.

Luhrasp (لهراسپ), the son-in-law of Kaikāūs, and successor of Kaikhusro, king of Persia. He was the fourth king of the Kavianian dynasty, and obliged both the rulers of Tartary and of China to do him homage. In his time Bakhtun-Nasar (Nebuchadnezzar), the governor of Irāq, took Jerusalem, and carried away into bondage such of its inhabitants as were not put to the sword. Luhrasp is fabled to have reigned 120 years, and was succeeded by his son Kishtāsp or Gashtāsp, who is believed to be the Darius Hystaspes of the Greeks.

Luhrasp (لهراسپ), original name of Mahābat Khān, the second son of the celebrated Mahābat Khān Jahāngiri. He had been governor of Kābul for several years in the time of the emperor 'Alamgir, but was recalled to the court about the year A.D. 1670, and shortly after ordered to command the army of the Deccan in the room of Mahārāja Jaswant Singh, who was recalled.

Luqman Hakim (لقمان حکیم).

A mythical writer, supposed to have written a thousand years before the Christian era, and said to have been contemporary with David the king of Israel. He is held to be the greatest of the Oriental moralists, and held in the highest esteem by the Orientals for his wisdom and virtues; even Muhammad speaks of him in the 31st chapter of the Qurān, which is called Sūra Luqman, with profound reverence. Luqmān's wisdom, like Solomon's, is supposed to have been of divine origin. One day, as he was in his room, working at his trade (he was a carpenter), several angels invisibly entered and saluted him. Luqmān, hearing voices, looked around him, but not seeing anyone made no reply. The angels then said: We are messengers from God, thy Creator and ours, who hath sent us to thee to inform thee that He designs to make thee a monarch and his vicergerent on earth. Luqmān answered: If it be the absolute will of God that I shall become a monarch, that will must be accomplished; and I trust that he will grant me grace to execute His commands faithfully; but if the liberty of choice be given me, I should prefer abiding in my present condition; the only favour that I ask from God being, that he would preserve me from offending Him, for were I to offend Him all the dignities of the earth would be but a burden to me. This reply was so agreeable to God that he at once bestowed on Luqmān the gifts of Knowledge and Wisdom to a degree hitherto unparalleled. The Maxims of Luqmān are ten thousand in number; and "any one of these," says an Arabian commentator, "is of much greater value than the whole world." His wisdom and the striking morality of his fables are so like those of Æsop that he is considered by some to have been the original author so called.

Lutf. Literary name of Mirzā Ali Khān (q.v.).

Lutf. (لطف), the poetical name of Mir

Amman, a Hindūstāni lyric poet, and one of the learned natives formerly attached to the College of Fort William. He is the author of the Bāgh-o-Bahār, a simple version of the Nawāz Murassa in Urdū, completed in A.D. 1802, A.H. 1217.

Lutf 'Alī Khān (لطف علی خان), the eldest son of Ja'far Khān, king of Persia, whom he succeeded in the year A.D. 1788; had several battles with the troops of Aqa Muhammad Khān Kachār, by whom he was defeated, taken prisoner, and afterwards murdered in A.D. 1795. He was the last prince of the Zand family.

Lutfullah (لطف الله), a Muhammadan gentleman, who was born in the ancient city of Dhārānagar, in Mālwa, on Thursday the 4th November, A.D. 1802, 7th Rajah, A.H. 1217. His father Maulvi Muhammad Akram was a Muhammad of the sacred order, a descendant of Shāh Kamāl-uddīn, who was a great saint of his time in the province of Mālwa, being the spiritual guide as well as general preceptor of Sulṭān Muhammad Khilji, during a period of 30 years. After his death the Sulṭān built a magnificent mausoleum at the western gate of the city, and endowed therein a shrine to the memory of the holy man; opposite to it he caused to be raised another edifice, surmounted by a superb dome, which was intended as a resting-place for his own mortal remains, and there they still repose. Lutfullah proceeded to England as secretary to Mir Ja'far 'Alī the son-in-law of Mir Afzal-uddīn, Nawāb of Sūrāt in March 1841, and after his return from England he wrote his adventures in 1854, entitled the Autobiography of Lutfullah in English, and dedicated it to Colonel W. S. Sykes, F.R.S., London, and published in June 1857.

Lutfullah Khān (لطف الله خان), son of Sa'dullah Khān, wazīr of the emperor Shāh Jahān. After his father's death in A.D. 1656, A.H. 1066, though he was then only eleven years of age, the mansab of 700 and 100 sawārs were conferred on him. In the reign of the emperor 'Alamgīr he was raised to a higher rank, and died at the time when that emperor was engaged in conquering the fort of Gandāna in the Deccan. This event took place on the 28th December, A.D. 1702, 18th Shabān, A.H. 1114.

Lutfullah Maulana (لطف الله مولانا), a native of Naishāpūr in Persia. He was an excellent poet and flourished in the time of Amīr Timur. The poet Shaikh Azarī has mentioned him in his work called Jawāhir ul-Asrār. He is the author of the Tārīkh Shāhrukh, which is an abridgment of the history of Amīr Timur, with memoirs of the first nine years of the reign of his son and successor Shāhrukh Mirzā, to whom he dedicated the work A.D. 1413, A.H. 816, and died the same year.

Lutfullah Muhammad Muhaddis bin-

Ahmad (لطف الله محمد محدث بن احمد), author of the work called 'Amān Sakūn, a rhymed abridgment of the Tazkira Daulat Shāhī. We are informed in the preface that Fāezī Kirmānī rendered the Tazkira of Daulat Shāh in Persian verses in the reign of Akbar and altered the division of the original, making ten periods instead of seven; Lutfullah, who was a contemporary of Aurangzeb 'Alamgīr, remodelled this version and added two periods more to make the number correspond with the signs of the Zodiac; and in allusion to it, he gave it the above title. It consists of 250 verses; every verse contains the name of a poet.

Lutfullah Sadik. An Ansāri of good family, who held high office under the Emperor Muhammad Shāh (A.D. 1716-48).

Mahabat Khan (مہابت خان), whose proper name was Zamāna Beg, was the son of Ghōr Beg, a native of Kābul. He had attained the rank of a commander of 500 under Akbar, and was raised to the highest dignities and employments by the emperor Jahāngīr. He enjoyed a high place in the opinion of the people, and was considered as the most eminent of all the emperor's subjects. In the month of February, A.D. 1626, Jumādā II. A.H. 1035, he seized the emperor's person, because he (the emperor) never consulted him, but followed the advice of his wife Nūr Jahān in all affairs, and carried him to his own tents, where he remained a state prisoner for some time, but was soon released after a severe battle by his wife Nūr Jahān. In the second year of the emperor Shāh Jahān, the government of Dehli was conferred on him. He died in the Deccan in A.D. 1634, A.H. 1044, and his corpse was conveyed to Dehli and buried there. After his death his eldest son Mirzā Amān-ullah received the title of Khān Zamān, and his second son Luhrāsp was honoured with the same title of Mahābat Khān. (Vide infra.)

Mahābat Khān had his house built on the bank of the river Jamna on a plot of land of 50 bigas in Agra; though little of it now remains, there are some parts of its ruins still to be seen.

The iron suspension bridge over the the Kālīnadi at Khodāganj near Fathagarh, which was seven years in progress, was built at his expense for 70,000 rupees, and finished in July, A.D. 1836. He was dismissed from his post in A.D. 1832, which was again restored to him on the accession of Muhammad 'Alī Shāh, in A.D. 1837. After this he lived only a few months and died in December, A.D. 1837.

Mahdi, Imam (مهدي امام), surnamed Abū'l Qāsim Muhammad, the last of the twelve Imāms, who are held in the highest veneration by the Muhammadans. The first of these was 'Alī, and the last Mahdi, the son of Hasan 'Askari, who was the eleventh Imām. He was born at Sarmānrai in Baghdad on Friday the 29th July, A.D. 869, 15th Sha'bān, A.H. 255, and when he was about four or five years of age his father died. The Shī'as or Shī'ites say that at the age of 10 he entered into a cistern at his father's house, while his mother was looking on, and that he never came out again. This occurred in A.D. 879, A.H. 265. They believe him to be still alive, and concealed in some secret place, and that he will appear again with Elias the prophet at the second coming of Jesus Christ for the conversion of infidels to the Muhammadan religion.

Mahdi Khan, Mirza (مهدي خان مرزا), styled Munshī ul-Mumālīk, was the confidential Secretary to Nādir Shāh, and is the author of the Tārīkh Nādiri, which is also called Nādir-nāma, or the history of Nādir Shāh, and Tārīkh Jahān Kushā. This work was translated into French by Sir William Jones.

Mahdi, Mirza (مهدي مرزا), author of the work called Majmū' Mirza Mahdi, a chronological table of the remarkable events of the house of Timur, commencing A.D. 1423, with Abū Sa'īd Mirzā (third in descent from Timur, and grandfather of the emperor Bāhar Shāh) who reigned over Khurasān and Transoxiana; and terminating with the emperor Bahādur Shāh, A.D. 1708.

His father was a Hindū in the service of Mirzā Ja'far Mu'ammāl or the punster, who having no children converted the boy to the Muhammadan religion, adopted him as his own son, and gave him a good education. After the death of Mirzā Ja'far he attached himself to Dāuīshmand Khān and remained with him till his death, when he retired from the world and died in A.D. 1678, A.H. 1089. He was an excellent poet, and is the author of several works, one of which is called Gul-i-Aurang, which he wrote in praise of the emperor Aurangzeb 'Alamgīr on his accession to the throne.

Mahjur (مہجور). Vide Muhammad Bakht.

Mahmud (محمود ملقب به برهان), surnamed Burhān-ush-Shari'at, who lived in the seventh century of the Hijra, is the author of the work on jurisprudence called Wiqāya, which he wrote as an introduction to the study of the Hidāya. This work has been comparatively eclipsed by its commentary, the Sharh al-Wiqāya, by 'Abaid-ullah bin-Mu'arad; this author's works combine the original text with a copious gloss explanatory and illustrative. Both the Wiqāya and the Sharh al-Wiqāya are used for elementary instruction in the Muhammadan Colleges. Other commentaries on the Wiqāya exist, but they are of no great note.

Mahmud (محمود), an Afghān chief of Qandahār of the tribe of Ghilzai, was the son of Mir Wais, after whose death in A.D. 1715 he succeeded him. He besieged Isfahān in A.D. 1722, and compelled Sulṭān Husain Safwī, king of Persia, to surrender and resign his crown to him. The king went forth with all his principal courtiers in deep mourning, surrendered himself to Mahmūd, and with his own hands placed the diadem on the head of the conqueror. The event took place on the 11th October of the same year, 11th Muḥarram, A.H. 1135. After two years' possession of the sovereign power, he gave orders for the death of the Safwīan princes who were his prisoners, and thirty-nine of them, some grown up, others in their childhood, were barbarously slaughtered. It is said that he became deranged the same night, and not only tore his own flesh, but ate it. Every person that approached him he overwhelmed with abuse, and in this condition died in A.D. 1725. But before his death the Afghāns, being threatened by an attack of the Persian prince, Tahmāsp Mirzā, the son of Sulṭān Husain, who had fled from Isfahān, elected Ashraf, the cousin of Mahmūd, to be their ruler, who in April, A.D. 1725, 12th Sha'bān, A.H. 1137, murdered Mahmūd, and became the king of Persia.

Mahmud (محمود), the son of Sulṭān

Muhammad Saljūqī. He held the government of Irāq and Azurbejān for several years as deputy to his uncle Sulṭān Saryar, who gave him his two daughters in marriage named Sittī Khātūn and Māh Malik. He died in A.D. 1131, A.H. 525.

Mahmud (محمود بن عبد الله قان فیروزی), son of 'Abdullah Qān Firōzī, is the author of the History entitled Ma'nūr Qutb Shāhī, and also of another work of the same description called Tārīkh Jāma ul-Ilm. He served Qutb Shāh II. for 30 years, and was living at the time of that monarch's death, which happened in A.D. 1612, A.H. 1020.

(Shabishṭarī), author of a religious book called Hak-ul-Yekīn, which is held in great estimation among the Persians.

Mahmud I. Sultan (محمود اول سلطان), emperor of Constantinople, was the son of Mustafa II. and nephew of Ahmad III. whom he succeeded in A.D. 1730, A.H. 1142. His janissaries expected from him the recovery of the conquered provinces, but he lost Georgia and Armenia, which were conquered by Nadir Shāh. Mahmūd died in A.D. 1754, A.H. 1168, and was succeeded by his brother 'Usmān II.

Mahmud II. Sultan (محمود ثانی),

(سلطان), emperor of Constantinople, was the son of Sulṭān 'Abdul Hamīd, commonly called Ahmad IV. the son of Mustafa III. He was born on the 20th July, A.D. 1785, and ascended the throne after the deposition of his uncle Salim III. and Mustafa IV. on the 28th July, A.D. 1808. He was of the eighteenth generation from 'Usmān I. who founded the dynasty, and the thirtieth sovereign of that family. He died on the 30th June, A.D. 1839, A.H. 1255, and was succeeded by his son 'Abdul Majīd. The reign of Mahmūd has been full of important events. The Greeks, in A.D. 1821, threw off the Ottoman yoke, and after a sanguinary contest were declared independent; and in A.D. 1828 a war with Russia took place, in which the armies of Mahmūd were uniformly defeated, and the Russians were only prevented from advancing to Constantinople by large concessions on the part of the Turks, and the mediation of the European powers. He exterminated the mutinous guards or janissaries at Constantinople; and his fleet was destroyed by the combined Russian, French, and British squadrons at Navarino; whence it was said of him that the Turkish army was ruined by himself, and the Turkish navy by his allies.

Mahmud bin-Faraj (محمود بن فرج),

Mahmud Gawan, Khwaja (محمود گوان خواجه),

(گوان خواجه), styled Malik-ut-

Tajjār Khwāja Jahān, was the wazīr of Nizām Shāh Bahmanī, king of the Deccan. In the reign of Muhammad II. the duties of Wakil-us-Sulṭānāt were conferred on him. His enemies lost no opportunity of poisoning the king's mind, and at last they brought this great man to destruction by contriving an innumerable forgery, upon which the king, without investigating the matter, ordered him to be put to death in the 78th year of his age. This event took place on the 5th April, A.D. 1481, 5th Šafar, A.H. 886. Mahmūd had great learning and much judgment in composition of prose and verse. A little before his death he had written a poem in praise of his ungrateful master. He is the author of the Rauzat ul-Jushā and some poems. Maulānā 'Abdul Rahmān Jāmī corresponded with him, and some of his letters are to be seen in his works.

Mahmud ibn-Masa'ud (محمود ابن مسعود),

[Fide Sa'd-ullah Khān.]

Mahmud Khan Langa (محمود خان لنگا), the fourth king of Multān, son of prince Firōz, succeeded his grandfather Husain Langa on the throne in August, A.D. 1502, Šafar, A.H. 908. He reigned 23 years. In A.D. 1524, A.H. 931, some time before his death, the emperor Rūbar Shāh having conquered the country of the Panjāb proceeded to Dehli, from whence he wrote an order to Husain Arghūn, governor of Thatta, informing him that he intrusted him henceforward with the directions of affairs in Multān. That chieftain, in consequence, crossed the Indus and marched with a large army to Multān; but before his arrival the king died and was succeeded by his son Husain Langa II.

Mahmud Khwarizmi, Maulana (محمود)

(خوارزمی مولانا), a poet of Khwārizm.

Mahmud, Mulla (محمود ملا), of Jaunpūr, the son of Muhammad Fārūqī, was the author of the work called Shams Bāzigha, and of the Ilawāshī Fayd fī Sharah ul-Fawā'id, which he wrote in A.D. 1632, A.H. 1042, and died in A.D. 1652, A.H. 1062.

Mahmud Parsa, Khwaja (محمود پارسا)

(خواجہ), a poet who flourished in the time of Prince 'Alā-uddaula and Sultān Abū Sa'id Mirzā, and died A.D. 1477, A.H. 882.

Mahmud Sa'id, Erchi (محمود سعيد), author of the Tuhfat-ul-Majālis; he was a contemporary of Shaikh Ahmad Khattū, whom he mentions therein.

Mahmud Shah (محمود شاه), one of the sons of Timur Shāh, the son of Ahmad Shāh 'Abdālī, who being driven from Kābul by Dost Muhammad Khān, took possession of Herāt, which country he ruled for some years, and after his death in A.D. 1829 his son prince Kāmran succeeded him.

Mahmud Shah I. (محمود شاه بيقرد)

(اول), surnamed Baiqara, the son of Muhammad Shāh and brother of Qutb-uddin or Qutb Shāh, was raised to the throne of Gujrat after the deposition of Dāūd Shāh in June, A.D. 1459, Sha'bān, A.H. 863. He caused the city of Ahmadābād to be surrounded by a wall and bastions in A.D. 1847, A.H. 892; and on its completion had the sentence من دخله كان امنا in commemoration of the date of that event, inscribed on one face of the fortification, the meaning of which is, "Whosoever is within is safe." He made two expeditions to the Deccan, reigned 55 lunar years, and died on the 23rd November, A.D. 1511, 2nd Ramazān, A.H. 917, in the 70th year of his age. He was buried in Sarkij or Sarkich near Ahmadābād in the mausoleum of Shaikh Ahmad Khattū. He was succeeded by his son Muzaffar Shāh II.

Mahmud Shah II. (محمود شاه ثاني), whose former name was Nāsir Khān, was the third son of Muzaffar Shāh II. He was raised to the throne of Gujrat after the murder of his eldest brother Sikandar Shāh in May, A.D. 1526, Sha'bān, A.H. 932. He reigned about three months, after which his brother Bahādūr Shāh, returning from Jaunpūr, deprived him of his kingdom and mounted the throne on the 20th August the same year, 15th Zi-Qa'da, A.H. 932. Mahmūd Shāh died in A.D. 1527, A.H. 933.

Mahmud Shah III. (محمود شاه ثالث) was the son of Latif Khān the brother of Bahādūr Shāh. He was raised to the throne of Gujrat after the death of Mirān Muhammad Shāh in April, A.D. 1537, Zi-Qa'da, A.H. 943. In his reign, about the year A.D. 1540, A.H. 947, the fort of Sūrat (Surat), on the shore of the sea, was completed by Khudāwanda Khān, before which time the Portuguese were in the habit of attacking the Muhammadans along that coast. Mahmūd Shāh reigned about 18 years, and was slain on the 16th February, A.D. 1554, 13th Rabī' 1, A.H. 961, while he was asleep, by one Daulat, at the instigation of Burhān, private chaplain to the king, who hoped by that means to possess the throne of Gujrat. The same year died also Salim Shāh king of Delhi, and Nizām Shāh Bahri the Sultān of Ahmadnagar in the Deccan. The words, "Zawāl Khusrōān," i.e. Destruction of Kings, commemorate the date of this event. Mahmūd Shāh was buried in the vault of Sultān Mahmūd Baiqara, close to the mausoleum of Shaikh Ahmad Khattū and was succeeded by Ahmad Shāh II.

Mahmud Shah I. Bahmani (محمود)

(شاه بهمنی اول), the fifth Sultān of the race of Bahmani kings of the Deccan, was the youngest son of Sultān 'Alā-uddin Hasan. He was raised to the throne at Kulbarga after the assassination of his brother Dāūd Shāh in May, A.D. 1378, Muharram, A.H. 780, reigned 19 lunar years 9 months and 24 days, and died of a putrid fever on the 20th April, A.D. 1397, 21st Rajab, A.H. 799. He was succeeded by his son Sultān Qhayās-uddin Mahmūd, was a patron of literature, had a taste for poetry, and wrote elegant verses himself. In his reign the poets of Arabia and Persia resorted to the Deccan and were benefited by his liberality. Mir Faiz-ullāh Aujā, who presided in the seat of justice, once presented him with an ode, was rewarded with a thousand pieces of gold, and permitted to retire, covered with honour, to his own country. In his time the celebrated poet of Shirāz, Khwāja Hāfiz, determined to visit the Deccan, but was prevented by a train of accidents.

Mahmud Shah II. Bahmani (محمود شاه بهمنی ثانی)

(شاه بهمنی ثانی), the fourteenth Sultān of the race of Bahmanī kings of the Deccan, succeeded his father Muhammad Shāh II. on the throne at Ahmadābād Bedar in March, A.D. 1482, Safar, A.H. 887, in the twelfth year of his age. He reigned 37 lunar years, and died on the 18th December, A.D. 1517, 4th Zil-hijja, A.H. 923. The reign of this prince, though a long one, was passed in troubles and civil wars, and the royal authority fell from the house of Bahmanī. On his death the governors in their respective provinces threw off the small portion of allegiance which they latterly paid to the late king, and proclaimed their independence. He was succeeded by his son Sultān Ahmad Shāh II.

Mahmud Shah I. Khilji (محمود شاه خلیجی اول)

(خلجی اول) was the son of Khān Jahan Khiljī, styled Malik Mughis and Azim Humāyūn, the prime minister of Hoshang Shāh, after whose death Mahmūd in conjunction with his father, having succeeded in poisoning his sovereign, Muhammad Shāh, the son of Hoshang Shāh, ascended the throne of Mālwa on Tuesday the 15th May, A.D. 1426, 29th Zi-Qa'da, A.H. 839. He reigned 31 lunar years, and died on the 27th May, A.D. 1469, 19th Zi-Qa'da, A.H. 873, aged 68 years. The numerals of the two Persian words نیم جفت give the year of his death. He was succeeded by his son Ghayās-uddin Khiljī, who reigned 33 years and left his kingdom to his son Sultān Nāsir-uddin. He reigned 11 years and 4 months and was succeeded by his son Sultān Mahmūd II. He was defeated and slain by Sultān Bāz Bahādūr Shāh of Gujrat in A.D. 1531, 10th Zil-hijja, A.H. 937, and Mālwa incorporated with the kingdom of Gujrat.

Wahr : Shah II. (محمود شاه ثانی), the son of Sultān Nāsir-uddin, after whose death he ascended the throne of Mālwa on the 3rd May, A.D. 1511, 3rd Safar, A.H. 917. Mālwa was taken by Bahādūr Shāh king of Gujrat on the 26th February, A.D. 1531, 9th Shabān, A.H. 937, and Mahmūd Shāh taken prisoner with his seven sons and ordered into confinement. He was sent to the fort of Champaner, but died or was murdered on his way to that place, and the kingdom of Mālwa became incorporated with that of Gujrat. After the death of Bahādūr Shāh, one Qādir Khān and after him Shujāa Khān ruled over Mālwa for some years, and after the demise of the latter his son Bāz Bahādūr reigned till the year A.D. 1570, A.H. 978, when that kingdom was entirely subdued by the emperor Akbar.

Mahmud Shah Purbi (محمود شاه پوری) succeeded his father Firōz Shāh to the throne of Bengal in A.D. 1494,

A.H. 899. He reigned about one year and was then murdered by Siddi Badr, who succeeded him and assumed the title of Muzaffar Shāh in A.D. 1495, A.H. 900.

Mahmud Shah Sharqi, Sultan

(محمود شاه شرقی), ascended the throne of Jaunpūr after the death of his father Sultān Ibrāhīm Shāh Sharqī in A.D. 1440, A.H. 844. He reigned about 17 years and died in A.D. 1457, A.H. 862, when his eldest son Bfikhan Khān succeeded him, and assumed the title of Muhammad Shāh Sharqī.

Mahmud Shah Tughlaq, Sultan

(محمود شاه تغلق سلطان), surnamed

Nāsir-uddin, was the son of Muhammad Shāh, the son of Firōz Shāh Tughlaq. He was raised to the throne of Delhi after the death of his brother Humāyūn Shāh in April, A.D. 1394, Jumāda II. A.H. 796, at the age of ten years. His minority and the dissensions of the nobles encouraged many of the surrounding chiefs to revolt and become independent. In his time Amīr Timur invaded India, and defeated Mahmūd Shāh in a battle fought, according to Firishṭa, on the 15th January, A.D. 1399, 7th Jumāda I. A.H. 801, and according to Sharaf-uddin Yezdī, on Tuesday the 7th Rabi' II. A.H. 801, corresponding with the 17th December, A.D. 1398, when Mahmūd fled to Gujrat, and Timur the next day took possession of Delhi.

On the eighth of Rabi'-us-Sānī, with the sun

In Capricorn, Timur had Delhi won.

Timur, soon after his conquest of Delhi, returned to Persia with an immense treasure from India. After the departure of that conqueror Nasrat Khān, son of Fathā Khān, the son of Firōz Shāh, took possession of Delhi, and ascended the throne with the title of Nasrat Shāh. He was succeeded in A.D. 1400 by Iqbāl Khān, after whose death Mahmūd Shāh, who was then at Qanauj, returned and ascended the throne of Delhi the second time in December, A.D. 1405, 22nd Jumāda II. A.H. 808. But the governors of provinces no longer acknowledged allegiance to the throne, having established their independence during the civil war. Mahmūd Shāh died on the 4th March, A.D. 1413, 29th Zi-Qa'da, A.H. 815, and was succeeded by Daulat Khān Lodi. With Sultān Mahmūd the empire of Delhi was lost to the race of the Turks who were adopted slaves of the House of Qhar.

Mahmud, Sultan (محمود سلطان غزنوی), the celebrated king of Ghazni, was the eldest son of Sultān Nāsir-uddin Subaktagin. His father at his death, A.D. 997, A.H. 387, unmindful of the superior right of Mahmūd (who was then employed in the government of Khurāsān), bequeathed his kingdom to Isma'il, a younger son. Isma'il attempted to confirm himself in the power to which he was raised, but on the approach of Mahmūd, after a vain attempt at resistance, he was compelled to throw himself upon the clemency of his offended brother. Mahmūd reigned more than 33 lunar years, during which time he made twelve expeditions into India; took Lahore, Delhi, Kanauj, and other parts of Hindūstān; many hundred temples of the Hindūs he levelled with the ground; many thousand idols he demolished, and broke to pieces the famous idol of Sōmnāth, the fragments of which he distributed to Ghazni, Mecca and Medina. He was born on the 15th December, A.D. 967, 9th Muharram, A.H. 357, and died on Thursday, the 23rd Rabi' II. A.H. 421, which year and date is inscribed on his tomb at Ghazni, corresponding with the 30th April, A.D. 1030. On a tombstone of white marble lies the mace of Mahmūd, of such a weight that few men can wield it. He was succeeded by his son Muhammad, who reigned only five months and was deposed and deprived of sight by his brother Mas'ūd, who ascended the throne.

Mahmud, Sultan (محمود سلطان), the son of Muhammad (Sulṭān), the son of Malik Shāh, which see.

Mahmud, Sultan (محمود سلطان غوری), of Ghūr.

[Fide Ghayās-uddin Mahmūd Ghōrī.]

Mahmud Tabrezi (محمود تبریزی), author of the Miftāh ul-Ya'jūz, or the Key to Miracles, describing the happiness of those who have obtained the light of Sūlism and other mysteries. Written in A.D. 1482, A.H. 7.

Mahmud Tistari, Shaikh (محمود تستاری), a native of Tistar, a town in Persia, and author of the poem called Gulshan-e-Rāz, which he wrote in A.D. 1317, A.H. 717. He died in the year A.D. 1320, A.H. 720, and was buried at Tistar his native country.

Mahtab Bagh (مهتاب باغ), name of a place or garden, which Shāh Jahān had commenced building on the other side of the Jamna opposite to the Rauza of Tajganj and similar to it, where he intended he should be buried after his death, but 'Alamgīr his son took away all the materials for the construction of some other buildings after his father's death; some of its ruins are still to be seen.

Mall (مایل), the poetical name of Mirzā Qutb-uddin, a nobleman of the reign of the emperor 'Alamgīr. He was an excellent poet, but latterly became distracted and died eight days after Mullā Nāsir 'Alī, in the month of March, A.D. 1697, Ramazān, A.H. 1108. His brother Mirzā Nizām-uddin surnamed Tālā was also an elegant poet.

Maimuna (ميمونة), the daughter of Harīth or Hārīs, was one of the wives of Muhammad, who married her in the eighth year of the Hijri, i.e. in A.D. 629. This was doubtless another marriage of policy, for Maimūna was 51 years of age and a widow, but the connection gained him two powerful proselytes. One was Khālīd, the son of Walīd, a nephew of the widow, who by his prowess obtained the appellation of "The Sword of God." The other was Khālīd's friend, 'Amrū, the son of 'As, the same who assailed Muhammad with poetry and satire at the commencement of his prophetic career. Maimūna was the last spouse of the prophet, and, old as she was at her marriage, survived nearly all his other wives. She died many years after him in a pavilion at Surif, under the same tree in the shade of which her nuptial tent had been pitched, and was there interred. This event took place about the year A.D. 671, A.H. 51.

Maisana (ميسنه), the Bedouin bride of the khālīf Mu'āwīa I. and the mother of Yezīd, was a daughter of the tribe of Kalab, a tribe remarkable for the purity of dialect spoken in it. She was married to Mu'āwīa whilst very young; but this exalted situation by no means suited the disposition of Maisana, and amidst all the pomp and splendour of Damascus she languished for the simple pleasures of her native desert. She was an excellent poetess, and had pleased Mu'āwīa's fancy to that degree with some of her verses, that he made her go back into the desert amongst her own relations, and take her son Yezīd along with her that he also might be brought up a poet. This part of his education succeeded, for he was reckoned to excel in that way, though his chief talent consisted in making himself a drunken wretch. Maisana did not revisit Damascus till after the death of Mu'āwīa, when Yezīd ascended the throne.

Majd, Maulana (مجد مولانا), author of the work called Rauzat ul-Khuld.

Majd-uddaula (مجد الدوله), a Sultān of the race of Boya called Boyaites, was the son of Fakhr-uddaula, the brother of 'Azd-uddaula, Sultān of Fars and Irāq. He had for a short time governed Khurāsān and assumed a regal state, but was taken prisoner in Rei, by the victorious Sultān Mahmūd of Ghazni in A.D. 1028, A.H. 420. He had been raised by the death of his father in August, A.D. 997, Sha'hān, A.H. 387, when very young, to the government of the city and the surrounding country. During the minority of this prince, all the power was in the hands of his mother. Mahmūd commanded one of his officers to inform the lady that she must submit to his authority, or prepare for war. "Had such a message been sent," replied the heroine, "in the life of my deceased lord, it must have occasioned great embarrassment. That is not the case now. I know Sultān Mahmūd; and from his character, am assured he will never undertake an expedition without calculating all the chances. If he attack and conquer a weak woman, where is the glory of such an achievement? If he be repulsed, the latest ages will hear of the shame of such a defeat!" Mahmūd, either swayed by the above reasons or others of more weight, did not prosecute his designs upon Rei till Majd-uddaula was of age and had assumed the reigns of government. He then advanced an army, by the leader of which the prince was deluded to an interview and seized; his treasures and dominions passed into the hands of Mahmūd, who sent him and his family prisoners to Ghazni.

Majd-uddaula (مجد الدولة), title of 'Abdul Majid Khān, which see.

Majd-uddin Ahmad ibn-Muhammad Sajawandi (مجد الدين احمد ابن سجاوندی), author of a commentary or Tafsir called 'Ain ul-Ma'ānī. There is another work of the same title on Sūfism written by Shahāb-uddin Burhānpūrī.

Majd-uddin Baghdadi (مجد الدين بغدادی), a pupil and disciple of Shaikh Najm-uddin Kubrā. He is stated to have been a very religious and upright man, and was employed as a physician to Sultān Muhammad surnamed Qutb-uddin, king of Khwārizm. It is said that he privately got married to the mother of the Sultān, who no sooner heard of it than he ordered Majd-uddin to be thrown into a lake, where he died. This circumstance took place A.D. 1219, A.H. 616, and after a short time the Sultān was defeated and his country pillaged by Chāngēz Khān.

Majd-uddin Bilqani (مجد الدين بيلقانی), an author.

Majd-uddin Hamkar Farsi (مجد الدين همكار فارسی), also called Majduddin Haibat-ullāh and Majd Hamkar, i.e. Majd the weaver. His poetical title is Majd and Rihī. He was a native of Shīrāz and derived his descent from Anūsherwān. He was in high favour with the Atābak Sa'd Abū Bakr bin-Zangī and a contemporary of Sa'dī. Under Abūqānā, the Tartar king of Persia, he was made governor of Shīrāz, where he died upwards of 90 years of age in A.D. 1287, A.H. 686, and left a Diwān in Persian. In his time, people used to call him the king of poets.

Majd-uddin Isma'il, Shaikh (مجد الدين اسماعيل شيخ), was Kāzī of Shīrāz in the reign of Shāh Shaikh 'Abū Is-hāq Khwāja Hāfiz, who praises him in one of his odes, and has found the year of his demise to be contained in the words "Rahmat Ilāq," i.e. the mercy of God. He died on Wednesday the 29th July, A.D. 1355, 18th Rajab, A.H. 756.

Majd-uddin Khalil (مجد الدين خليل), a poet who was a contemporary of Khāqānī and wrote poetry in his praise.

Majd-uddin Muhammad bin-Ya'qub bin-Muhammad (مجد الدين بن يعقوب بن محمد), commonly called Fīrōzābādī, is the author of the much-esteemed and very copious Lexicon in Arabic called the Qāmūs, or Bahr ul-Muhit, "The Ocean," dedicated to bin-Abbās, prince of Arabia Felix. He died A.D. 1414, A.H. 817.

[Vide Fīrōzābādī.]

Majd ul-Mulk (مجد الملك), a nobleman of the court of Sultān Abū Khān. He was put to death at the instigation of Shams-uddin Muhammad, commonly called Sāhib Diwān, on suspicion of sorcery, in the reign of Sultān Ahmad Khān, in August, A.D. 1282, 20th Jumādā T. A.H. 681, and not long after Shams-uddin had to undergo the same fate.

Ma'jiz (معجز). Vide Nizām Khān Ma'jiz.

Ma'jizi (معجزی), a poet who was a contemporary of Rukn-uddin Qabāī, and master of the poet Badr-uddin Jājurmi.

Majju Khan, Nawab (مجو خان نواب), a chief of the rebels who caused himself to be proclaimed Nawāb of Murādābād, and instigated the people to murder and plunder Europeans, was captured with his son in the latter part of April, A.D. 1858.

Majlisi (مجلسی). Vide Muḥammad Bākīr Majlisī.

Majnun (مجنون). This name was given to a person, whose proper name was Qais, after he had fallen in love with Lailā or Lailī. The meaning of the word is a madman; also a man who is transported by love either divine or profane.

[Vide Lailī. Majnūn lived in the time of the Khalīf Hashīm of the house of Umayyā, about the year A.D. 721, A.H. 103.]

Majnun (مجنون), the poetical title of two poets, one of Dehli and the other of Lucknow.

Majruh (مجرور), takhallus of Munshī

Kishun Chand, a Kashmerian, who was living in A.D. 1782, A.H. 1196, at Lucknow.

Majzub (مجنوب), Mirzā Muḥammad

Majzūb of Tubrez. He is the author of several Maṣnawī and also of a Diwān which he completed in A.D. 1653, A.H. 1063.

Majzub (مجنوب), poetical name of Mirzā Ghulām Ḥaidar Beg, an adopted son of the celebrated poet of India, Souḍā; was living at Lucknow in A.D. 1800, A.H. 1216, and had written two Diwāns in Urdū.

Majzub (مجنوب), poetical title of Najābat 'Alī Shāh, an Urdū poet who died in the year A.D. 1819, A.H. 1234.

Makin (مکین), poetical name of Mirzā

Muḥammad Fākhīr, a native of Dehli, who came to Lucknow in A.D. 1759, A.H. 1173. He is the author of a Diwān. He died in the year A.D. 1806, A.H. 1221.

Maktabi (مکتبی), a school-master of Shirāz, who is the author of a poem called Lailī wa-Majnūn, composed in A.D. 1490, A.H. 895.

Maktub Khan (مکتوب خان), superintendent of the library of the emperor Shāh Jahān.

Makunda Bramhohari (مکندہ)

(برہمچاری), a famous Brāhman ascetic.

The Hindūs insist that the emperor Akbar was a Hindū in a former generation. The proximity of the time in which this famous emperor lived has forced them however, to account for this in the following manner:—"There was a holy Brāhman of the above name, who wished very much to become emperor of India, and the only practicable way for him was to die first, and be born again. For this purpose he made a desperate Tapassia, wishing to remember then every thing he knew in the present generation. This could not be fully granted; but he was indulged with writing upon a brass plate a few things which he wished more particularly to remember; then he was directed to bury the plate, and promised that he should remember the place in the next generation. Makunda went to Allahābād, buried the plate and then buried himself. Nine months afterwards he was born in the character of Akbar, who, as soon as he ascended the throne, went to Allahābād, and easily found the spot where the brass plate was buried."—(Mill's British India, vol. ii. p. 152.) The translation of the inscription on the brass plate is as follows: "In the Sambat year 1598, on the 12th day of the 2nd fortnight of the month of Māgh, 1, Makunda Bramhchārī, whose food was nothing but milk, sacrificed myself at Parāg (Allahābād) the grand place of worship, with the design that I should become ruler of the whole world." The above date corresponds with the 27th January, A.D. 1542, and Akbar was born on Sunday the 15th October the same year, being three or four days less than nine months after the above circumstance.

Maldeo Rao (مالدیو راو), a Rāja of Mārwar of the Rājthor tribe of rājputā, and a descendant of Jodhā Rāo, who founded Jodhpūr. He acquired a pre-eminence in Rājputāna in A.D. 1532, and is styled by Firishtā "the most potent prince in Hindūstān." Powerful as he was, however, he was compelled to succumb to the emperor Akbar, and to pay reluctant homage at the court of the Mughal. After his death his son Udāi Singh succeeded him.

Malhar Rao Gaekowar (ملہار راو)

(گایکھوار), Rāja of Bāoda, succeeded to the Rāja, after the death of his brother Khānde Rāo, on the 29th November, 1870, aged 42. His father was called Mahārāja Khānde Rāo Gaekowar, Sonā Khaskhail Shāmsheh Bahādūr, G.C.S.I. He is fifth in descent from Pilāji the second Gaekowar, and sixth from Damaji the first Gaekowar. When Sir Seymour Fitzgerald sent a peremptory message directing his brother Khānde Rāo to replace his minion (Diwān) by some man of character, the Gaekowar fell into so violent a rage that the conflict of passion deprived him of life. At that time Malhār Rāo the new ruler was a prisoner. He had been confined for years on suspicion of having attempted his brother's life, and from his captivity at Pāgra he was called to a throne by the British government. In Feb. 1873 he was tried for an alleged attempt to poison the British Resident, but the charge was not considered fully proved. He was, however, deposed for obvious maladministration, and interned in Fort St. George, Madras.

Malhar Rao Holkar I. (ملہار راو ہلکر).

The Holkar family are of the Dhūngar or Shepherd tribe. The derivation of the name Holkar, or more properly Halkar, is perhaps from Hal a plough, and Kar a labourer; so that it would mean "ploughman." Malhār Rāo, who was the first prince of this family, was an officer in the service of the first Peshwā Bujī Rāo, and was one of the earliest Marhatta adventurers in the expeditions to the northward; he killed Girdhar Bahādūr Subādār of Mālwa in A.D. 1726 or 1729. The time when he first obtained local authority was in A.D. 1728; the district of Indor was assigned to him by the Peshwa in jagir about the year 1733. He was present at the battle of Panipat 14th January 1761, and died in A.D. 1768. The direct line being then extinct, Ahlia Bāi, Khānde Rāo's widow, elected Tukāji Holkar the nephew of Malhār Rāo to the principality. He had four sons, Kāshi Rāo and Malhār Rāo by his wife, and Jaswant Rāo and Etoji by his mistress.

The Holkar Family.

1. Malhār Rāo Holkar I.
2. Mallhī Rāo, grandson of ditto, succeeded under regency of Ahlia Bāi, his mother, and died in A.D. 1767.
3. Tukāji Holkar.
4. Kāshi Rāo.
5. Jaswant Rāo.
6. Malhār Rāo II.
7. Hari Rāo Holkar.

Malhar Rao Holkar (ملہار راو ہلکر), a son of Takoji Holkar, Rāja of Indor, killed in battle against Daulat Rāo Sindhiā in September, A.D. 1797.

[Vide Kāshi Rāo.]

Malhar Rao Holkar II. (ملہار راو)

(ہلکر), the adopted or illegitimate son and successor of Jaswant Rāo Holkar the son of Takoji Holkar. He succeeded his father as Rāja of Indor in A.D. 1811. After the battle of Mahādūr, a peace was concluded by Government with Malhār Rāo on the 6th January, A.D. 1818. He died in 1834 and was succeeded by Marjand Rāo his adopted son, who was soon after dispossessed by Khānde Rāo, who, dying without issue, the East India Company assumed the right of nominating Mulkerji Rāo.

Malika Bano Begam (ملکہ بانو بیگم), the eldest daughter of 'Asaf Khān, wazīr, and sister of Mumtāz Mahal. She was married to Saif Khān surnamed Mirzā Saif, son of Amānat Khān; he was an amir of 5000, and died in Bengal A.D. 1639, A.H. 1049. Malika Bāno died in A.D. 1640, A.H. 1050, during the reign of Shāh Jahān.

Malika Jahan (ملکہ جہان), a princess of Delhi married to Husain Shāh Sharqī, king of Jaunpūr.

Malika Jahan (ملکہ جہان), a wife of the emperor Jahāngir and daughter of Itawal Bhīm of Jisalmīr, whose brother's name was Rawal Kalyān.

Malika Zamana (ملکہ زمانہ), the daughter of the emperor Farrukh-siyar, married to Muhammad Shāh, emperor of Delhi, in A.D. 1722, A.H. 1135. The year of her death is not known, but she lies buried in a small tomb out of the Kābul gate of Delhi.

Malik Alashtar (ملک الاشتر), a Sarracen chief who served under 'Abū 'Ubaidā and subsequently under 'Alī. He was poisoned on his way to Egypt by order of Muāwīa I. in A.D. 658, A.H. 38.

Malik Ambar Habshi (ملک عمبری)

(حبشی), an Abyssinian who arose from the condition of a slave to great influence and command in the Deccan. When Ahmadnagar was taken by prince Dāniāl in A.D. 1600, A.H. 1009, Malik Ambar and Rājā Minnān, a Deccan chieft, divided the remaining territories between them, leaving to a nominal Sultān, Murtagā Nizām Shāh II. whom they had placed on the throne on the capture of Bahādūr Nizām Shāh, only the fortress of Ousa with a few villages for his support. About this period several commotions happening in the Delhi Government, owing to the rebellion of Sultān Salīm, the death of Akbar, and revolt of Sultān Khusrō, successively, Ambar had leisure to regulate his country and levy great armies, and even dared to seize several of the imperial districts. When the authority of the emperor Jahāngir was established, he sent frequent armies to the Deccan, but Ambar was not to be subdued. He at length gave up the places taken from the Mughals to the Prince Shāh Jahān, to whose interest he became attached, and continued loyal until his death, which took place in the year A.D. 1626, A.H. 1035, in the 80th year of his age. He was buried in Daulatābād, under a splendid dome which he had erected. After his death Fatha Khān, his son succeeded him.

Malik 'Aziz (ملک عزیز). Fide Malik ul-'Aziz 'Usmān, or 'Abū'l Fatha 'Usmān.

Malik Dinar (ملک دینار), a Turk of the tribe of Ghuz. He in A.D. 1187, A.H. 583, dispossessed Bahrām Shāh the last prince of Kirmān of the family of Kādard Saljūqī, and put an end to that dynasty.

Malik Fakhr-uddin (ملک فخر الدین), king of Bengal commonly called Purbī. The first Muhammad chief who invaded Bengal was Malik Muhammad Bakhtiyār, in the reign of Qutb-uddin Eybak, king of Delhi, A.D. 1191, A.H. 587. After him the several governors of that country were appointed from that capital. Malik Fakhr-uddin was originally a soldier in the service of Qadar Khān, governor of Bengal, whom he put to death in the reign of Tughlaq Shāh about the year A.D. 1338, A.H. 739, proclaimed himself king, and declared his independence of the throne of Delhi. He reigned two years and five months, when he was defeated, taken prisoner in a pitched battle in A.D. 1340, and put to death by Malik 'Alī Mubārīk, who had also proclaimed himself king under the title of Ala-uddin.

Malik ibn-Anas, Imam (مالک ابن أنس), one of the four learned doctors of the Sunnis, who are the founders of their faith. He was born at Madina in A.D. 714, A.H. 95, and died there in the reign of the Khalīf Hārūn al-Rashīd, on Sunday the 28th June, A.D. 795, 7th Rabi' II. A.H. 179, and was buried in the cemetery called Al-Baqia. He is the founder of the second Sunnī sect, and is sometimes called "Imām 'Dār ul-Hijrat," from the circumstance of his birth and death occurring at the city of Madina. In his youth, he had the advantage of the society of Sihl bin-Sa'd, almost the sole surviving companion of the Prophet; and it is supposed that from him he derived his extreme veneration for the traditions. He is the author of the Arabic work called Muwatta, being a collection of Traditions, and is always looked upon as next in point of authority to the six Ṣaḥībs.

Malik ibn-Nawera (مالک ابن نويرة), the chief of those who refused to pay the Zakāt (or that part of a man's substance which is consecrated to God, as tithes, alms, and the like, and the payment of which is strictly enjoined by the Muhammadan law). He was a person of considerable figure, being the chief of an eminent family among the Arabs, and celebrated for his skill in poetry, as well as his manly qualities and horsemanship. He was murdered by order of Khālīd ibn-Walīd in the year A.D. 633, A.H. 12.

Malik 'Imad (ملک عماد), a poet who was a contemporary of Imām Muhammad Ghazzālī.

Malik Imam (مالک امام یعنی ابن أنس). Fide Imām Malik or Malik Ibn-Anas.

Malik Jahir (ملک جاحر), also called

Nāth Bhanjan. In the well-known town of Mhow in Azimgarh, there is a place which obtains the distinguished title of "Nāth Bhanjan" from the great exploits of a saint called Malik Jāhīr, who ejected the evil genius Deo Nāth, together with the original Hindūs, and colonized the place with Muhammadans. The true story is thus related: During the reign of Jahāngir, king of Delhi, about A.D. 1609, one Abhimān Singh, a Rājput of the Jatran tribe, having separated from his brethren, owing to the inadequacy of the share allotted to him in his hereditary possessions, took service under that monarch, and on his having embraced the religion of Muhammad, Jahāngir granted to him the whole Zamin-dāri of Azimgarh, under the title of Rāja Abhimān Singh 'Alī Muhammad Nazir-uddaula Khān. From that period up to the time the Nawāb of Audh resumed the grant, the Muhammadans had the supremacy over the Hindūs, but in A.D. 1801, when the district was ceded to the British, the Hindūs taking courage came and resided there; since then there have always been feuds between the parties.

Malik Mansur (ملک منصور). Fide Nūr-uddin 'Alī.

Malik Mansur Muhammad - bin - 'Usman (ملک بن عثمان), third Sultān of Egypt of the race of Ayyūb, succeeded his father in November, A.D. 1198, and died in A.D. 1200, when Malik 'Adil Saif-uddin, the son of Ayyūb, succeeded him and reigned 18 years.

Malik Mo'izz-uddin, Aibak (ملک)

(معز الدین ایبک), a Turkomān slave of the Ayyūbite dynasty, who married the Queen Malika Shajrat ul-Dar, the last of the Ayyūbite family, and reigned in Egypt. He began his reign in A.D. 1250, A.H. 648, and was murdered in A.D. 1257, A.H. 655. His descendants ruled the country for nearly a hundred years.

In process of time, the old Mamlūks grew proud, insolent and lazy; and the Borgites, a new Militia and slaves of the old Mamlūks, taking advantage of this, rose upon their masters, deprived them of the government and transferred it to themselves about the year A.D. 1382. The Borgites also assumed the name of Mamlūks; and were famous for their valour and ferocity. Their dominion lasted till the year 1517, when they were invaded by Salīm I. the Turkish Sultān, who defeated them, took possession of their obscure country, and beheaded Tuman Bey the last of the Borgites with 30,000 prisoners.

Malik Muhammad Jaisi (ملک محمد)

(جایسی), a poet who was a native of Jāes and the author of the story of Padmāwat in Hīndū verse. He lived in the time of the emperor Jahāngīr.

Malik Nasir Khan Faruqi (ملک)

(نصیر خان فاروقی), son of Malik

Rāja, after whose death in April, A.D. 1399, A.H. 801, he also like his father assumed the ensigns of royalty at Khāndesh, and built Burhānpūr. Learned men were invited from all parts, and literature was much promoted. He seized the fort of Asīr from 'Asā Ahīr, reigned 40 lunar years, and died on the 21st September, A.D. 1437, 20th Rabi' I. A.H. 841. He was buried in the family vault at Tālner by the side of his father, and was succeeded by his son Mirān 'Adīl Farūqī.

Malik Qummi Mulla (ملک قومی ملا), a native of Kumm in Persia. He was an excellent poet, and came to the Deccan in the year A.D. 1579, A.H. 987. He was at first employed by Murtazā Nizām Shāh, and then by Burhān Nizām Shāh, kings of Ahmad-nagar. Subsequently he went to Bijāpūr where he was much respected, and the highest honours conferred on him by the king of that place, Ibrāhīm 'Adīl Shāh II. He gave his daughter in marriage to Mulla Zahūrī a celebrated poet of that court. Mulla Malik died in A.D. 1616, A.H. 1025, and Zahūrī one year after him. He was called Malik ul-Kalām or the king of Poetry. He is the author of a Diwān and several Maṣnawīs.

Malik Raja Faruqi (ملک راجہ)

(فاروقی). The first person who assumed independence in the province of Khāndesh was Malik Rāja, the son of Khān Jahān Farūqī, whose ancestors were among the most respectable nobles at the Delhi court, in the reigns of Alā-uddin Khiljī and Muhammad Tughlaq. At the death of his father he was very young, and inherited only a small patrimony. About the year A.D. 1370, A.H. 772, he was appointed governor of Khāndesh by Fīrōz Shāh Tughlaq, and had the jāgīr of Tālner conferred on him. After the death of that prince, when Dilāwar Khān Ghori assumed independence in Mālwa, an intimate connection took place between the latter and Malik Rāja, so much so that Dilāwar Khān gave his daughter in marriage to Malik Nasir the son of Malik Rāja. He reigned 29 lunar years and died on the 28th April, A.D. 1399, 22nd Shabān, A.H. 801. He was buried at the town of Tālner, and was succeeded by his son Malik Nasir Khān.

The following are the names of the kings of Khāndesh:—

1. Malik Rāja.
2. Malik Nasir Khān.
3. Mirān 'Adīl Khān.
4. Mirān Mubārīk.
5. 'Adīl Khān I. or 'Alī Shāh.
6. Dāūd Khān.

7. 'Adil Khān II. ('Azim Humāyūn 'Alam Khān).
8. Mirān Muhammad Shāh.
9. Mirān Mubārīk II.
10. Mirān Muhammad.
11. Rāja 'Alī Khān.
12. Bahādūr Shāh.

Malik Sarwar (ملک سرور). Vide Khwāja Jahān.

Malik Shah (ملکشاه جلال الدین), surnamed Jalāl-uddīn, was the third Sulṭān of the first dynasty of the Saljūqs or Saljūkides. He succeeded his father Alp Arslān in December, A.D. 1072, A.H. 465, and reigned twenty years. His right to the crown was disputed by his brother Qādīr Beg, also called Qādar (which see), prince of Kirmān; but that chief was defeated and taken prisoner, and afterwards poisoned or put to death. Malik Shāh subdued almost the whole of Syria and Egypt; and being more fortunate than his father, not only conquered Bukhāra, Samargand and Khwārizm, but received homage from the tribes beyond Jaxartes. Towards the end of his life he moved from Isfahān to Baghdād, with the design of transplanting the khalīf Al-Muqtadī, and fixing his own residence in the capital of the Moslem world. The feeble successor of Muhammad obtained a respite of ten days; and before the expiration of the term, the Sulṭān was summoned by the angel of death. He died in the 38th year of his age, in the month of November, A.D. 1092, Shawwāl. A.H. 485, a few days after Nizām ul-Mulk his wazīr, who was assassinated by a follower of Hasan Sabbāh. The greatness and unity of the Saljūkian empire expired in the person of Malik Shāh. He invented an era called Tārīkh Malikshāhī or Jalālī (Jalalian Era). This Era, according to Dr. Hyde, commences 15th March, A.D. 1079, corresponding with the 11th Ramazān, A.H. 471. Malik Shāh left four sons—Barkayāraq, Muhammad, Sanjar and Mahmūd, all of whom attained power in their turns. Mahmūd the youngest, was only four years of age when his father died; but the ambition of his mother, the Sultāna Khātūn Turkān, placed the crown upon his infant head. However, she was soon compelled to resign, and after some time they both died, and Sulṭān Barkayāraq succeeded him.

Malik Sharqi Mirza (ملک شرقی مرزا), an author.

Malik ul-Afzal (ملک الافضل نورالدین علی), surnamed Nūr-uddīn 'Alī, the eldest of the seventeen sons of Sālah-uddīn Yūsaf ibn-Ayyūb. On the death of his father at Damascus in A.D. 1193, A.H. 589, he took possession of that kingdom, whilst his brother Malik ul-'Aziz 'Usmān obtained that of Egypt, and their brother Malik uz-Zahir continued to hold Aleppo. Damascus was afterwards besieged and taken by his uncle Malik ul-'Adil Saif-uddīn Abū Bakr (the Sophadin of Christian writers). Nūr-uddīn 'Alī, in a poetical address to the khalīf Nāsir, lamented the similarity of his own fate to that of the khalīf 'Alī ibn-Abū Tālib (his namesake) in being thus excluded from his rights by Abū Bakr and 'Usmān: the khalīf in his reply consoled him by the assurance that in him he should find the Nāsir (protector) whom 'Alī had sought in vain; but the intercession of the khalīf was unavailing to procure the restitution of any part of his territories. In A.D. 1198, however, on the death of his brother, the Sulṭān of Egypt, Nūr-uddīn became Atābak, or guardian, to his infant nephew Malik ul-Mansūr, and attempted by the aid of his brother, the Sulṭān of Aleppo, to recover Damascus from his uncle; but the expedition failed, and Saif-uddīn retaliated by invading Egypt, and expelled the young Sulṭān and his guardian, A.D. 1199. The unfortunate Nūr-uddīn now retired to Samosata, where he died apparently without issue. He was born in June, A.D. 1171, while his father was acting as wazīr to the Egyptians. He died suddenly in February, A.D. 1225, Šafar, A.H. 662, and was buried in Aleppo.

Malli or Mallhi Rao Holkar (مالی راؤ هلکر), Rāja of Indor, was the son of Khānde Rāo, and grandson of Malhār Rāo I. whom he succeeded in A.D. 1766, and died after a reign of nine months. After his death the original family being extinct, Ahlā Bāi, the widow of Khānde Rāo, elected Takoṛī to the rāj.

Mallu 'Adil Shah (ملو عادل شاه), of Bijāpūr, succeeded his father Ismā'īl 'Adil Shāh in August, A.D. 1534, Šafar, A.H. 941, and was on account of his shameful vices, blinded and deposed after an inglorious reign of only six months by order of his grandmother, and his younger brother Ibrāhīm was raised to the throne of Bijāpūr in the beginning of the year A.D. 1535, A.H. 941.

Mallu Khan (ملو خان), entitled Qādīr

Shāh, was the ruler of Malwā when Sher Shāh took it about the year A.D. 1542, A.H. 949, and made it over to one of his own officers named Shujā'at Khān or Shujā'a Khān Šūr, which see, as also Qādīr Shāh.

Maluk Shah (ملوك شاه), the father of the historian Shaikh 'Abdul Qādir of Badāon. He died in A.D. 1561, A.H. 969. He is the author of the work called Jilāi al-Khawātir.

Malul (ملول), the poetical name of Shāh Sharaf-uddīn, a dervish of Murādābād. He wrote two Persian Diwāns, in which he used the takhallus of Ilhām. He is also the author of a poem called Ijaft Mykhāna, which he composed in A.D. 1777, A.H. 1191.

Malwa (مالوه), kings of. Vide Dilāwar Khān.

Mamluk (مملوك). This word signifies, in Arabic, a slave in general; but in particular, it means the Turkish and Circassian slaves, whom the kings of the posterity of Salāh-uddīn (Saladin) had instructed in military exercises, and who at last made themselves masters of Egypt, and are sufficiently known to us by the name of Mamlūks. These Mamlūks reigned in Egypt 275 lunar years, that is to say, from A.D. 1250 to 1517, A.H. 648 to 923, when Salīm I. emperor of the Turks, entirely subdued and exterminated them. The first king of this dynasty was Malik Moizz 'Azz-uddīn Aibak, which see.

Mamnun (ممنون), poetical title of Mīr

Nizām-uddīn, a son of Qamar-uddīn Khān Mīnāft. He flourished in the time of Akbar Shah II. king of Delhi, and is the author of two Persian and Urdu Diwāns. His ancestors were of Sonpat, but he was a native of Delhi. He was employed by the English Government as a Sadar-us-Sadūr at Ajmer. He died in the year A.D. 1844, A.H. 1260.

Mamun (مامون), the son of Ilārūn al-Rashid. Vide Al-Mamūn.

Manbhaoti Begam (من بهاتوي بگم), one of the concubines of the emperor Akbar. She built at Agra, on a spot of 40 bighas, a garden, of which no sign remains now.

Mangu Qaan or Khan (منگو قآن يا),

(منگو خان), emperor of Tartary, was the eldest son of Tūti Khān, the son of Chaghez Khān. He succeeded his cousin Kayūk Khān, the son of Oqtāi Khān, over the kingdoms of Tartary and Persia, about the year A.D. 1243, A.H. 640. He died after a reign of sixteen years in A.D. 1258, A.H. 654, and was succeeded in the kingdom of Tartary by his son Qablāi Khān; his brother Halākū Khān became the sole master of Persia.

Mani (مانی), whom we call Manes, was the founder of the sect of the Manichæans or Manicheans. In the reign of Shāhpūr, the son of Ardisher, king of Persia, about the year A.D. 277, a painter, named Māni, having learned from the conversation of some Christians that the Redeemer had promised to send a Comforter after him, formed the wild design of passing for the Paraclete; and, as no opinions are too absurd to be embraced, he soon drew together a multitude of proselytes. Shāhpūr was enraged at this imposture, and wished to punish the author of it; but Māni found means to escape, and fled as far as the borders of China, having first told his followers that he was going to heaven, and promised to meet them in a certain grove at the end of the year. In this retreat he amused himself with painting a number of strange figures and views, which at the year's end he showed to his disciples, as a work given to him by angels. He was a very ingenious artist, and had a lively fancy, so that his pictures, which were finely coloured, easily persuaded the credulous multitude, in the infancy of the art in Asia, that they were really divine; they were bound together in a book called Artang, which is often alluded to by the Persian poets. Mingling the pure doctrines of Christianity with paganism he taught that there were two principles of all things, coeternal and equal, that is, God and the Devil, that from the former all good, and from the latter all evil, proceeded. The good being he called the author of the New Testament, the bad of the Old. God, he added, created the soul; the devil, the body. He pretended also to work miracles, and was therefore sent for by Shāhpūr to cure his son, but his pretended power failed him, the child died in his arms, and the disappointed father ordered the prophet to be flayed alive, and his skin stuffed with chaff to be hung at the gates of the capital, where Epiphanius, who refuted his doctrines, saw it. Some say this impostor was put to death in the reign of Bahram, grandson of Shāhpūr.

Mani (مانی), a poet, who although called Kāsagar Māzandarāni, i.e. a porcelain manufacturer of Māzandarān, yet acquired the favour of Muhammad Muhsin Mirzā, a son of Sulṭān Husain Mirzā, in whose service he was killed by the Uzbeks in A.D. 1507, A.H. 913. He was the author of a Diwān.

Ma'ni (معنی), the poetical name of Rāi Bijai Mal, a brother of Imtiyāz, was living in A.D. 1760, A.H. 1174, and did military service under Nawāb Shujā-uddaula.

Manija Begam (مانیجه بیگم), sister of Nūr Jahān Begam.

[Vide Qasim Khān Jawani.]

Manik Pal (مانک پال), Rāja of Karauli. He died in A.D. 1805, and was succeeded by a boy then 13 years of age. In December, A.D. 1817, the Karauli chief signed a treaty, and put himself under the protection of the British Government.

Manka al-Hindi (منكه الهندي), Ibn-

Abu Usaibia, in his work entitled Ayūn-ul-Anba, on the physicians of India, says that Manka of India was one of the most distinguished philosophers in the sciences of India, and was well acquainted both with the language of India and Persia. It was he who translated the book of Shīnāk the Indian, treating on poisons, from the Hindi to the Persian language. He lived in the days of Harūn al-Rashid, and came during his reign from India to Iraq, and attached himself to him.

Manni Ram Seith (منه رام), the great banker of Mathura, died in July, A.D. 1836.

Mannu Lal (منو لال), a Hindū, who is the author of a work called Guldastār Nashāt.

Manohar Das (منوهر داس). Vide Tousanī.Mansabdar (منصبدار) (from *manṣab

"elevation" or "post"). The title of an office under the Mughol Empire, the holder of which ranked according to the number of men he was supposed to lead.

[Vide Blochmann, Ain Translation.]

Mansa Ram (منسه رام), father of Rāja Chait Singh of Banaras. He possessed originally but half the village of Gangāpūr, by additions to which, in the usual modes of Hindūstān, he laid the foundation of the great zamindari of Banaras. He died in A.D. 1740, and was succeeded by his son Balwant Singh.

Man Singh (مان سنگه), a Rāja of Gwāliar who lived in the time of Sultān Sikandar Lodī and his son Sultān Ibrāhīm Lodī, and died about the year A.D. 1518, A.H. 924. He was a prince of great valour and capacity. His son Bikarmājī succeeded him in the rājaship and was living at the time the emperor Babar conquered India.

Man Singh (مان سنگه), son or nephew of Rāja Bhagwān Dās Kachhwāhā, ruler of Amer in Ajmer, now called Jaipur and Jainagar. He was appointed governor of Kabul by the emperor Akbar in A.D. 1587, A.H. 995, and in the next year of Behār, Hājīpūr and Patna; and after the death of his father in A.D. 1589, A.H. 998, he was honoured with the title of Rāja and manṣab of 7000, and made governor of Bengal. • It is said that he had 1500 concubines, and every one of them had children; but they all died before him. Mān Singh died in the ninth year of the emperor Jahāngir, A.D. 1614, A.H. 1023, in the Deccan, and sixty of his concubines burnt themselves with his corpse. His second son Rāja Bhāo Singh succeeded him and died of drinking. The eldest son of Mān Singh was Rāja Partap Singh, who died before his father and left a son named Maha Singh, who served under the emperor Jahāngir, and after the death of his grandfather and uncle was honoured with the title of Rāja. Mān Singh had built a house on the banks of the river Jamna, of which at present towards the river only two broken bastions are to be seen. The Muhalla Mānpanah close to the Jamna Masjid at Āgra is still very well known. He died at Berār in A.D. 1617, A.H. 1026. His son Mirzā Rāja Jai Singh served under Shāh Jahān and Ālamgir. He was poisoned by his son Kirat Singh about the year A.D. 1625. After him his son Rām Singh was reduced to a manṣab of 4000; Bishun Singh, reduced to a manṣab of 3000, and after him came Jai Singh Sawai, son of Bishun Singh, which see.

Man Singh (مان سنگه), Rāja of Jodhpūr or Mārwar, was a descendant of Rāja Jaswant Singh Rāthorī, the earliest Rāja of this country on record. He succeeded Rāja Bhīm Singh in A.D. 1803 or 1804. Disasters or disappointments either soured the temper or affected the reason of Mān Singh, who became one of the most sanguinary monsters that ever disgraced the gaddī. His death was announced on the 20th September, A.D. 1843. The Mārwar succession question was settled in favour of Ahmadnagar on the 7th November, 1843, the choice falling not on the young heir of that house, but on his father Tukht Singh, who was unanimously elected, and whose son accompanied him as prince royal. Tukht Singh is a descendant of the Herori Jaswant. Several of the Zanana ladies and three or four slave girls performed Sati.

Man Singh, Raja (مان سنگه راجه), of Audh. His title was Mahārāja Sir Mān Singh Bahādūr Kayam Jung, K.C.S.I. He died at Ajudhia on the 11th October, A.D. 1870. He was Vice-President of the British Indian Association, a post which he held with great success.

Mansur (منصور), a khalif of Baghdād.

Vide Al-Mansūr.

Mansur (منصور), the son of Bāiqara

Mirzā, and father of Sultān Hussain Mirzā of Herāt.

Mansur (منصور), a poet, who is the author of a Diwān in which are some Kasidas in praise of Shāh Abbas II, who died in A.D. 1666, A.H. 1077, and of Abbas Quli Beg.

Mansur I. Samani, Amir (منصور) (سامانی امیر), a prince of the race of the Samanides, was the son of Amīr Nūh I. and brother to Amīr 'Abdul Malik, whom he succeeded A.D. 961, A.D. 350. He compelled the Dilamī ruler of Fars and 'Irāq to pay him an annual tribute of 150,000 dinars of gold; and the peace by which this tribute was fixed was cemented by his marriage with the daughter of Rukn-uddaula, the reigning prince of that family. Amīr Mansūr died after a reign of 15 lunar years on the 15th March, A.D. 976, 11thth Rajab, A.H. 365, and was succeeded by his son Amīr Nūh II. His wazīr Abū 'Alī bin-Muhammad translated into Persian the Tārīkh Tabarī.

Mansur II. Samani, Amir (منصور) (ثانی امیر) succeeded his father Amīr Nūh II. in A.D. 997, A.H. 387, on the throne of Khurāsān. He occupied it for a short period (little more than a year), which was marked with disgrace and misfortune. He was obliged to fly before his rebellious nobles, who afterwards deprived him of his sight and elevated his younger brother, 'Abdul Malik II. to the throne A.D. 998, A.H. 388.

Mansur 'Ali Khan, (منصور علی خان), Nawāb of Audh.
[Vide Sairdar Jang.]

Mansur 'Ali Khan, Sayyad (منصور) (علی خان سید), Nawāb of Murshidābād. He died in 1884.

Mansur Hallaj (منصور حلاج), the surname of Shaikh Husain Hallāj, a celebrated ascetic, who was a native of Baiza, and originally a cotton-carder. The Musalmāns differed in their opinions about the character of this person. Some took him to be a saint, and gave out that he performed miracles; others believed him to be a sorcerer or a juggler, and that he only deceived people with his tricks. He was, however, condemned and sentenced by the Khalif of Baghdad, Maqtadir, and was put to death because he used to proclaim "An-ul-haq," i.e. "I am the truth," or in other words, "I am God." When they had taken him to the place of execution, they first cut off both his hands and then his legs; they plucked out his eyes, cut out his tongue, and separated his head from his body. They then burned his mangled corpse to ashes, and threw it into the Tigris. This circumstance took place in the year A.D. 919, A.H. 306, but according to Ibn-Khallikān on the 24th Zi-Qa'da, A.H. 309, corresponding with the 26th March, A.D. 922. Shaikh Husain is commonly called Mansūr Hallāj, though it is the name of his father. He is considered by the Sūfīs to be one of their most spiritual leaders, who, they believe, had attained the fourth or last stage of Sūfīism. An inspired Sūfī is said to have demanded of the Almighty why he permitted Mansūr to suffer? The reply was, "This is the punishment for the revealer of secrets."

Mansur ibn-Alqaem ibn-Almahdi, (منصور ابن القايم ابن المهدي), a prince of Africa who died on Friday the 19th March, A.D. 953, Friday 29th Shawwāl, A.H. 341.

Manu (من), the son of Brahmā, the first male according to the Hindūs. Kapila was Manu's grandson, and the author of the Saṅkh Shāstra, in which he mentions the Gīta, which relates transactions that took place at the end of the Dwāpar and the beginning of the Kaljug. Manu is the supposed author of the work that goes by his name: it is said that it existed in the Satjug according to this shloka: "When 1010 years of the Satjug were expired, I Manu, at the full moon of the month Bhādr, by the command of Brahmā, finished this Shāstra." So runs the legend. But the work known to us as the Institutes of Manu is a Brahminical Utopia of comparatively modern date, probably A.D. 500.

[See Imp. Gazetteer of India, vol. vi. c. iv. where the evidence is summarised.]

Manucheher (منوچهر), one of the legendary kings of Persia of the first or Pishdādīan dynasty, who succeeded Farīdūn. He was a good and pious monarch; but the great prosperity which attended his reign was chiefly owing to the wisdom and courage of his prime minister, Sām, the son of Narīmān, whose descendants Zāl and Rustam, even during this reign, obtained a celebrity which has led Persian historians and poets to speak only of those events that are connected with their biography. Manūchehr died after a reign of 120 years, and was succeeded by his son Nuuzar, in the latter part of whose reign died Sām, the son of Narīmān. After the death of Sām, Pashang the king of Tūrān invaded Persia with a force of 30,000 men, commanded by his son Afrāsiāb. Two engagements and two single combats took place. Nauzar himself was discomfited by Afrāsīāb, who soon afterwards took him prisoner and slew him. This happened in the seventh year of the reign of that unfortunate monarch. [Such is the record of Mirkhūd (q.v.).]

Manuchehr (منوچهر). Vide Qābūs.

Manuchehr (منوچهر) (prince). He was the son of Shaikh Ibrāhīm, ruler of Shirwān, who died in A.D. 1417, A.H. 820. His panegyrist was Kātībī, who wrote a chronogram on his death, which happened in the year A.D. 1412, A.H. 815, five years before his father.

Manuchehr (منوچهر). Vide Tousani.

Manuchehr, Malik or Khaqan (منوچهر)

(ملک یا خاقان), ruler of Shirwān, whose panegyrist was Khūqānī the poet. He was a descendant of Bahrām Chobīn, and his title was Khāqānī, hence the takhallus of Khāqānī. Manūchehr reigned about the year A.D. 1180, A.H. 576, of the Christian era.

Manuchehri (منوچهری), who had the sobriquet of Shast Galla. His name was Hakiū Najm-uddīn Ahmad bin-Ya'qūb bin-Manūchehr. He lived at the court of Sulṭān Mahmūd of Ghaznī and of his two sons Masa'ūd and Muhammad. He acquired much wealth, and hence his sobriquet of Shast Galla, i.e. sixty flocks of sheep. He died in A.D. 1090, A.H. 483, and left a Diwān in Persian.

Manwi, Maulwi (منوی مولوی), an author.

Manzari (منظری سمرقندی), of Samarqand, a poet who was in the service of Bāīrām Khān at Āgra, and wrote a poem called Shāhnāmī Khayāl, which contains an account of the war of Sikandar Shāh Sūr, etc.

Maqanna' (مقنع). Vide al-Maḡna' or Maḡanna.

Maqbul (مقبول), named Maqbul

Ahmad. He is the author of Nūr-nāma and Qāf-nāma, also of a Maḡnawī in Urdū called Dard Ulfat. He was living at Lucknow in A.D. 1853, A.H. 1270.

Maqna' (مقنع). Vide al-Maḡna' or Maḡanna.

Maqrizi (مقریزی), author of the work entitled Qitāb us-Sulāh. He lived about the year A.D. 1229, A.H. 626.

Maqrizi (مقریزی), whose proper name is Taqī-uddīn Ahmad, was an eminent Arabic historian and geographer, born in A.D. 1360, in Maqriz near Balbēc. He early devoted himself to the study of history, astrology, etc. at Cairo, where also he afterwards held the offices of inspector of weights and Imām of different mosques. Some of his works have been translated into French and Latin. He died in A.D. 1442, aged 82 years.

Marḡhinani (مرغینانی). His proper name was Burhān-uddīn 'Alī bin-Muhammad, but he derived this title from his native country Marḡhinān, a city in Māwarūn-nahr. He is the author of the Ḥidāya and several other works. His death happened in A.D. 1197, A.H. 593.

[Vide Burhān-uddīn 'Alī.]

Maria (ماریه), one of the wives of Muhammad, by whom he had a son named Ibrāhīm, who died when an infant. She was called Qabṭī or Egyptian, because she was sent as a present to Muhammad by Mukoukas, king of Alexandria. She died in A.D. 637, A.H. 16.

Mariam (مریم). This word in Arabic signifies Mary, and is only applied to the Virgin Mary. The Qurān, in the chapter called Al-Amrān, or the family of Amrān, and in Sūra Miriām, confounds Mary the mother of Jesus with Miriām the daughter of Amrān and sister of Moses and Aaron. In the book called al-Sahīb, there is a tradition that the Apostle of God said: "Among men there have been many perfect; but among women only four:--'Asia, the wife of Pharaoh, Mary, the daughter of Amrān, Khudya, the daughter of Khawailid, and Fatima, daughter of Muhammad." Employed as an honorific title for Eastern ladies.

Mariam Makani (مریم مکانی), a title of Hamida Bāno Begam, the mother of the emperor Akbar, which she received after her death. See Hamida Bāno.

Mariam Zamani (مریم زمانی). She was the daughter of Rājā Beharī Māl Kachhwaha, and was married to the emperor Akbar Shāh. Her proper name is not known. She was the mother of the emperor Jahāngīr. She died at Āgra in the time of her son Jahāngīr in A.D. 1623, A.H. 1032, and the mausoleum at Āgra in Sikandra, which was erected by her son over her grave, is called by the people of Āgra, Rauḡa Mariām.

Ma'ruf (معروف), poetical name of Ilāhī Bakhsh Khān, younger brother of Fakhr-uddaula Nawāb Ahmad Bakhsh Khān, son of Mirzā 'Arif Khān. He died in the year A.H. 1242, and left two Diwāns in Urdū.

Ma'ruf Karkhi (معروف كرخي). Ho was by birth a Christian, but being convinced that there are not three Gods as the Christians say, but one, he became a convert to Muhammadanism, and his parents followed his example. He afterwards became a very pious Musalmān; was contemporary with Dāūd Tāi and Ibrāhīm Adham, and became master of Sarī Saqatī. He died in the reign of Māmūn, the son of Hārūn al-Rashīd, on the 31st August, A.D. 815, 20th Muharram, A.H. 200, and lies buried in a place called Karkh in Baghdād. The heart of Ma'rūf (that is to say the letter R, which is the numeral for 200) is the chronogram for the Hijrī year of his demise.

Marwan I. (مروان ابن الحكم), son of Hakam, was the fourth khalīf of the race of Umayya. He was proclaimed khalīf at Damascus after the death of Mu'āwīa II. in A.D. 684, A.H. 64. He was also called "Ibn-Tarīd," the son of the expelled, because Muhammad had banished his father Hakam for divulging a secret. He died after a reign of 298 days on the 12th April, A.D. 685, 2nd Ramaẓān, A.H. 65. He is said by some authors to have been poisoned by his wife, Zainab, the widow of Mu'āwīa II. He had married her on condition that her son Khālīd should succeed him, but afterwards altering the succession in favour of his own son 'Abdul Malik, young Khālīd reproached him with his breach of promise; upon this Marwān calling him bastard, the child complained to his mother, who, to be revenged for this affront, is said to have poisoned Marwān or smothered him with a pillow.

Marwan II. (مروان الحمار), surnamed

Himār or "the ass," was the son of Muhammad the son of Hakam, and the fourteenth and last khalīf of the house of Umayya. He was nephew to Marwan I. After deposing Ibrāhīm the son of Walīd II. he ascended the throne of Damascus in A.D. 745, 20th Zil-hijja, A.H. 132, and was defeated and slain on the 5th August, A.D. 750, in a battle fought against Abū' l-Abbās al-Saffāh, who was previously proclaimed khalīf by the inhabitants of Kūfa on Friday the 29th November, A.D. 749, 13 Rabi' II. A.H. 132. Marwān, before his accession to the throne, had been governor of Mesopotamia, and had received, by his Georgian warfare, the honourable epithet of the ass of Mesopotamia or Al-Himār, a warlike breed of asses that never fly from an enemy.

Marwan ibn-Hafsa (مروان ابن حفصة), an eminent Arabian poet, on whom the khalīf Mahdī, on one occasion, bestowed the sum of 70,000 dirhams (£1600) as a reward for merit.

Masa'ud I. Sultan (مسعود اول سلطان), son of Sulṭān Mahmūd of Ghaznī. After cruelly depriving his brother Muhammad of sight, he mounted the throne of Ghaznī A.D. 1030, A.H. 421. He made several incursions into India to maintain the tranquillity of those possessions which his father had subdued. But he had no time to attack others; all his means were required to defend himself from a formidable tribe of Tarjars, called Saljūq, who had, for a considerable time past, made predatory incursions into Khurāsān and other parts of his dominions. He carried on a petty war against different branches of this powerful tribe for some time, and with various success, till he was completely defeated in a great action fought in Khurāsān with Tughrāl Beg Saljūqī on Friday the 16th June, A.D. 1038, 9th Ramaẓān, A.H. 429, and was obliged to fly towards Lāhore, which he had resolved to make the future capital of his government. On his march he was deposed by his mutinous army, and his brother Muhammad Makahūl the blind was again placed on the throne. Masa'ud remained in confinement for several years, and was afterwards assassinated by Ahmad the son of Muhammad Makahūl A.D. 1041, A.H. 433.

Masa'ud II. Sultan (مسعود ثاني سلطان), son of Sulṭān Maudūd, a child of four years old, was raised to the throne of Ghaznī after the death of his father in December, A.D. 1049, but was soon deposed after a nominal reign of six days, and Abū' l-Hasan 'Alī, the son of Sulṭān Masa'ud I. was proclaimed emperor.

Masa'ud III. Sultan (مسعود ثالث سلطان), the son of Sulṭān Ibrāhīm, ascended the throne of Ghaznī after the death of his father in A.D. 1098, A.H. 492. He reigned over Ghaznī and Lāhore 16 years; and had for his wife the sister of Sulṭān Sanjar the Saljūkide, who had made peace with his father. Sulṭān Masa'ud died in A.D. 1114, A.H. 508, and was succeeded by his son Sherzād or Shermazād.

Masa'ud IV. Sultan (مسعود رابعی), the son of Sulṭān Muhammad Saljūqī, and brother of Tughrāl II. whom he succeeded to the throne of Hamdan. He began to reign about the year A.D. 1134, A.H. 529, and died A.D. 1152, 1st Rajab, A.H. 547. Atābak Eldiguz was his minister.

Masa'ud Ghazi, Salar (مسعود غازی), a celebrated Muhammadan martyr commonly called Ghazī Miyān, whose tomb is at Bahrāich in Audh. He was the son of Sālār Sūhū, and related to Sulṭān Mahmūd of Ghaznī: his mother being that monarch's sister. He had forcibly taken possession of a Hindū temple in Bahrāich, upon which the Hindūs surrounded him on all sides; a battle ensued, in which Masa'ud Ghāzī was slain, and several of his adherents cut to pieces. This circumstance took place on the 16th June, A.D. 1033, 14th Rajab, A.H. 424, at which time he was only 19 years old. To commemorate his martyrdom a festival takes place every year at Bahrāich on the first Sunday in the month of Jaith, which falls exactly on the 29th day after our Easter Sunday, and very seldom on any other day. The festival terminates with the flying of kites.

Masa'ud Hisari, Maulana (مسعود حسارى),

(احصارى مولانا), a poet who was living at the commencement of Akbar's reign, and wrote the chronogram of the emperor Humāyūn's death, which took place in A.D. 1556, A.H. 963.

Masa'ud, Khwaja (مسعود خواجه), of Bak, a place near Bukhāra. It is said that he was for some time a king in Mawarunnahr, but a dervish at heart. He is the author of several works on Sūfism, one of which is the Umm al-Nasāch. He has also composed a Diwān, which he called Nūr ul-Ain, the "light of the eye," containing more than 3000 verses.

Masa'ud, Khwaja (مسعود خواجه).

Masa'ud Sa'd Salman (مسعود ساد سلمان), a poet and native of Jurjān.

He flourished in the time of Manūchehr, ruler of that country, about the year A.D. 1060, A.H. 452. He is the author of a Diwān in Arabic and Persian.

Masa'udi (مسعودى), the famous historian who visited India, Ceylon and the coast of China in the year A.D. 915. He is the author of the work entitled Ma'dun ul-Jaūdahir, Mines of Gems, of which the first part has been well translated by Dr. A. Sprenger. The first of his compositions is Akhbār uz-Zamān, an enormous work of at least twenty volumes; the second is the Qitāb ul-Aṣnāth, being the complement to the Akhbār; and the third Mines of Gems, or as some call it the Meadows of Gold, forming at the same time the extract and the supplement of the two others. He died A.D. 956, A.H. 345. In describing the early discoveries of his countrymen inside the Great Pyramid in Egypt, he says that some of them found in the lower part of the Pyramid a vase containing a quantity of fluid of an unknown quality. They also discovered in a large hall a quantity of golden coins put up in columns, every piece of which was of the weight of 1000 dinars. In another place they found the image of an old man, made of green stone, sitting upon a sofa, and wrapped up in a garment. Before him were statues of little boys. Having proceeded further they met with the image of a cock made of precious stones and placed upon a green column. Continuing their researches they came to a female idol of white stone and lions of stone on each side. This he says, occurred in the time of Yarid bin-'Abdullah, supposed, says Colonel Howard Vyse, to have been a king of Egypt.

Mas-hafi (مصحفى), an Urdū poet of Lucknow, whose proper name is Ghulam Hamdānī. His native country was Anroba in the district of Murādābād. He died about the year A.D. 1824, A.H. 1240. He is the author of several Diwāns in Persian and Urdū, and also produced (1795) a Tazkira, or biography, of Urdū poets. He also wrote another Tazkira for Persian poets, and a historical work, in verse, which he called Shāhnāma.

Ma'sūm 'Alī Shah, Mir (معصوم علی شاه میر), a celebrated Sūfi teacher, who was a disciple of Sayyad 'Alī Razā, a native of the Deccan. During the reign of Karīm Khān he went from India to Shirāz, where his followers soon amounted to more than thirty thousand. The orthodox priests took alarm, and prevailed on the mild Karīm Khān to banish the saint from his capital, but his reputation was increased by the act of power which proclaimed him dangerous. After Karīm Khān's death Mir Ma'sūm, who resided in a small village near Isfahān, deputed his first disciple, Fayāz 'Alī, to teach in that city. That holy person soon died, and was succeeded in his office by his son Nūr 'Alī Shāh: who, though young in years, was (to us the phrase of his historian), "old in piety." The number and rank of Mir Ma'sūm's followers excited alarm in the priests of Isfahān, who transmitted so exaggerated an account of the vile heresies of the Sūfis to 'Alī Murād Khān the king, and recommended him so strongly to support the faith, by punishing those whose opinions were alike hostile to true religion and good government, that the monarch, the moment he received their representation, sent orders to cut off the noses and ears of some among the most zealous of the obnoxious sect; and as a further disgrace, to shave the beards of all who had adopted their opinions. The ignorant soldiers intrusted with the execution of this mandate, were not very capable of discriminating between true believers and infidels; and we are assured by a contemporary writer, that many orthodox Muhammadans had their noses and ears cut off and their beards shaved on this memorable occasion.

Mir Ma'sūm 'Alī and Nūr 'Alī Shāh, after wandering from one place to another, revisited Kirmān, where Mushtāq 'Alī, the most pious of his disciples, was put to death. At Kirmānshāh Nūr 'Alī Shāh was placed in confinement; and Mir Ma'sūm was murdered when at prayers in the midst of his followers. This sect, however, notwithstanding the efforts of their enemies, continued to increase in numbers; and Nūr 'Alī Shāh, with all who adhered to him, were banished the kingdom. His avowed disciples were at this period about sixty thousand, but many more were supposed to be secretly devoted to him. He is said to have been poisoned at Mausul. It is related that two inhabitants of Kirmānshāh, who were distinguished by an extraordinary appearance of zeal, dressed his dinner on the day that he was suddenly attacked by violent spasms, which in a few hours terminated his existence. Their flight led all to suspect them of having poisoned him. Nūr 'Alī died at 9 o'clock on the morning of the 3rd June, A.D. 1800, 10th Muharram, A.H. 1215. He expired close to the grave of the prophet Jonas, within a league of Mausul.

Matin (متین), the poetical name of Shaikh 'Abdul Raza bin-'Abdullāh Matin. He was a native of Isfahān, but of Arabic origin. He came to India in the reign of the emperor Muhammad Shāh, and subsequently went to Lucknow, where he assumed the garb of a dervish and received a pension from Burhān ul-Mulk Sa'adat Khān. Having lost his pension owing to the change of rulers, he proceeded to Bengal, where he died A.D. 1761, A.H. 1175, and left a Diwān of 5000 verses.

Minnat (منث), poetical name of Mir.

Qamar-uddīn Minnat, a native of Dehli. Warren Hastings conferred on him the title of "Malik-ush-Shu'arā," or "the king of poets," at the recommendation of the Nawāb of Murshidābād. He visited the Deccan and received 5,000 rupees for a Qasida or panegyric which he wrote in praise of the Nizām of Haidarābād. He died at Calcutta in A.D. 1793, A.H. 1208, and left 150,000 verses in Persian and Urdū. Among his compositions is a Chamanistān and a Shakaristān. He was the preceptor of Gunna Begam (q.v.).

Mir (میر). This word is an abbreviation of Amīr, which in Arabic signifies a chief, prince and commander. The Sayyads of India are also called Mir.

Mir (میر), the poetical designation of Mir Muḥammad Taqī, a Hindustānī poet who flourished in the time of the emperor Shāh 'Alam, and whose poetry is mostly Rekhta. He was a native of Akbarābād and nephew to Sirāj-uddīn 'Alī Khān 'Arzū. He is the author of six Diwāns and a Tazkira or biography of poets. He died at Lucknow, nearly 100 years old (lunar), in the year A.D. 1810, A.H. 1225.

Mir 'Alam (میر عالم), title of Mir

Abū'l Qasim, the prime minister of the Nizām of Haidarābād. This nobleman, for upwards of thirty years had taken a lead in the administration of affairs in the Deccan. He died in the month of November, A.D. 1808, and was succeeded by Munir ul-Mulk.

Mir 'Ali (میر علی), surnamed Dāmād or "the bridegroom" (because he was married to a favourite sister of the great Shāh 'Abbās), was the teacher of a system of philosophy much more pure and sublime than had hitherto been known. His immortal scholar Sadra has, by his numerous works, proved himself independent of Aristotle in abstract science, though that great philosopher had been hitherto the master of his preceptor and all his predecessors in those branches of learning.

Miran 'Adil Khān Faruqī (میران عادل)

(خان فاروقی), third king of Khāndesh, succeeded his father Malik Nasir Khān in September, A.D. 1437. He reigned more than three years, expelled the Deccanīs from Khāndesh in A.D. 1440, and was murdered in the city of Burhānpūr on Friday the 28th April, A.D. 1441, 8th Zil-hijja, A.H. 844. He was buried at Tālner by the side of his father, and was succeeded by his son Mīrān Mubārīk Khān I.

Miran Ghani (میران غنی), commonly called 'Adil Khān Fārūqī I. succeeded his father Mīrān Mubārīk Khān in May, A.D. 1457, Rajab, A.H. 861, to the government of Khāndesh, which province under his rule attained a degree of prosperity which it had never known under any of its former rulers. This prince added considerably to the fortifications of Asir, and constructed the strong outwork called Malaigāh; he also built the citadel of Burhānpūr, and raised many magnificent palaces in that town. He died after a reign of 48 lunar years on Friday the 8th September, A.D. 1503, 14th Rabī' I. A.H. 909, and was buried at his particular request near the palace of the Daulat Maidān in Burhānpūr. He was succeeded by his brother Dāūd Khān Fārūqī.

Miran Husain Nizam Shah (میران حسین نظام شاہ)

ascended the throne of Ahmadnagar in the Deccan after the murder of his father Murtaza Nizām Shāh in June, A.D. 1588, Rajab, A.H. 996. Being of an impetuous and cruel disposition, he began his reign by tyranny and oppression, and was deposed and murdered after a reign of ten months and three days on the 18th March, A.D. 1589, 11th Jumādā I. A.H. 997, and his cousin Ismā'īl Nizām Shāh, the son of his uncle prince Burhān Shāh (who was then at the court of the emperor Akbar at Dehli), was raised to the throne.

Miran Mubarik Khan Faruqi I.

(میران مبارک خان فاروقی) succeeded his father Mīrān 'Adil Khān Fārūqī in the government of Khāndesh in April, A.D. 1441. He reigned, without undertaking any foreign conquest, or drawing upon himself the hostility of his neighbours, for a period of nearly 17 lunar years. He died on the 17 May, A.D. 1457, 17th Rajab, A.H. 861, was buried at Tālner, and succeeded by his son Mīrān Ghāni, commonly called 'Adil Khān Fārūqī I.

(میران مبارک خان فاروقی) succeeded his brother Mīrān Muhammad Khān in the government of Khāndesh in A.D. 1586, A.H. 943. He reigned 32 lunar years and died on the night of Wednesday the 24th December, A.D. 1566, 6th Jumādā II. A.H. 974, and was succeeded by Mīrān Muhammad Khān Fārūqī II.

Miran Muhammad Khan Faruqi I.

(میران محمد خان فاروقی) succeeded to the government of Khāndesh after the death of his father, 'Adil Khān II. in A.D. 1520, A.H. 926, and after the demise of Bahādur Shāh, king of Gujrāt and Mālwa, who was murdered by the Portuguese at Diu in February, A.D. 1537, he (Muhammad Khān) being the son of Bahādur Shāh's sister, was proclaimed by his mother, in concert with the nobles, king of Gujrāt and Mālwa, and was formally crowned at Mādo with the title of Mīrān Muhammad Shāh; but his reign in those provinces was of short duration, for he died suddenly on the 24th April, A.D. 1537, 13th Zi-Qa'da, A.H. 943. His body was conveyed to Burhānpūr, and interred in the vault of his father, 'Adil Khān II. His brother Mīrān Mubārīk Khān II. succeeded him in the government of Khāndesh, and Mahmūd Shāh son of Latīf Khān the brother of Bahādur Shāh, to the throne of Gujrāt.

Miran Muhammad Khan Faruqi II.

(میران محمد خان فاروقی ثانی) succeeded Mīrān Mubārīk Khān II. in the government of Khāndesh in December, A.D. 1566, and died after a reign of ten years in A.D. 1576, A.H. 984. He was succeeded by his brother Rāja 'Alī Khān.

Miran Shah Mirza (میران شاہ مرزا), the eldest surviving son of Amīr Taimūr (Tamerlane), was born in the year A.D. 1367, A.H. 769. He had the government of 'Irāq, 'Azurbejān, Dayārbikr and Syria during the lifetime of his father, and after his death he reigned 3 years 3 months and 7 days over those countries, when he was slain in a battle against Qara Yūsuf the Turkman on the 20th April, A.D. 1408, 24th Zi-Qa'da, A.H. 810, aged 41 lunar years 7 months and 10 days. Muhammad Amin of Shāhristān in Persia, came to India in the time of Jahāngir A.D. 1618, A.H. 1027, and served under him for several years. In the reign of Shāh Jahān, he was raised to the rank of 5000 with the title of Mīr Jumla. He died on the 22nd August, o.s. 1637, 10th Rabi' II. A.H. 1047.

Mir Jumla (میر جملة), title of Mīr Muhammad Sa'id the prime minister of

'Abdullah Qutb Shāh of Golkanda. He had formerly been a diamond merchant, and had been known and respected throughout the Deccan for his wealth and abilities long before he attained high station. His son Muhammad Amin, a dissolute and violent young man, had drawn on himself the resentment of 'Abdullah Qutb Shāh, and had involved his father in a dispute with the court at Delhi. Mīr Jumla, in the year A.D. 1656, A.H. 1066, threw himself on the protection of the emperor Shāh Jahān, in whose service he remained; became the chosen counsellor of the prince Aurangzib, and afterwards one of the most useful instruments of his ambitious designs. On the accession of Aurangzib 'Alamgir, he was sent in pursuit of Shāh Shujā' and appointed governor of Bengal. The title conferred on him by 'Alamgir was Mu'azzam Khān Khān-khānān Sipah Sālār. He held the rank of 7000. In the fourth year of the emperor, A.D. 1662, he went on an expedition against the kingdom of Asām. He marched from Dacca in Bengal about the month of February, and entered Asām by Ghoraḡhāt; from thence he proceeded with very little opposition to the capital Ghargaon which he took and plundered; but the rainy season setting in soon after, inundating great part of the country, his supplies were cut off by the Assamese, and his troops becoming sickly, it was with great difficulty the army effected its retreat. The unfortunate general fell a victim to the climate a few days after his re-entering Bengal. He died at Khizarpūr in Kūch Behār on the 31st March, A.D. 1663, 2nd Ramazān, A.H. 1073. The history of this expedition was written by Shahāb-uddin Ahmad Tālāsh in A.D. 1663, A.H. 1073.

Mir Jumla (میر جملة), title of 'Abdullah, a nobleman and private favourite of the emperor Farrukh-siyar, was promoted for some time to the Subadārī of Bihār. In the first year of the emperor Muhammad Shāh, he was appointed to the rank of Sadr us-Sudūr, and died in the 13th year of his reign, about the year A.D. 1731, A.H. 1141.

He died at Bihkar in A.D. 1606, A.H. 1016.

Mir Muhammad Khan Talpur (میر محمد خان تلپور)

(محمد خان تلپور), one of the ex-Amirs of Sind. He was lately one of the members of the Bombay Legislative Council. He died at Haidarābād (Sind) on the 17th December, A.D. 1870. Much respected, his remains were followed to the family mausoleum by the Commissioner, the Judge, and the Collector, of the district. He lies in the place originally intended for his late father, Mir Murād 'Alī, who preferred lying out in the open air, where the sun and moon could shed their light on his grave. He died in his 60th year. There now remain only three of the once numerous Talpūr family at Haidarābād, all aged men, at whose death in the course of time the once troublesome family will be extinct. The conquest of their territory and the overthrow of their power, furnish one of the most remarkable and interesting episodes in British Indian history.

Mirza (میرزا) is an abbreviation of Amīrzāda, which in Persian signifies the son of a prince or nobleman. It is also written Mirzā, which has been adopted in this work. The descendants of Amīr Taimūr were all called Mirzās till Bābar Shāh, who assumed the honourable title of Bādshāh, and the princes were called Sultāns and Salātīn. When used to designate princely rank the word follows the name; when it precedes it is a mere prefix of social aspect like Mr. or Monsieur.

Mirza Jan (مرزا جان), whose poetical name was Jāni, was the father of Mirzā Jān Jānān.

Mirza Jana (مرزا جانا), and Mirzā Ghāzi, two wazirs who lived in the reign of the emperor 'Alamgir. Their tombs are in Tatta, and the inscription shows the date to be A.D. 1683, A.H. 1095.

Mirza Jangli (مرزا جنگلی), Nawāb Sa'adat 'Alī's second brother.

Mirza Khan (مرزا خان), author of the Tuhfat ul-Hind, a work on Hindū music, etc., composed under the patronage of 'Azīm Shāh. It contains a minute account of Hindū literature in all, or most of, its branches; he professes to have extracted his elaborate chapter on music, with the assistance of Pandits, from the Rāganavra or Sea of Passions, the Rāgarpana or Mirror of Modes, etc.

Mirza Mihr Nasir (مرزا مهر نصیر), a physician in the service of Karīm Khān, king of Persia, and author of a Masnawī. Amongst the many poems which have celebrated the charms and delights of the Spring, his Masnawī holds the highest place. He flourished about the year A.D. 1770, A.H. 1184.

Mirza Muhammad (مرزا محمد), sur-named Bulbul, a celebrated lutanist of Persia. It is related by Sir William Jones, that an intelligent Persian repeated to him again and again that he had more than once been present when Mirzā Muhammad was playing to a large company in a grove near Shirāz, where he distinctly saw the nightingales trying to vie with the musician, sometimes warbling on the trees, sometimes fluttering from branch to branch, as if they wished to approach the instrument whence the melody proceeded, and at length dropping on the ground in a kind of courtesy, from which they were soon raised by the change of the mode.

Mirza Muhsin (مرزا محسن), brother of Nawāb Safdar Jang. His title was Nawāb Izzat-uddaula, which see.

Mirza Najaf. Vide Najaf Khān.

Mirza Nasir (مرزا نصیر), the father of the maternal grandsire of Nawāb Shujā-uddaula. He came into Hindūstān in the beginning of the reign of the emperor Bahādur Shāh, the son of 'Alamgir, by whom he was appointed to an office of trust at Patna about the year A.D. 1708, A.H. 1120, where he died and where his tomb yet remains. He had two sons, the second of whom, Muhammad Anin, on being apprised of the death of his father, left Persia, and about the year A.D. 1718, visited the court of the emperor Farrukh-siyar. He was appointed by this prince governor of the fort of Āgra; and soon rising to greater honours, he ultimately became the viceroy of Audh, by the title of Burhān ul-Mulk Sa'adat Khān.

Mirza Nasir (مرزا نصیر), a poet who came to India from Mazindarān in the reign of the emperor Shāh 'Alam the blind. His son Malik Muhammad Khān received the title of Nawāb Samsam-uddaula Malik Muhammad Khān Diler Jang, from Nawāb Zulfikar-uddaula Najaf Khān and after some time died in Jaipur in A.D. 1804, A.H. 1219.

Mirza Rustam (مرزا رستم), a prince of Qandahār, being driven to difficulties by his own brothers and the Uzbaks, came to the court of Akbar in A.D. 1593, A.H. 1001, and presented the king with the fort of Qandahār, for which the government of Multān was conferred on him, and he was ranked among the Amirs of the empire. He was the son of Mirzā Sultān Husain the grandson of Shāh Ismā'il, king of Persia.

Mirza Shafī (مرزا شفیع), nephew of Mirza Najaf Khān (q.v.). He contested the succession to his uncle with Afrāsyāb (q.v.) on the great Minister's death, and was assassinated before the fort of Āgra by Muhammad Beg Hamadani in September, 1783.

Misa'ab (مصعب), brother of 'Abd-ullāh ibn-Zuber, on whose part he was governor of Basra in the time of the Khalīfah Marwān I. and his son 'Abdul Malik. He was killed in a battle fought against the troops of the latter, about the year A.D. 690, A.H. 71, and while 'Abdul Malik was at Kūfa during an entertainment, Misa'ab's head was presented to him; upon which one of the company took occasion to say, "I saw Husain's head in this same castle presented to 'Ubad-ullāh; 'Ubad-ullāh's to Almuhtār; Almuhtār's to Misa'ab; and now at last Misa'ab's to yourself." This observation so affected the Khalīf, that either to avert the ill omen, or from some other motive, he ordered the castle to be immediately demolished. Misa'ab had been 'Abdul Malik's intimate friend before he was Khalīf, but marrying afterwards Sakina the daughter of Husain, and 'Ayesha the daughter of Tulha, by these marriages he was engaged in the interest of two families who were at mortal enmity with the house of Umayya.

Miskin (مسکین), the poetical name of several poets of India.

teacher of the chiefs of Karnāl in the Balāghat districts, Southern Hindūstān, whose mausoleum stands a mile distant from the town of Karnāl. He is the author of a Diwān.

Mitti (مٹی), a person of the tribe of Indians called Kalāl, whose profession was to keep watch at the gate of the kings and noblemen of India, and to run before them in their retinue. Some of them were raised even to the rank of 1500. This man was employed by Nūr Jahān Begam, was well educated and became a poet in the time of Jahāngir. He is the author of a Diwān.

Mohan Lal (موهن لال), a Hindū who adopted "Anis" for his poetical name. He was the author of a Tazkira called Anis ul-Ahbab, compiled in A.D. 1783, A.H. 1197. He informs us that when 'Asaf-uddaula the Nawāb of Audh saw the Tazkira of the contemporary poet Huzin, he ordered him to compile a similar work on Indian poets.

Mohan Lal Munshi (موهن لال منشی), the son of Pandit Budh Singh, the son of Rāja Manī Rām, of Kashmere descent. His father was a resident of Dehli. He was a student of Dehli College and accompanied Lieutenant Burnes and Dr. J. G. Gerard in the capacity of a Persian Munshi to Persia in January, 1832, when he wrote a Journal of his. Travels entitled Journal of a Tour through the Panjāb, Afghānistān, Turkistān, Khurāsān, and part of Persia, published in Calcutta in 1834. He was employed as an attaché to the British agency during the first Afghān war, of which he published an account, in which he attributed the outbreak of 1840 to the misconduct of British officers. He died about 1870 at Dehli, where he resided for the latter part of his life. He became converted to the Muhammadan faith.

Mohan Singh (موهن سنگه), son of Rāo Qaran, murdered by one Muhammad Shāh about the year A.D. 1761. His women burned themselves alive with his corpse.

Mu'awia I. (معاویة), the son of Abū Sufiān, the son of Harb, and general of the khalifs 'Umar and 'Usmān. After avenging his master's (Osman's) death, he seized his kingdom A.D. 644, and became the first khalif of the race of Umayya or Omniades. He took Rhodes and after destroying the Colossus, he attacked Sicily, and carried devastation to the gates of Constantinople. After besieging in vain the capital for seven years, he purchased peace by an annual tribute. During this siege, the Greek fire is said to have been invented. He died on the 7th April, A.D. 680, New Moon of Rajab, A.H. 60, after having reigned from Hasan's resignation 19 lunar years 3 months and 27 days, and was buried at Damascus his capital, which was made the residence of the khalifs as long as the house of Umayya continued on the throne. Mu'awia had embraced the Muhammadan religion at the same time as his father, which was in the year of the victory. Muhammad made him his secretary, and 'Umar gave him the lieutenantancy of Syria, which he held during four years of that khalif's life. 'Usmān continued him in that post during the whole space of his reign, which was about twelve years. For four years more he kept Syria in his own hands by force, whilst he held out against 'Alī. Taken altogether, therefore, he held possession of Syria, either as governor or khalif, for nearly 40 years. There are different reports about his age; some say 70 years and others 75. He was succeeded by his son Yezīd I.

and the third khalif of the race of Umayya. He succeeded his father in September, A.D. 683, A.H. 64, at Damascus, but being of a weakly constitution, and unable to bear the fatigues of government, resigned the crown six weeks after his inauguration, and died soon after without naming a successor. Therefore, as soon as he had made his abdication, the officers of the court proceeded to the election of a khalif and their choice fell upon Marwān, the son of Hakam. In the meantime 'Abdullah the son of Zuber had been declared khalif in Arabia, Irak, Khurāsān, Egypt, and a great part of Syria. [Vide 'Umar al Maksūs.]

Mubarik 'Ali Khan (مبارک علی خان)

(نواب), Nawāb of Bengal, Behār and Urisa, placed on the masnad on the 23rd December, A.D. 1824.

Mubarik Shah (مبارک شاه), the son of Khizir Khān, ascended the throne of Dehli after the death of his father on the 22nd May, A.D. 1421, 19th Jumādā I. A.H. 824. He reigned 13 lunar years 3 months and 16 days and was murdered on the 18th April, A.D. 1434, 5th Ramaẓān, A.H. 837, in a masjid where he had gone to say his prayers, by Qāzi 'Abdus Samad, Sadhūran Khattri and others, who raised Muhammad Shāh, his nephew, to the throne.

Mubarik Shah Khilji (مبارک شاه)

(خلجی), surnamed Qutb-uddīn, ascended the throne of Dehli (according to Firishṭa) on the 22nd March, A.D. 1317, 7th Muḥarram, A.H. 717, after the death of his father Sulṭān 'Alā-uddīn Khiljī, and the murder of Kāfūr, a slave of the latter, who had aspired to the throne and had raised Shahāb-uddīn 'Umar Khān a boy of seven years of age, the youngest son of the late Sulṭān to the throne. Amīr Khusrō, the celebrated Persian poet who had served three kings before, wrote a book in his name, for which he was remunerated by the king with an elephant load of silver pieces. Mubārik Shāh reigned four years, and was murdered on the 4th April, A.D. 1321, 5th Rabi' I. A.H. 721, by his wazīr, Khusrō Malik, a favourite slave to whom he had confided all the powers of the State. This man ascended the throne with the title of Khusrō Shāh, but was assassinated five months after by Ghāzi Khān Tughlaq, governor of the Panjāb, who took the title of Ghayās-uddīn Tughlaq Shāh. The house of Khiljī terminated with Mubārik Shāh.

Mubarik Shah Sharqi (مبارک شاه)

(شرقی), whose former name was

Malik Wāzil or Karanfāl, was the adopted son of Khwāja Jahān Shārkī, whom he succeeded A.D. 1401, A.H. 803, to the government of Jaunpūr, and perceiving that the kingdom of Dehli was thrown into disorder and anarchy, he, with the consent of the officers of his government, assumed the royal canopy, and caused coin to be struck in his name under the above title. He died after a short reign of 18 months in the year A.D. 1402, A.H. 804, and was succeeded by his younger brother Ibrāhīm Shāh Shārkī.

the youngest of the three sons of Mir Ja'far 'Ali Khān, Nawāb of Bengal. He succeeded his brother Snif-uddaula in March, A.D. 1779, on the same terras as his brother, viz. to receive a pension of sixteen lacs of rupees, and the business of Nāzim to be managed by deputy. He died at Murshidābād in September, A.D. 1793, and was succeeded by his son Nāsir ul-Mulk, Wazīr-uddaula. Mubārik-uddaula is mentioned in Foster's Travels as the grandson of Mir Ja'far and of Miran. Hamilton says Mubārik-uddaula died in A.D. 1796.

a title of Nawāb Sarbaland Khān.

Mubid (موید), the takhallus of Zinda

Rām of Kashmir. He was a pupil of Mirzā 'Abdul Ghānī Beg Qābul, and is the author of a Dīwān. He died in A.D. 1759, A.H. 1172.

Mubid Shah (موید شاه), a Guebre who turned Musalmān and wrote a history of the religions in the time of the emperor Akbar entitled Iabistān. The intention of the author appears to have been to furnish to Akbar a pretended historical basis of the religion which this emperor had invented, and which he was desirous to introduce. For this reason, the author commences with a very long chapter on the religion of the Mahābādians, which is a mere web of incoherent fables. Sir William Jones first mentioned this work. Gladwin published its first chapter in the New Asiatic Miscellany, together with an English translation. Leyden in the 9th volume of the Asiatic Researches translated the chapter on the Illuminati, and the text of the whole work was published at Calcutta in 1809. The Oriental Translation Society also published the whole in English.

Mughis-uddin Qazī (مغیث الدین قاضی). He flourished in the reign of Sulṭān 'Alā-uddin Khiljī.

Muhabbat Khan, Nawab (محبت خان نواب), whose takhallus is Muhabbat, was also called Muhabbat-ullāh Khān, one of the sons of Itāfz Rahmat Khān. In composing Rikhta he was a pupil of Mīr Jafar 'Alī Haṣrat, and in Persian a pupil of Makin. He resided at Lucknow and received a handsome allowance from the British Government as well as from the nawāb 'Asaf-uddaula. He has written a Masnawī called Asīr Muhabbat, containing the loves of Sisī and Pānū, at the request of Mr. Johnson, who had the title of Mumtāz-uddaula, and is also the author of a Diwān. According to a chronogram of Jurat he died in A.D. 1807, A.H. 1222.

Muhammad (محمد) (or Mahomed), the Arabian prophet, author of the Qur'ān, was born on Monday the 20th April, A.D. 571, 10th Rabi' I. at Mecca in Arabia, and was of the tribe of Quresh, the noblest of the country. Arab writers make him to be descended in a right line from Ishmael the son of Abraham; but do not pretend to any certainty in the remote part of his genealogy. He lost his father, 'Abdullah, before he was two years old, and his mother, 'Amina, before he was six; but their attention was supplied by the care of his grandfather, 'Abdul Mutalib, who, at his death, which happened two years afterwards, left him under the guardianship of his son Abū Tālib, with whom he continued till he was twenty-five, when he was placed in the service of a woman named Khudya, the widow of a rich merchant at Mecca, who sent merchandize into Syria. This woman fell in love with Muhammad, the driver of her camels, and married him. In his frequent journeys through Arabia, he had observed the various sects which divided the opinions of the eastern Christians, and he considered that nothing could so firmly secure to him the respect of the world as laying the foundation of a new religion. In his 40th year he assumed the title of the Apostle of God, and gradually increased his fame and his followers by the aid of pretended visions. When he found himself exposed to danger at Mecca he left the city, and retired to Madīna, where his doctrines found a more friendly reception. This event, which happened in the year A.D. 622, forms the celebrated era of the Muhammadans, called the Hijra or Hijri, which signifies Separation. At Madīna the prophet erected his standard, and as for thirteen years before he had endeavoured to spread his doctrines by persuasion, he now propagated them by the sword. In the eleventh year of the Hijra the prophet fell sick, and after a confinement of thirteen days he died on Monday the 8th June, A.D. 632, 12th Rabi' I. A.H. 11, aged 63 lunar years. He was buried in the same place where he died, in the chamber of the most beloved of his wives, 'Ayesha, the daughter of Abū Bakr, at Madīna, where his remains are still preserved. It is very remarkable that though Muhammad himself so often declared in the Qur'ān that he wrought no miracles, yet his followers have ascribed a great many to him. For instance, they affirm that he caused water to flow from his fingers, that he split the moon in two, that the stones, trees, and beasts acknowledged him to be the true prophet sent from God, and saluted him as such; that he went one night from Mecca to Jerusalem, from whence he ascended to heaven, where he saw and conversed with God, and came back again to Mecca before the next morning; with many more miracles equally incredible. Muhammad permitted, by his law, four wives to each of his followers, but did not limit himself to that number; for he observed that a prophet, being peculiarly gifted and privileged, was not bound to restrict himself to the same laws as ordinary mortals. The authors who give him the smallest number of wives owe that he had fifteen, four of whom, however, never shared connubial rites. Their names and the year when they died, are as follows:—

	A.D.	A.H.
1. Khudija, the daughter of Khawylid, died 3 years before the Hijra era, aged 65	619
2. Sūda, daughter of Zama'a, died	674	54
3. 'Ayesha, daughter of Abū Bakr, died aged 66	677	57
4. Hafsa, daughter of 'Umar Khattāb, died	665	45
5. Umm Salma, daughter of Abū Umayyā, outlived all Muhammad's wives, and died	679	59

6. Umm Habiba, daughter of Abū Sufyān, died . . . 664	A.H. 44
7. Zainab, daughter of Ja-hash, widow of Zaid, Muhammad's slave, died . . . 641	20
8. Zainab, daughter of Khu-syma, died two months after the above . . . 641	20
9. Maimūna, daughter of Harith, died . . . 671	51
10. Jawygiā, daughter of Harith . . . 670-5	50-56
11. Safyā, daughter of Hai bin-Akhtab, died . . . 670	50
12. Maria Copti, or the Egyptian, of whom was born Ibrāhīm 637	16

By Khudyja, his first wife, he had six children, two sons and four daughters, viz. Qasim and 'Abdullah who is also called Tahir; and Zainab, Rukia, Umm Kulsum and Fātima; all of whom died before their father excepting Fātima, who was married to 'Alī and survived her father six months.

Muhammad I. (محمد اول) (or Mahomet I.) Sultān of the Turks, was the son of Bāyezid I. (Bajazet), whom he succeeded in A.D. 1413, A.H. 816, after an interregnum of eleven years, during which time his brother Sulaimān had taken possession of Brusa. He was a brave and politic monarch, conquered Cappadocia, Servia, Wallachia, and other provinces, and was at peace with Manuel Palaeologos, emperor of Constantinople, to whom he restored some of his provinces, and died at Adrianople of a bloody-flux A.D. 1422, A.H. 825, aged 47 years. He was succeeded by his son Murād II. (Amurath).

Muhammad II. (محمد ثاني) (Mahomet

II.) emperor of the Turks, surnamed the Great, succeeded his father Murād II. (Amurath) in February, A.D. 1451, Muharram, A.H. 855. His reign was begun with preparations for war; he besieged Constantinople, and conveyed over the land some of his galleys into the harbour, which the Greeks had shut up against the invaders. Constantinople was taken by him on Tuesday the 29th May, A.D. 1453, 20th Jumādā I. A.H. 857, and in her fall poured forth her fugitive philosophers and learned men to revive literature in the Western world. Muhammad by his victories, deserved the name of Great; and the appellation of Grand Seignor, which he assumed, has descended to his successors. After subduing two empires, twelve tributary kingdoms and two hundred towns, he was preparing for the subjugation of Italy, when a colic proved fatal to him, and he died on Thursday the 3rd May, A.D. 1481, 3rd Rabi' I. A.H. 886, after a reign of 31 lunar years. His death was the cause of universal rejoicings over the Christian world, whose religion he had sworn to exterminate for the tenets of Muhammad. He was of exceeding courage and strength, of a sharp wit, and very fortunate; but withal, he was faithless and cruel; and in his time occasioned the death of 80,000 Christians of both sexes. His son Bāyezid II. succeeded him.

Muhammad III. (محمد ثالث), emperor of the Turks, succeeded his father Murād III. in January, A.D. 1595, Jumādā I. A.H. 1003, to the throne of Constantinople. He began his reign by ordering nineteen of his brothers to be strangled, and ten of his father's wives to be drowned, whom he supposed to be with child. He made war against Rodolphus II. emperor of Germany, and invaded Hungary with an army of 200,000 men, but his progress was checked by Maximilian the emperor's brother, who would have obtained a decisive victory had not his troops abandoned themselves to pillage. Muhammad, obliged to retire from Hungary, buried himself in the indolence of his seraglio. He died of the plague, after a reign of 9 years, in January, A.D. 1604, Shābān, A.H. 1012, aged 59 years, and was succeeded by his son Ahmad I.

Muhammad IV. (محمد رابع), emperor of the Turks, was the son of Ibrāhīm, whom he succeeded on the throne of Constantinople in A.D. 1649, A.H. 1059. He pursued the war with the Venetians, and after reducing Candia, with the loss of 200,000 men, he invaded Poland. His arms proved victorious, but the disgrace was wiped off by the valour of Sobeski, king of Poland, who the next year routed his enemies at the battle of Choczim. He was deposed in A.D. 1687, A.H. 1098, and sent to prison, where he died in A.D. 1691, A.H. 1102. He was succeeded by his brother Sulaimān II.

of a Persian work on Jurisprudence called Asās ul-Islām, the Foundation of Muhammadanism, and of one called Fiḡha Sunnatf wa-Jamā'at.

Muhammad 'Adil Shah (محمد عادل)

(شاه), king of Bijāpūr, succeeded his father Ibrāhīm 'Adil Shāh II. in the year A.D. 1626, A.H. 1036. As the armies of the emperor of Delhi were daily extending their conquests in the Deccan, and he knew that should the country of Ahmadnagar be reduced his own would become the object of attack, he assisted Nizām Shāh against the imperial arms; and more than once suffered for his conduct, being obliged to purchase peace by large contributions. In the year A.D. 1634, A.H. 1044, the armies of the emperor Shāh Jahān invaded the Deccan on three quarters and laid waste the country of Bijāpūr without mercy. After the reduction of Daulatabad and other forts, with most part of the kingdom of Nizām Shāh, Muhammad 'Adil Shāh agreed to pay a considerable tribute to the emperor. He was the last king of Bijāpūr who struck coins in his own name. In the latter part of his reign his vassal Sewājī, the son of Sāhū Bhōsla, by stratagem and treachery obtained great power, and the foundation of the Bijāpūr monarchy became weakened. Muhammad died in November, A.D. 1656, Muharram, A.H. 1067, and was succeeded by his son 'Alī 'Adil Shāh II. His tomb at Bijāpūr, called "Gol Gumbaz," has a dome which measures 130 feet in diameter and which can be seen from 30 miles distance. A beautiful view is seen from the roof; the tomb being at the very end of the city, all the remarkable places present themselves to us, and the eye loses itself in the vast number of cupolas, domes, and minarets crowded together. Conspicuous among these are seen the fair proportions of the Rauza or tomb of Ibrāhīm 'Adil Shah.

Muhammad Afzal (محمد افضل), author of the work named Madīnat-ul-Aubia. It gives an account of the creation of the world, and a history of all the prophets prior to the birth of Muhammad.

Muhammad Afzal, Shaikh (محمد افضل شيخ), son of Shaikh 'Abdur

Rahīm, a pīrzada and native of Ghazipūr, who by the command of his murshid or spiritual guide, Mir Syaid Muhammad of Kalpi, fixed his residence at Allahābād, where he held a school and passed the remainder of his life in teaching Arabic and Persian, and making proselytes. He is the author of several works; was born on the 28th October, o.s. 1628, 10th Rab'ī I. A.H. 1038, and died aged 87 lunar years on Friday the 2nd January, o.s. 1713, 15th Zil-hijja, A.H. 1124. His descendants are still at Allahābād. He used "Afzal" for his poetical name.

Muhammad Akbar (محمد اكبر), the emperor Akbar is sometimes so called.

Muhammad Akbar (محمد اكبر), the youngest son of the emperor Aurangzeb. Alamgr. He rebelled against his father, went to Persia and died there in A.H. 1115.

Muhammad Akbar (محمد اكبر), son of Muhammad Gesū Darāz of Kulbarga. He is the author of a Persian work on Theology entitled Akād Akbari, containing the principles of the Muhammadan faith.

Durr al-Mukhtār, which is a commentary on the Tanwīr ul-Absār, containing a multitude of decisions.

Muhammad 'Alī (محمد علي), Viceroy of Egypt. Upwards of twelve centuries have passed since Egypt fell under the arms of the successful General of the Khalīf Omar; for a little over five centuries it remained in the possession of the successors of the conqueror; their power was put to an end by the Turks in A.D. 1171, and about eighty years afterwards the latter were in their turn expelled by the Mamlūks. The Mamlūks raised one of their own number to the throne, with the title of Sulṭān, and the dynasty lasted till 1517, when the last of the Mamlūk Sulṭāns was put to death by the Turkish Sulṭān Salam, who appointed a Pasha to the government assisted by a council of twenty-four Mamlūk beys or chiefs. This state of things lasted till 1798, when the French under Bonaparte landed in Egypt, and after destroying the Mamlūks were themselves attacked and defeated by the British in 1801. After the departure of the British, the country fell into anarchy till it was restored by Muhammad 'Alī, who by the massacre of the remaining Mamlūks made himself master of the situation.

The treaty of London in 1841 made the government of Egypt hereditary in the family of Muhammad 'Alī, and Ismā'il Pasha was his grandson. Egypt has now ceased to be a province of Turkey. Its ruler has had all the powers of an independent sovereign conceded to him by the Farmān, which dates from the 8th June, A.D. 1873. Muhammad was born in 1769, entered the Turkish army, and in 1799 was sent to Egypt at the head of a contingent to co-operate with the British against the French invaders. Here his fine military qualities rapidly developed themselves, and he at length became the Commander of the Albanian Corps d'armee in Egypt. He was soon afterwards involved in disputes with the Mamlūks, who practically had long ruled Egypt. He was soon after involved in disputes with the Mamlūks who had long practically ruled Egypt. They were at length entirely exterminated in 1820. He declared himself independent of the Porte in 1838, and died on the 2nd August, A.D. 1849. He was succeeded by his son or grandson Ismā'il Pasha.

Muhammad Amin (محمد امين), son of Daulat Muhammad al-Husaini al-Balkhi, is the author of the work called Anfa' ul-Akhhār, or Useful Chronicle; was in the service of Nawāb Sīpāhdar Khān, who receives a long and laudatory notice at the close of the work. He concluded it in A.D. 1628, A.H. 1036, and styled it Anfa' ul-Akhhār because the Hijri year A.H. 1036, in which it was completed, is represented by the letters composing those words. He resided chiefly at Ahmāduagar.

Muhammad Amin (محمد امين), author of the work entitled Asrar ul-Ma'ani, a collection of poems on the conquests of the emperor 'Alamgir, and a panegyric on several cities of the Deccan, which, previous to its being subdued by his arms, was esteemed the garden of India. He also wrote another work on Theology, entitled Haqiqat Ilm Ilahi.

Muhammad Amin Khan (محمد امين خان)

(خان), son of Muhammad Sa'id Mir Jumla. He served under the emperors Shāh Jahān and 'Alamgir, and was raised to the rank of 5000. He died on the 6th May, o.s. 1682, 8th Jumādā I. A.H. 1093, at Ahmādābād Gujrāt.

Muhammad Amin Khan (محمد امين خان)

(خان), entitled Ya'tmād-uddaula, was the son of Mir Bahā-uddīn, the brother of Nizām ul-Mulk 'Asaf Jāh, and came to India in the reign of 'Alamgir under whom he served for several years. He was the chief counsellor of the emperor Muhammad Shāh, and was appointed wazīr with the above title after the death of Sayyad Husuīn 'Ali Khān and the imprisonment of his brother Sayyad 'Abdullah Khān in A.D. 1720, A.H. 1133, but he had scarcely entered on his office when he was taken ill and died suddenly on the 17th January, o.s. 1721, 29th Rabi' I. A.H. 1133. After his death the office of prime minister was only filled by a temporary substitute, being ultimately designed for Nizām ul-Mulk 'Asaf Jāh, who was then in the Deccan.

Muhammad Atabak (محمد اتابک),

Fide Atābak Muhammad.

Muhammad 'Azim, (محمد اعظم), an historian who wrote a history of Kashmere in continuation of one written by Haidar Malik. It is amusing to observe, says Sir H. M. Elliot, the extravagant praises which this orthodox historian confers upon 'Alauḡir, whom he infinitely prefers to the noble and enlightened Akbar, of whom he complains that he "treated all his subjects alike!" not favouring the Muhammadans above the Hindūs. Was ever a nobler tribute paid to a ruler?

Muhammad Azim Khan (محمد اعظم),

(خان), ex-amīr of Kabūl. Fide Azim Khān.

Muhammad Bakhsh (محمد بخش), whose poetical name is Mahjūr, is the author of a work in Urdū called Naubat or the nine jewels, containing numerous stories, which he completed in the first year of Nawāb Ghāzi-uddin Haidar of Lucknow or A.H. 1230. He is also the author of two other works of the same description, one called Gulshan Naubahār and the other Chār Chaman.

Muhammad Bakhtyar Khilji (محمد), (بختيار خلجي) was appointed governor of Bengal by Sultān Qutb-uddin Aibak about the year A.D. 1203, A.H. 600. He made Lakhnau the seat of his government.

Muhammad Baqi, Khwaja (محمد),

(باقی خواجه), a Muhammadan saint who died on the 20th October, A.D. 1603, 25th Jumādā II. A.H. 1012, and is buried at Delhi close to the Qadam Rasūl. Nizām-uddin Ahmad has mentioned him in his work called Karamāt ul-Anbiā.

Muhammad Baqir (محمد باقر مجلسی), surnamed Majlisī (or the Ornament of Assemblies), the son of Muhammad Taqī, was Shāikh ul-Islām or high priest of the city of Isfahān, and one of the most celebrated Shia lawyers and learned scholars that Persia ever produced in general literature, law and theology. Such was the esteem in which he was held, that Shāh Sulaimān pressed upon him the hand of his daughter, which, strange to say, he declined. One of the of this celebrated man's works, called Haqq ul-Yeqīn, which he dedicated to Shāh Husain, extends to fourteen folio volumes. It contains a body of the theology of the Shias, and quotes and refutes the arguments opposed to the opinions advanced, illustrating the whole with evidences of the truth of the Shia doctrines and with numerous traditions. Besides this, he wrote on many other subjects. One of his works, treating exclusively of Hadis, is called Bahr ul-Anwār. He died A.D. 1698, A.H. 1110, aged 72 years.

Muhammad Baqir Damad, Mir

(محمد باقر داماد میر). His father Sayyad Mahmūd was styled Dāmād, because he was the son-in-law of Shāikh 'Alī 'Amilī. He was a native of Astrābād in Persia, Muhammad Bākīr his son was also styled Dāmād, because he married the daughter of Shāh 'Abbās I. king of Persia. He resided for many years in Isfahān, and is the author of several compilations, one of which is called Utkil Mubun. He died A.D. 1630, A.H. 1040.

[Vide Mir Bākīr Dāmād.]

Muhammad Baqir, Imam (محمد باقر),

the son of Imām Zain-ul-'Abidin, was the fifth Imām of the race of 'Alī. He was born on the 17th December, A.D. 676, 3rd Šafar, A.H. 57, and died in the month of May or June, A.D. 731, Rabī' I. A.H. 113. His corpse was carried to Madīna and interred at the Baqīa cemetery, in the vault wherein was deposited the bodies of his father and his father's uncle; it is placed under the same dome which covers the tomb of 'Abbās. Some authors have stated the day of his death to be 28th January, A.D. 733, which corresponds with the 7th Zil-hijja, A.H. 114.

Muhammad Beg Khan (محمد بیگ), (خان). Vide Hājī Muhammad Beg Khān.

Muhammad bin-'Abdul 'Azīz (محمد), surnamed Wajūdī, (بن عبد العزيز), author of the work in Turki called Shāhid wa-Ma'wī. He died in the year A.D. 1612, A.H. 1021.

Muhammad bin-'Abdur Rahman

(محمد بن عبد الرحمن), surnamed bin-'Alī Laila, was a very celebrated Musalmān doctor, and Qāzī of the city of Kāfa, where he was born A.D. 693, A.H. 74, and died in the year A.D. 765, A.H. 148.

Muhammad bin-Abu Bakr (محمد بن), (ابو بكر), i.e. the son of 'Abū Bakr, the first khalīf after Muhammad. He was made governor of Egypt by the khalīf 'Alī, but was taken prisoner soon after in a battle fought against Amrū ibn-ul-'As the deputy of Mu'awia I. who killed him, and, inclosing his dead body in the skin of an ass, burned it to ashes in A.D. 657, A.H. 38.

Muhammad bin-Ahmad (محمد بن),

(احمد هروی), of Herāt, author of the Tarjuma Fatūh 'Arabī, containing the conquests of the Arabian Tribes and the domestic quarrels of the Muhammadans, commencing from the Khilāfat of 'Abū Bakr A.D. 632, A.H. 11, and continued till the murder of Husain at the battle of Karbala in A.D. 680, A.H. 61. This work is translated from the Arabic, and was written in A.D. 1199, A.H. 596.

Muhammad bin-'Alī (محمد بن علی), author of the Arabic work entitled Abnāi ul-Janān, containing the Life of Muhammad and Memoirs of his companions.

Muhammad bin-'Amru at-Tamimi

(محمد بن عمرو التميمي), author of a biographical work on the lives of prominent Shias.

Muhammad bin-Husain (محمد بن),

(حسين), author of an Arabic work on Jurisprudence called Badāya-ul-Hidāya and of another in Arabic and Persia entitled Hayāt ul-Fawād. He died A.D. 1680, A.H. 1098.

Muhammad bin-Ibrahim Sadr Shirazi

(محمد بن ابراهيم), Qāzī ul-Quzat (صدر شیرازی قاضی القضاة), who is also called Mullā Sadr, is the author of the marginal notes on the Uthyyāt.

Muhammad bin-Idris, Imam (محمد),

(بن ادریس امام), the founder of the third orthodox sect, who is said to have been the first that reduced the science of Jurisprudence into a regular system, and made a discriminating collection of Traditions. He died A.D. 819, A.H. 204.

Muhammad bin-Isa (محمد بن عيسى), author of the Risāla Ahmudījam fee Asha'ar al-'Ajam.

Muhammad bin-Isa Tirmizi (محمد بن عيسى ترمذی), author of the work called Jāma' Tirmizī. It is also called Sunan Tirmizī and likewise A'-Nal. He was a pupil of al-Bukhārī, and died in A.D. 892, A.H. 279.

Muhammad bin - Ishaq - un - Nadim (محمد بن اسحاق النديم), commonly called Abū Ya'qūb al Warraq, author of the Qitāb ul-Fihrist, the most ancient record of Arabian literature, written A.D. 987, A.H. 377. This work, though mentioned by Hājī Khalifa, had hitherto escaped the industry of European explorers, but a portion of it (four volumes) has been found in the Royal Library at Berlin, and the remainder in Herr von Purgstall's collection. By a passage in the Fihrist, that learned gentleman has shown that the Thousand and One Nights (or Arabian Nights) had a Persian origin. In the preface to his book, the author says that the first of the composed tales and apologies were the kings of the first dynasty of the Persians; then those of the Arsacides, the third of the four ancient dynasties of Persia; these tales were augmented and amplified by the Sasanides. The Arabs, he then proceeds to say, translated them into their tongue, composed others like them. The first book of this kind was the Hazār Afsāna, or Thousand Tales, the subject of which the writer mentions, mentioning Shahrazāda and her tales as the first of the females who practise the art of conversation on the king. "It is said," says the author, "that this book was composed by Humāe, the daughter of the king." The truth is, that the first who told these tales told him at night, was Alexander the Great, in order that he might keep awake and be upon his guard. The kings who came after him made use, for the same purpose, of the Thousand Tales, which fill up a thousand nights, and two hundred conversations besides, in the light of the moon, which were related in a number of nights.

Muhammad bin-Jarir Tabari (محمد بن جرير طبري), author of several works. He died in A.D. 941, A.H. 330.

Muhammad bin-Khawand (محمد بن خاوند). Vide Khāwand Shāh.

Muhammad bin-Mahmud (محمد بن محمود الاستروشي), commonly called Al-Isturūshī, author of the Fuṣūl al-Isturūshī, a work principally restricted to decision, respecting mercantile transactions. He died in A.D. 1227, A.H. 625.

Muhammad bin-Murtaza (محمد بن مرتضى محسن), surnamed Muhsan, author of a Shia law-book called the Mufatih, on which a commentary was written by his nephew, who was of the same name, but surnamed Hādī.

Muhammad bin - Musa (محمد بن موسى), of Khwārizm, author of a work on Algebra called Aljabr wal-Muqābala. This work was translated into English by Frederic Rosen.

Muhammad bin - Qasim (محمد بن قاسم) was a cousin of the khalif Walid I. and son-in-law of Hājāj bin Yūsaf Saqafi. By the command of the khalif in the year A.D. 711, A.H. 92, he marched with a large army to Sindh, and having defeated and killed the Rāja of that country took possession of it on Thursday the 23rd June, A.D. 712, 10th Ramazān, A.H. 93. From amongst the prisoners captured in the fort of Alor, two daughters of the Rāja were sent to Damascus, and the khalif sent them to his harem, consigning them to the care of his people until their grief should be assuaged. After two months, they were brought to the presence of the khalif; when they raised the veils from their faces the khalif was smitten with their beauty, and asked their names; one was called Gīrpāfīce, the other Sūrajdeo. The khalif ordered one to his own bed; she said, "O my Lord, I am not fit for the king's service, we have both for three days been with Bin-Qāsim, who after dishonouring us sent us here." The king was highly incensed, and directed that his servants should seize Bin-Qāsim, sew him up in a cow-hide, and send him to Syria. When Bin-Qāsim received this order, he directed the messengers to do as they were directed. They obeyed the order, covered Bin-Qāsim with a raw cow-hide; after enduring the torture for three days he died. They then put his body into a box, and conveyed it to the khalif, who, opening it in the presence of the two women, said, "Behold how absolute is my power, and how I treat such servants as Bin-Qāsim." The woman replied, "O king, just men ought not to be precipitate in great affairs, or be too hasty to act, either upon the representation of friends or foes." The khalif asked their meaning; they said, "We made this accusation against Bin-Qāsim because of the hatred we bore him, seeing that he slew our father, and through him we lost all our property and possessions, and became exiles from our own country; but Bin-Qāsim was like a father and brother to us, he looked not on us for any bad purpose, but when our object was revenge for the blood of our father, we accused him of this treachery; this end attained, do with us as you will." The Khalif on hearing this suffered great remorse; he ordered the two women to be tied to horses, and dragged to death, and they buried Bin-Qāsim in the burial place at Damascus.

Muhammad bin - Qawam - uddin (محمد بن قوام الدين), author of a Persian Dictionary called Bahr-ul-Fazāel, the Sea of Excellence.

Muhammad bin-Tahir II. (محمد بن طاهر ثانی) succeeded his father in the government of Khurāsān and was the last of the race of Tāhirians. He was taken prisoner in a battle about the year A.D. 874, A.H. 260, by Ya'qūb bin-Lais, who took possession of Khurāsān. Thus ended the race of the Tāhirians in Khurāsān, who governed that province for upwards of 54 lunar years.

Muhammad bin-Tunish al-Bukhari (محمد بن تنيش البخاری), author of the work called ʿAbdullah-nāma, containing the history of the Uzbek Tartars originally from Dasht Qapchāq, on the northern shores of the Caspian Sea. In A.D. 1194, they invaded Transoxiana under Shāh Beg Khān; and having driven out the descendants of Taimūr, retained possession of that country. The prince, whose memoirs are the chief subject of this work, was ʿAbdullah Khān; he was a contemporary of the renowned Akbar, emperor of Hindūstān, with whom he kept up constant correspondence and interchange of ambassadors, and died A.D. 1595, A.H. 1005. This book was dedicated to Nizām-uddīn Kōkaltash.

Muhammad bin-Ya'qub (محمد بن يعقوب), author of the work called Qāmūs.
[Vide Firozabādi.]

Muhammad bin Ya'qub al-Kalini (محمد بن يعقوب الكليني), who is called the Raīs ul-Muhaddithīn, or chief of the traditionists, is the author of the Jam'ul-Kāfi, which is reckoned one of the books of the Qutub Arba'. It is of vast extent, comprising no less than thirty books; and its author is said to have been employed twenty years in its composition. He also wrote several other works of less note, and died at Baghdād in A.D. 939, A.H. 328.

Muhammad bin - Yusaf (محمد بن يوسف), a physician of Herāt and author of an Arabic Dictionary called Bahr-ul-Jawāhir, or the Sea of Jewels, said to be an Encyclopedia or Dictionary of Arts and Sciences.

Muhammad bin-Yusaf (محمد بن يوسف), of Herāt, author of the Tārīkh Hind. This work no doubt (says Sir H. M. Elliot) is the same as Risālah Ajāeb wa-Gharīb-in-Hindūstān, since the author of that treatise also bears the name of Muhammad Yūsaf Hirwī. This author appears to have been contemporary with, and to have conversed with, Khwāja Hasan of Dehli, who was a disciple of Nizām-uddīn Auliā, who died in A.D. 1325.

Muhammad Bukhari, Sayyad (محمد بخاری), father of Sayyad Ahmad

Jalāl Bukharī. He had many disciples in the time of Shāh Juhān. Close by the western gate of the Rauza of Tajganj is his shrine. He died in the year A.H. 1045.

Muhammad Damishqi (محمد دمشقي),

Muhammad Gesu Daraz, Sayyad

(محمد گیسو داراز سید), of Kulbarga in Daulatābād, a famous Muhammadan saint, who was a disciple of Shaikh Nasir-uddīn Chirāgh, Dehli. He was born at Dehli on the 30th July, A.D. 1321, 4th Rajab, A.H. 721. His proper name is Sudar-uddīn Muhammad Husainī, but he was commonly called Muhammad Geisū Darāz, on account of his having long ringlets. He lived at Kulbarga in the reign of the Bahmanī Sultāns, and had the address to engage Prince Ahmad Shāh to become his disciple, and build him a fine house and a superb convent. When this prince ascended the throne, in A.D. 1422, A.H. 825, the credit of the saint became so great, that from the lord to the artificer all made it their glory to follow his instructions; so that his tomb became a pilgrimage to all sects. He died in the Deccan in the beginning of the reign of Ahmad Shāh in A.D. 1422, and is buried at Hasanābād, commonly called Kulbarga. His tomb is a magnificent edifice covered with a dome, in the middle of an extensive court. During the reigns of the Deccan Sultāns, great sums of money were occasionally offered to his descendants who reposed near the saint, in vows and presents, and many villages were assigned by the kings to defray the expenses of the tomb. He is said to be the author of several works, among which are the Adab ul-Murid, the Wajūd ul-'Ashiqin, containing the whole duty of a Sūfī disciple, etc., and also of a book of Fables in Persian entitled Asmār ul-Asār. His son, named Muhammad Akbar, is the author of the Aqā'id Akbarī, containing the principles of the Muhammadan faith.

Muhammad Ghaus Jilani, Hazrat

Shaikh (محمد غوث جیلانی حضرت)

(شيخ), a celebrated Muhammadan

saint whose tomb is at Uchcha of the Jilānis in Multān, and round whose shrine this town was built and after whom it was named. He was a descendant of Shaikh 'Abdul Kādir Jilānī Baghdādī, and came to Uchcha about the year A.D. 1394. The Dāudputtras have continued to be his murīd or disciples, and the murīd of his successors from the time of their first leaving Shikārpūr.

Muhammad (Ghaus Khān).

Muhammad Ghaus, Shaikh (محمد)

(غوث شيخ گوالیری), of Gwāliar. His proper name is Hajī 'Hamīd-uddīn, styled Ghaus-ul-'Alam, one of the greatest saints of India, who is said to have resided for twelve years in the practice of asceticism in the jungle which lies at the foot of the Chunār hills, consuming the leaves and fruits of the forest as his sole food; and so celebrated was he for the fulfilment of his blessings and predictions, that even powerful kings used to come and visit him and pay their respects. He afterwards went to Gwāliar, where he engaged himself in the pursuits of his holy calling and in making proselytes; and managed to content himself with the proceeds of a jāgīr, which yielded a crore of tangas. He was the murshid or master of Shaikh Wajih-uddīn 'Alw of Gujrat, and died on the 14th September, o.s. 1662, 14th Muharram, A.H. 970. The chronogram of the year of his death is "Shaikh Auliabad," i.e. Shaikh was a saint. He is the author of several works, among which are the Jawāhir ul-Khamsa, and another entitled Gulzār Abrār containing the memoirs of all the Sāfī Shaikhs of India with their places of burial and many other particulars. His brother Shaikh Phul, who served under the emperor Humāyūn, was killed at Agrā, A.D. 1537, A.H. 945, by the adherents of Mirzā Hāndāl, who had rebelled against his brother. His tomb is on a hill near the fort of Bayāna. They were the descendants of Klawja Farīd-uddīn Muhammad 'Attār in the seventh generation. Their grandfather's name was Mo'in-uddīn (Qattā), whose tomb is in Jaunpūr, and father's name Kiyam-uddīn. He lies buried in Zahūrābād, commonly called Kunbra, in Ghazipūr. A small work entitled Munāṣīb Ghausia, containing the adventures of Muhammad (Ghaus), was written by Sayyad Fazl-ullah in the year Hijri 941, 24 years before the death of the saint.

Muhammad Ghaus Zarrin (محمد)

(غوث زرین), of Bijnaur. He lived in the time of Nawāb 'Asaf-uddaula of Lucknow, and is the author of a Chahār Darwesh in Persian.

Muhammad Ghayas- uddin (محمد)

(غیاث الدین), the son of Jalāl-uddīn, the son of Shuraf-uddīn, author of the Persian Dictionary entitled Ghayās ul-Lughāt, which he completed after fourteen years' labour in the year A.D. 1826, A.H. 1242, also of the Miftāh ul-Kunūz, Sharāh Sikandar-nāma, Nashā Bugh o-Bahār, and several poems and Kusūdas, etc. He was an inhabitant of Mustatābād, commonly called Rāmpūr in the Pergumāl of Shāhābād, Lucknow.

Muhammad Hakim, Mirza (محمد)

(حکیم میرزا), son of the emperor Humāyūn and half-brother of Akbar, was born at Kabul on the 18th April, A.D. 1554, 15th Jumādā I. A.H. 961. In the reign of his brother, the emperor Akbar, he had the Government of Kābul, of which he remained during his life in undisturbed possession. He had twice invaded the Panjāb; once in A.D.

1566, A.H. 974, and the second time in February A.D. 1581, Muḥarram, A.H. 989, when the emperor found it necessary to proceed himself with an army, and Mirza Muḥammad Hakīm was obliged to retreat before him. He died at Kābul in the 30th year of the emperor Akbar, on the 26th July, O.S. 1585, 16th Amardād Ilahī, corresponding with 16th Sha'bān, A.H. 993, aged 32 lunar years. After his death Rāja Bhagwān Dās and his son Mān Singh were sent to Kābul by the emperor to take charge of that province. His mother's name was Māh Chūchak Begam.

Muhammad Hanif (محمد حنيف), also called Muhammad bin-'Alī, was the third son of 'Alī, and because he was not descended from his wife Fatima, as Husain and Husain were, is not reckoned amongst the Imāma, notwithstanding there were many who after Husain's death secretly acknowledged him to be the lawful Khalīf or Imām. He died in the year A.D. 700, A.H. 81.

Muhammad Husain, Shaikh (محمد حسين شايخ)

(حسين شايخ شهرت), whose poetical name is Shuhrat, was an excellent poet and a physician. He was a native of Arabia, but completed his studies at Shirāz and came to India, where he was employed by the prince 'Azīm Shāh as a physician. In the reign of Farrukh-siyar the title of Hakīm-ul-Mumalīk was conferred on him. He went on a pilgrimage to Mecca in the time of the emperor Muḥammad Shāh, and after his return to India he died in the month of April, A.D. 1737, Zil-hijja, A.H. 1149, at Dehli. He is the author of a Diwān consisting of 5000 verses.

Muhammad Ibn-Alahmar (محمد ابن الاحمر)

(الاحمر), or more properly Ibn al-

Ahmar, one of the Moorish kings of Granada in Spain and founder of the Alhambra, a celebrated fortress or palace which was regarded by the Moors of Granada as a miracle of art, and had a tradition that the king who founded it dealt in magic, or at least was deeply versed in alchemy, by means of which he procured the immense sums of gold expended in its erection. The name of this monarch, as inscribed on the walls of some of the apartments of the Alhambra, was Abū 'Abdullah, but is commonly known in Moorish history as Muḥammad Ibn-Alahmar. He was born in Arjona in A.D. 1195, A.H. 591, of the noble family of the Bani Nasar; when he arrived at manly years, he was appointed Alcayde or governor of Arjona and Jaen, and gained great popularity by his benignity and justice. Some years afterwards, on the death of Ibn-Hūd, when the Moorish power of Spain was broken into factions, many places declared for Muḥammad Ibn-Alahmar; he seized upon the occasion, made a circuit through the country, and was everywhere received with acclamation. It was in the year A.D. 1238 that he entered Granada amidst the enthusiastic shouts of the multitude. He was proclaimed king with every demonstration of joy, and soon became the head of the Moslems in Spain, being the first of the illustrious line of Bani Nasar that had sat upon the throne. He caused the mines of gold and silver, and other metals found in the mountainous regions of his dominions, to be diligently worked, and was the first king of Granada who struck money of gold and silver with his name, taking great care that it should be skillfully executed. It was about this time, towards the middle of the 13th century, that he commenced the splendid palace of the Alhambra. He retained his faculties and vigour to an advanced age. In his 79th year, he took the field on horseback, accompanied by the flower of his chivalry, to resist an invasion of his territories, but was suddenly struck with illness, and in a few hours he died vomiting blood and in violent convulsions.

Muhammad Ishaq (محمد إسحاق), author of the work called Siar ul-Nabī wa-'Asār Sahāba.

Muhammad Isma'il Bukhari (محمد إسماعيل البخاري), who is also called Abī 'Abdullah bin-Isma'il ul-Bukhārī, is the author of the Sahih ul-Bukhārī, a book held in the highest estimation, and considered, both in spiritual and temporary matters, as next in authority to the Qurān. It contains 9,880 traditions, selected from 167,000, recording not only all the revelations, inspirations, actions, and sayings of Muhammad, but also explaining many of the difficult passages of the Qurān. It relates besides many miracles and anecdotes of the ancient prophets and other inspired persons. He was born in the year A.D. 810, A.H. 194, and died in the month of June, A.D. 870, Rajab, A.H. 266. He is commonly called Al-Bukhārī, which see.

Muhammad Isma'il, Moulwi (محمد إسماعيل مولوي), author of the Sirāt

ul-Mustaqim or The True Path, containing an account of the peculiar tenets held by the followers of Sayyad Ahmad the modern Muhammadan zealot and reformer, with whose name we have recently become familiar. This work is one of the most important of several treatises which have been composed by that sect. The main object of the author in composing it was, in the first instance, probably to shew his own learning; in the next, to justify the claims of Sayyad Ahmad

(of whom he was a constant and confidential adherent) as a devotee, gifted with a surpassing degree of religious capacity and illumination. It makes reference especially, in its explanations and allusions, to the peculiar divisions which prevail in India, among those who aspire to the honours of religious initiation. These are generally numbered as the followers of one or other, of three venerated Pirs, each of whom has given a name to a distinct school or sect; the first, the "Tariqa-i-Qādiria," which traces its origin to 'Abdul Qādir Jilāni. Another, the "Tariqa-i-Chishtia," so called from its founder Khwāja Mo'in-uddin Chishtī, whose tomb is at Ajmer; the third, the "Tariqa-i-Naqshbandia, derived from a Khwāja Bahā-uddin Naqshband, a native of Bukhāra. It was one of the peculiar pretensions of Sayyid Ahmad, that he held himself privileged to be the founder of a school of his own, to which he gave the name of the "Tariqa-i-Muhammadia." His book was written some time about the year A.D. 1822, and it is to be remarked, as a new feature in the history of efforts for the propagation of Muhammadanism, or for the reform of its corruptions, how extensively the emissaries of this sect have availed themselves of the Press to disseminate their tenets. The Sirāt ul-Mustaqim, the Taqwīat ul-Iman, the Hidā'et ul-Mominin, and a little tract attached to it, named the Māzih ul-Kabir wa'l Bid'at, and two other tracts, entitled the Nasihat ul-Muslūmin, and Tamhik ul-Ghāfilin, have all been printed at private presses in Calcutta or at Hugli.

Muhammad Jani (محمد جاني), author of the work called Asar Ahmadi, a minute history of Muhammad and the twelve 'Imāns, with various anecdotes respecting them.

Muhammad Jogi Mirza (محمد جوگي), son of Shāhrukh Mirzā, the son of Amīr Taimūr. He died A.D. 1444, A.H. 848, two years before his father, aged 43 lunar years.

Muhammad Karīm (محمد كريم), the son of prince Azīn-ush-Shān, the son of the emperor Bahādur Shāh. He was murdered by order of the emperor Juhāndār Shāh his uncle, in April, A.D. 1712, A.H. 1124.

Muhammad Kazim, Mirza (محمد كاظم مرزا), the son and successor of Mirzā Muhammad Amīn, private Munshī or Secretary to 'Alamgir, and author of the history called 'Alamgir-nāma. It is a history of the first ten years of the reign of the emperor 'Alamgir, to whom it was dedicated in the 32nd year of his reign, A.D. 1689, A.H. 1100. When it was presented to him, he forbade its being continued; and prohibited all other historians or authors from relating the events of his life, preferring (says his panegyrist) the cultivation of inward piety to the ostentatious display of his actions. This monarch, whose reign is admired by the Muhammadans and detested by the Hindūs, after having imprisoned his father, mounted the throne of Dehli in A.D. 1658, A.H. 1068. At this period the glory of the house of Bābar may be said to have arrived at its zenith. The empire extended from the north-west mountains of Qābul to the southern limits of Chittagong; and the kings of Golkāṇḍa and Bijāpūr paid tribute. He is also the author of a Shāh-nāma, a Roz-nāma, or Journal, and another work entitled Akhbār Hasania.

Muhammad Khalil-ullah Khan

(محمد خليل الله خان), surnamed Ashk, is author of a history of Amīr Hamzā, uncle of Muhammad, which he professes to have drawn from a compilation made by order of Sultān Mahmūd, the Ghaznavide; and observes, "What renders this present history at all times interesting is this: that it informs us of the customs of various nations, and that it instructs us in the art of doing battle, and of taking towns and kingdoms. Accordingly Mahmūd, to avoid the necessity of counsel from any one, had portions of it read to him as a daily observance."

Muhammad Khan Bangash, Nawāb

(محمد خان بنگش), styled Ghazanfar Jang, a Rohela chief of the tribe of Bangash. He founded the city of Farrukhābād in the name of his patron the emperor Farrukhsiyar. In the reign of Muhammad Shāh, A.D. 1730, A.H. 1143, he was appointed governor of Mālwa, but unable to cope with the Mahrattas on account of their repeated incursions, he was removed in A.D. 1732, A.H. 1145, and appointed governor of Allahābād. Muhammad Khān having planned the reduction of the Bundelas, of whom Rājā Chaturśāl was chief, entered that country in A.D. 1733, A.H. 1146, with an army, and took several places; but as he was little acquainted with the roads, Chaturśāl, with the assistance of Peshwā Rājī Rāo, surrounded him suddenly with an army. The nawāb, unable to combat a superior force, took refuge in the fortress of Jaitgarh, where he was closely blockaded by the enemy for some time, when his son Qāem Jang, having collected an army of the Afghāns, marched to Jaitgarh and escorted his father in safety to Allahābād. The imperial ministers, making a pretence of Muhammad Khān's ill-success, removed him from the Subādārī. He died in the month of June, A.D. 1743, Jumāda I. A.H. 1156, and was succeeded in his jāgīr by his son Qāem Jang, commonly called Qāem Khān.

The following is a list of the Nawābs of Farrukhābād.

- Muhammad Khān, Bangash.
- Qāem Jang, son of ditto.
- Ahmad Khān, brother of Qāem Jang.
- Muzaffar Jang, son of Ahmad Khān.
- Tafazzul Husain Khān.

Muhammad Khan, Mir (محمد خان)

(میر), commonly called Khān Kalān, was the eldest brother of Shams-uddin Muhammad Anka Khān. He served under the emperors Humāyūn and Akbar, and was made governor of the Panjāb by the latter, which office he held for several years, and died A.D. 1575, A.H. 983. He was an excellent poet, and has left a Diwān in Persian, and another in the Turkish language. He was native of Ghazni, and therefore chose for his poetical name Ghaznavi. There is a work on Sūfism entitled Burhān ul-Inān, either written by him or some other Muhammad Khān.

Muhammad Khan Shaibani (محمد)

(جان شیبانی). Vide Shāhī Beg Khān Uzbek.

Muhammad Khan, Sultan (محمد)

(خان سلطان), also called Muhammad Qān and Khān Shahīd, was the eldest son of Sultān Ghayās-uddin Balban, king of Dehli, who had appointed him viceroy of all the frontier provinces, viz. Multān, Lāhore, Debalpur and other districts. This prince was blest with a bright and comprehensive genius, taking great delight in learning and the company of learned men. He, with his own hand, made a choice collection of the beauties of poetry, selected from the most famous in that art. The work consisted of 20,000 couplets, and was esteemed the criterion of taste. Among the learned men in the prince's court, Amīr Khusrō and Khwāja Hasan bore the first rank in genius and in his esteem. The throne of Persia was at this time filled by Arghūn Khān, the son of Abqā Khān, and grandson of Halakū Khān. Timur Khān Chungezi, who was then up Amīr of mighty renown in the empire of the race of Chingiz Khān, and governed Herāt, Qandahār and other districts, invaded Hindūstān with 20,000 chosen horse. Having ravaged all the villages about Debalpur and Lāhore, he turned towards Multān. The prince Muhammad Sultān, hearing of his designs, hastened to the banks of the river of Lāhore, where both armies drew up in order of battle, and engaged with great fury. The prince, unfortunately, received a fatal arrow in his breast, by which he fell to the ground, and in a few minutes expired. Very few of the unfortunate Muhammad's party escaped from this conflict. Among the fortunate few was Amīr Khusrō, the poet, who relates this event at large in his book called Khizir Khānī. This event took place on Friday the 9th of March, A.D. 1285, 30th Zil-hijja, A.H. 683.

Muhammad Khuda Banda, Sultan

(محمد خدا بنده), surnamed Aljailū, a descendant of Changēz Khān, succeeded his brother Sultān Ghāzān Khān, the son of Arghān Khān, to the throne of Persia in May, A.D. 1304; Shawwāl, A.H. 703. He is said to have been a just prince, and was the first monarch of Persia who proclaimed himself of the sect of 'Alī. He gave a public proof of his attachment to this sect, by causing the names of the twelve Imāms to be engraven on all the money which he coined. He built the celebrated city of Sultāniā in 'Azarbejān or Media, which he made the capital of his dominions, and where he afterwards was buried. The dome over his tomb is fifty-one feet in diameter and is covered with glazed tiles. He died on the 17th December, A.D. 1316, 1st Shawwāl, A.H. 716, after a reign of 13 lunar years, and was succeeded by his son Sultān Abū Sa'īd Bahādūr Khān.

Muhammad Khuda Banda, Sultan

(محمد خدا بنده), surnamed Sultān Sikandar Shāh, was the eldest son of Shāh Tahmāsp I.; was born in the year A.D. 1531, A.H. 938, and succeeded to the throne of Persia on the death of his brother Shāh Ismā'il II. in November, A.D. 1577, A.H. 985. The fortunes of this monarch, who from a natural weakness in his eyes, was incapable of rule, had been for many years upheld by the character of his eldest son, Hamza Mirzā, and his power terminated at the death of that prince, who fell under the blow of an assassin in his own private apartments on the 24th November, A.D. 1586, 22nd Zil-hijja, A.H. 994. The chiefs of Khurāsān immediately proclaimed 'Abbās, the king's second son, as king of Persia, and in the year A.D. 1588, A.H. 996, marched with him to Qazwīn, the capital of the empire, which they took possession of without opposition, and the unfortunate Muhammad was deserted by every inhabitant of Qazwīn and by his own army.

Muhammad Khusrō Khan (محمد خسرو خان)

(خسرو خان), author of a medical work called Makhzan ul-Adwīa.

Muhammad Lad (محمد لاد), author of the Dictionary called Muruyyad ul-Fuzlā.

Muhammad Lari, Mulla (محمد لاری), author of a work which goes after his name, viz. Tāliq Mullā Muhammad Lari.

the son of Shaikh Ahmad Sarhindi, was born in the year A.D. 1598, A.H. 1007, and died in A.D. 1668, A.H. 1079, aged 72 lunar years.

Muhammad Ma'sum Nami, Amir

(محمد معصوم نامی امیر), of Bakkar, was one of the nobles of the court of Akbar. He wrote five Masnawis or Poems, containing 10,000 verses; one is in the metre of Haft Paikar, one in the measure of the Sikandar-nāma, one called Parī Sūrat is in the measure of Latli and Majnūn, one called Hum wa-Nāz is in the metre of Yūsuf Zalekhā, and one in the measure of the Makhzan ul-Ashrār. He also wrote two Diwāns of Ghazals and two Sāki-nūmas. He once paid a visit to Shāh 'Abbās, king of Persia, accompanied with no less than one thousand followers.

Muhammad Mir, Sayyad (محمد میر).

His proper name is Kamāl-uddīn Haidar. He was a native of Lucknow, and translated the History of Russia from English into Urdū for the Agra School Book Society, in the year A.D. 1839.

Muhammad Mirza (محمد میرزا), son of Mīrān-shāh and grandson of Amīr Taimūr, was a pious prince, and not being ambitious he remained, with his brother Mirzā Khalīl-ullāh ruler of Samargand; and when that country was taken by Mirzā Shāhrukh his uncle, and made over to his own son Mirzā Ulugh Beg in A.D. 1408, A.H. 811, he passed the remainder of his life with the latter and died about the year A.D. 1441, A.H. 845, recommending his son Mirzā Abū Sa'īd to him.

Muhammad Muhsin (محمد محسن), the rebel Tuh-sildār of Pūllānī who joined the mutineers in the year A.D. 1857, and was, together with 'Imdād 'Alī the rebel Deputy Collector, hanged at Banda on the 24th April, A.D. 1858.

Muhammad Muzaffar (محمد مظفر), surnamed Mubārīz-uddīn, was the founder of the dynasty of Muzaffarians in Fars. He held a high station at the court of Sultān Abū Sa'īd Khān, king of Persia; but after his death, which happened in A.D. 1335, when trouble and confusion began to reign on all sides, he retired to Yazd and took possession of that country. In the year A.D. 1363, A.H. 754, he took Shirāz from Shāh Shaikh Abū Is-hāq, and having seized him after some time put him to death, and became master of Fars. His son Shāh Shujāa' rebelled against him in A.D. 1369, A.H. 760, deprived him of his sight and ascended the throne at Shirāz. Muhammad Muzaffar died in the year A.D. 1364, A.H. 765. This dynasty governed Fars 77 years, during which seven princes enjoyed power, viz.:

1. Mubāriz-uddīn Muhammad Muzaffar or Muzaffar-uddīn.
2. Shāh Shujāa', son of ditto.
3. Shāh Mahmūd, his brother.
4. Sultān Ahmad.
5. Shāh Mansūr, son of Muzaffar, in whose time Shirāz was taken by Amīr Taimūr.
6. Shāh Abia.
7. Shāh Zain-ul 'Abidīn, the son of Shāh Shujāa'.

The last two only reigned a few months.

Muhammad Quli Khan (محمد قلی خان), governor of Allahābād, was the son of Mirzā Muhsin, the brother of Nawāb Safdar Jang of Aūdḥ. In the year A.D. 1759, A.H. 1172, he, under the royal standard of the prince 'Alī Gohar (afterwards Shāh 'Alam), who had procured from his father, 'Alamgir II. grants of Bengal, Behār and Urysa, marched towards Patna, where, on his arrival, the place was besieged and the siege was carried on for some days with briskness; but he was obliged to raise the siege and retreat on receiving intelligence that Shujāa'-uddaula (who was his first cousin and the son of Safdar Jang) had treacherously seized Allahābād and possessed himself of that province. On his arrival at Allahābād in A.D. 1761, A.H. 1174, he was seized and imprisoned, and ultimately put to death in the fort of Jalālābād by order of Shujāa'-uddaula, who was jealous of his ambitious views in assisting the prince in the invasion of Bengal, and regarded Allahābād as his right, it having been given only in deputation by his father, Safdar Jang, to Muhammad Quli Khān, who had refused to surrender it to the son.

contains extracts from all the poets of any celebrity, with memoirs of the authors; and ought to have been named the Beauties of Poetry, being of the nature of the English compilation of Select Extracts. It was commenced by the author in A.D. 1731, A.H. 1144, and finished by Ja'far Nasir in A.D. 1742, A.H. 1155.

Muhammad Salah, Shaikh (محمد صالح شيخ), Kambōh, brother to Shaikh Ināyet-ullah, is the author of the book called Behar Chaman.

Muhammad Salah, Shaikh (محمد صالح شيخ), author of the Bahār Sakhun and the Tārīkh Shāhjahānī, also of a poem called Arām Jan, which he completed in A.D. 1646, A.H. 1056.

Muhammad Saqi (محمد ساقی). Vide Mustai'd Khān.

Muhammad Sarbadal (محمد سربدال) was the chief of a kind of vagabonds called Sarbadāls, who had made themselves master of the city of Sabzwūr and of some others in Khurāsān. This personage was also called Sayyid Muhammad, and although he was head of a gang of highwaymen or robbers, yet he was much esteemed for his probity.

Muhammad Shafia' (محمد شفيع), of Dehlī, author of the work called Mu'at ul-Wā'idāt, or Mirror of Occurrences, a compendious history of the Mughal empire, from the death of Akbar to the invasion of Nādir Shāh. He undertook this work at the request of a nobleman in the reign of Muhammad Shāh.

Muhammad Shah (محمد شاه), the son of prince Farīd-uddin, the son of Khizir Khān, king of Dehlī. He was placed on the throne after the assassination of his uncle Mubārīk Shāh in April, A.D. 1434, Ramazān, A.H. 837. He reigned 12 lunar years and died on the 20th January, A.D. 1446, 22nd Shawwāl, A.H. 849. He was succeeded by his son Sultān 'Alā-uddin.

Muhammad Shah (محمد شاه), the son of Ahmad Shāh, succeeded his father to the throne of Gujrāt in July, A.D. 1443, Rabi' I. A.H. 847. He reigned eight lunar years 9 months and 4 days, and was poisoned by his wife on the 12th February, A.D. 1451, 10th Muharram, A.H. 855. He was succeeded by his son Qutb-Shāh also called Qutb-uddin.

Muhammad Shāh (محمد شاه), the son of Hoshang Shāh, ascended the throne of Mālwa after the death of his father on the 17th July, A.D. 1434, 9th Zil-hijja, A.H. 837. He reigned about nine months and was poisoned by Muhammad Khān (the son of Malik Mughis his prime minister), who ascended the throne under the title of Mahmūd Shāh Khilji in May, A.D. 1485.

Muhammad Shāh (محمد شاه), emperor of Delhi, surnamed Roshan Akhtar or the Brilliant Star, was the son of the prince Jahān Shāh, one of the three brothers who perished in disputing the crown with their eldest brother Jahāndār Shāh, the son of Bahādur Shāh. He was born on Friday the 7th August, o.s. 1702, 24th Rabi' I. A.H. 1114, and crowned by the two Sayyads after the death of Rafi-uddaula, on the 29th September, A.D. 1719, 25th Zi-Qa'da, A.H. 1131. On his accession it was determined that the names of his two predecessors, viz. Rafi-uddarjāt and Rafi-uddaula, who reigned about three months each, should be struck out of the list of kings, and that his reign should commence from the death of the emperor Farrukh-siyar. Muhammad Shāh reigned 30 lunar years 6 months and 10 days, and died one month after the battle of Sarhind, which his son fought against Ahmad Shāh Abdālī. His death took place on Thursday the 16th April, A.D. 1748, 27th Rabi' II. A.H. 1161, at the age of 47 lunar years 1 month and 3 days. He was buried in the court before the mausoleum of Nizām-uddin Aulia at Delhi, and was succeeded by his son Ahmad Shāh. This emperor may be termed the last of the race of Amīr Taimūr who reigned in Delhi and enjoyed any power. The few princes of that sovereign's family who were raised to the throne after Muhammad Shāh were mere pageants, whom the nobles of the court elevated or cast down as it suited the purposes of their ambitions.

Muhammad Shāh (محمد شاه), king of Persia, was the son of 'Abbās Mirzā, and grandson of Fathu 'Alī Shāh, whom he succeeded to the throne of Persia in A.D. 1834, and died in A.D. 1847.

Muhammad Shāh (محمد شاه), ruler of Badakhshān. He was placed in that high position by Amīr Sher 'Alī of Qābul, to whom he was bound to pay tribute, the amount of which in A.D. 1870 was £8,100 and 500 horses. His predecessor was the intimate friend of 'Abdul Rahmān Khān, the pretender to the Afghān throne, who was opposed by Sher 'Alī in A.D. 1868, but afterwards became Amīr.

Muhammad Shāh 'Adil or 'Adli (محمد شاه عادل), an Afghān of the tribe of Sūr, whose original name was Mubāriz Khān, was the son of Nizām Khān Sūr, the brother of Sher Shāh, and brother-in-law of Salīm Shāh, after whose death in A.D. 1554, A.H. 961, having murdered his son Firroz, a boy of twelve years of age who had been raised to the throne, he assumed royal dignity with the title of Muhammad Shāh 'Adil. He was illiterate, hated men of learning and kept company with illiterate persons like himself, whom he raised to the highest dignities in the State; among whom, one Himū, a Banīa or Indian shopkeeper, whom his predecessor Salīm Shāh had made superintendent of the markets, was intrusted with the whole administration of affairs. This naturally created him enemies among the Afghān chiefs, who, having conspired against his life, revolted from his authority. Ibrāhīm Khān Sūr, who had the king's sister for his wife, soon afterwards raised a considerable army, and, getting possession of the city of Delhi, ascended the throne in A.D. 1555, A.H. 962, and assumed the ensigns of royalty. Muhammad Shāh, finding himself betrayed, fled to Chunār, and contented himself with the government of the eastern provinces. He was slain in a battle fought at Munger with Bahādur Shāh, king of Bengal, A.D. 1556, A.H. 963. The period of his reign at Delhi was only eleven months.

Muhammad Shāh Bahmani I. (محمد شاه بهمنی اول), the second king of the Bahmanī dynasty, was the son of Sultān 'Alā-uddin Hasn Kāngoh Bahmanī, whom he succeeded to the throne of the Deccan in February, A.D. 1358, 19th Zi-Qa'da, A.H. 776. He reigned 17 lunar years and died on the 21st March, A.D. 1375. His son Mujāhid Shāh succeeded him.

Muhammad Shāh Bahmani II.

(محمد شاه بهمنی ثانی), the thirteenth Sultān of the Bahmanī dynasty, was the son of Humāyūn Shāh the Cruel. He succeeded his brother Nizām Shāh to the throne of the Deccan in July, A.D. 1463, in his ninth year; and the affairs of government were conducted, as in the reign of his late brother, by Khwāja Jahān and Khwāja Mahmūd Gāwān, under the direction of the Queen mother. The former was murdered after some time, and the title of Khwāja Jahān was conferred on Mahmūd Gāwān, adding the duties of Wakil-us-Saltanat to his other functions. Muhammad Shāh reigned nearly 20 lunar years, and died a year after he had caused his minister Mahmūd Gāwān to be put to death, i.e. on the 24th March, A.D. 1482, 1st Šafar, A.H. 887. His son Mahmūd Shāh II. succeeded him. The year of Muhammad Shāh's death is comprised in a Persian verse, the translation of which runs thus:

Sultān Muhammad Shāh, ruler of kings,
When suddenly summoned to yield up his breath,

Abandoned the Deccan and all worldly things,
And the ruin of the Deccan recorded his death.

He took the fort of Nagarkōt in A.D. 1337, and built several royal buildings and places in Delhi. It was in his reign that 'Alā-uddīn Hasan Kungōh raised the standard of royalty in the Deccan, A.D. 1347, A.H. 748, where his descendants reigned for several generations. Muhammad Shāh died at Thatta on the banks of the river Sindhi on the 20th March, A.D. 1351, 21st Muharram, A.H. 752, after a reign of nearly 27 lunar years. He was succeeded by his cousin Sultān Firōz Shāh Bārbak, the son of Sipah Salār Rajab.

Muhammad Shah Tughlaq II. (محمد شاه تغلق ثانی)

surnamed Nāsir-uddīn, was the son of Firōz Shāh Tughlaq. He was born on the 3rd June, A.D. 1353, 3rd Jumādā I. A.H. 754. He ascended the throne of Delhi in the lifetime of his father in the year A.D. 1387, but was soon after deposed and expelled by the chiefs. He remained at Nagarkōt till the reign of Abū Bakr Shāh, when he proceeded towards Delhi with a large army, and after some repulses proving victorious, ascended the throne in August, A.D. 1390, A.H. 792. He was the founder of a fortress in Jalesar, which he called Muhammadābād. He reigned 3 years and 7 months, and died on the 19th February, A.D. 1394, 17th Rabī' II. A.H. 796, and his body was deposited at Delhi in the same vault with that of his father. He was succeeded by his son Humāyūn, who, on ascending the throne, assumed the name of 'Alā-uddīn Sikandar Shāh, but died suddenly after a short reign of 45 days, and his brother Sultān Mahmūd succeeded him.

Murad I. Sultan (مراد اول سلطان), whom our English authors call Amurath I. and who is also called Murād Khān Ghāzī and Khwāwandgār Rūm, was the third Sultān of the race of Usmān or Othmān. He succeeded his father Arkan (Orchan) on the Turkish throne in A.D. 1359, A.H. 760, and was known for his cruelties towards his son and those who espoused his cause. He advanced into Europe, and made Adrianople his capital in A.D. 1360. He was a great warrior and obtained 37 victories, in the last of which he perished, A.D. 1389, A.H. 791, aged 71, by the hand of a soldier. He (or as some say his father) was the first who established the formidable force of the Janisaris. His son Bāyezid I. succeeded him.

Murad II. Sultan (مراد ثانی سلطان) succeeded his father Muhammad I. as Ottoman emperor in A.D. 1422, A.H. 825, and was the first Turk who used cannon on the field of battle. In A.D. 1443, A.H. 847, he resigned the crown in favour of his son Muhammad II. but finding him incapable to hold the reins of government, he abandoned his retirement and defended the famous Sikandar Beg (Sanderbeg), and routed the Hungarians. According to Gibbon, he died on the 2nd February, A.D. 1461, Zil-hijja, A.H. 854, and was succeeded by his son Muhammad II. who afterwards took Constantinople.

Murad III. Sultan (مراد ثالث سلطان) succeeded his father Salim II. to the throne of Constantinople in December, A.D. 1574, Sha'bān, A.H. 982, and to rid himself of all competitors he, at his first coming to the throne, caused his five brothers to be strangled in his presence. This act of cruelty so affected his mother that she destroyed herself. He took from his adversaries the Persians, Armenia, Media, and the city of Tauris, and the fort Gains from the Hungarians. He died on the 18th January, A.D. 1595, Jumādā F. A.H. 1003, aged 50 lunar years. At the time of his death such a sudden and terrible tempest arose, that many thought the world would then be dissolved. He was succeeded by his son Muhammad III. Sultān Murād is the author of the work called Fatūhat-us-Siyām.

Murad IV. Sultan (مراد رابع سلطان), son of Ahmad I. emperor of Constantinople, succeeded his uncle Mustafa I. who was deposed the second time in A.D. 1623, A.H. 1032. He took Baghdad in A.D. 1637, 30,000 of whose inhabitants he put to the sword, though he had promised them protection. He died on the 8th February, A.D. 1640, A.H. 1049, in the 18th year of his reign, of excessive intoxication, and was succeeded by his brother Ibrāhim.

Murad Bakhsh, Sultan (مراد بخش)

(سلطان), youngest son of the emperor Shāh Jahān, by whom he was appointed governor of Gujrāt, Thatta and Bihkar. He was seized and imprisoned in the fort of Gwāliar by the orders of his brother the emperor 'Alamgīr, after the first battle he fought against his brother Darā Shikōh, and was subsequently murdered, A.D. 1662, A.H. 1072, at Gwāliar and buried within the fort.

Murad Mirza (مرزا میرزا), also called

Sulṭān Murād and Shāh Murād, was the second son of the emperor Akbar. His mother's name was Sultāna Sulṭāna Begam. He was born on Thursday the 8th June, A.D. 1570, A.H. 978, in the house of the venerable Shaikh Salīm Chishtī at Sikrī. The Hindūs, on account of his being born in the elevated region of Sikrī, used to call him Pabāri. After this prince's birth the emperor, considering the village of Sikrī a propitious spot, two of his sons having been born there, ordered the foundation of a city to be laid, which, after the conquest of Gujrāt, he called Fathapūr. This prince was sent by his father to conquer the Deccan in A.D. 1595, A.H. 1004, where he fell sick and died on the 1st May, A.D. 1599, 15th Shawwāl, A.H. 1077. He was at first buried at Shūlpūr, but afterwards his corpse was removed to Dehli and laid by the side of Humāyūn the prince's grandfather.

Murtaza Khan (مرتضی خان سید), a Sayyad, who on the accession of Nawāb 'Asaf-uddaula to the masnad of Lucknow, was appointed by him his nāib or deputy, with the title of Mukhtār-uddaula, but Basant 'Alī Khān, an old khwāja sarā (eunuch) of the nawāb's father, being jealous of the influence he had over the nawāb, resolved to remove him; and for this purpose, having invited him to an entertainment, murdered him, and was himself slain the same day by order of the nawāb. This circumstance took place in the month of March, A.D. 1776, Šafar, A.H. 1190.

Murtaza Khan (مرتضی خان), a nephew and son-in-law of Dost 'Alī, the Nawāb of Arkat, under whom the perfidious seizure of Trichinopoly was perpetrated by Chanda Sahib. The nawāb was succeeded by his son Safdar 'Alī, who, after overcoming the effects of poison prepared for him by Murtaza Khān, fell by the poignard of a Pajhān assassin hired for the work by the same person. A storm was raised which he had not the courage to encounter, and, disguising himself in female attire, he escaped from Arkat to his own fort of Vellore. Two years afterwards, the youthful son and successor of Safdar 'Alī met the fate of his father, and common report attributed to Murtaza Khān a principal share in the contrivance of this murder also. Such was the man to whom the patronage of Dupleix, who was at that time grievously at a loss for money, was extended, for Murtaza Khān had the reputation of being extremely rich, and was selected by Dupleix as the new Nawāb of Arkat. He was solemnly installed in his new dignity, but finding that his faculties were inadequate to the position, he abdicated and returned to Vellore.

Musailima (مسيلمہ), commonly called

Kazzāb or the Liar, was an impostor who arose in the time of Muhammad in one of the provinces of Arabia, named Hajar. As success in any project seldom fails to draw in imitators, Muhammad having raised himself to such a degree of power and reputation, by acting the prophet, induced others to imagine they might arrive at a similar height by the same means. His most considerable competitors in the prophetic office was Musailima and Al-Aswad. Musailima pretended to be joined in commission with Muhammad, and published revelations in imitation of the Qurān. He sent Muhammad a letter, offering to go halves with him, in those words: "From Musailima the apostle of God, to Muhammad the apostle of God. Now, let the earth be half mine, and half thine." But Muhammad, believing himself too well established to need a partner, wrote him this answer: "From Muhammad the apostle of God, to Musailima the liar. The earth is God's; he giveth the same for inheritance unto such of his servants as he pleaseth; and the happy issue shall attend those who fear him." During the few months which Muhammad lived after the setting up of this new imposture, Musailima grew very formidable. Abū Bakr, Muhammad's successor, in the second year of his reign and the 12th of Hijri (A.D. 633, A.H. 12), sent an army against him under the command of Khālifa, the son of Walid, who defeated and slew him in battle. Al-Aswad set up for himself the very year that Muhammad died; but a party, sent by Muhammad, broke into his house by night, and cut off his head. Musailima and he received the appellation of "The two Liars."

It is said that Ahmad once intended to have shot him, but at the instant he was seized with such a pain in his arm and shoulder that he cried out, "Muhammad will not let him die." He carried himself but insolently and cruelly, and was deposed and sent to prison in A.D. 1618, A.H. 1027, when 'Usmān, his nephew, was raised to the throne. 'Usmān was murdered in A.D. 1621, A.H. 1030, and Baghdād. Vide Al-Mutla' Billah.

Mutjallī (متجلی), poetical name of Sayyad Qutb-uddin.

Mutnabbi (متنبی), or Al-Mutnabbi, surname of Abū Tīfīb Ahmad bin-Husain, one of the most celebrated of the Arabian poets, born at Kūfa in A.D. 916, A.H. 303. He had acquired an extensive knowledge of pure Arabic, drawn from the best sources, and this he had handed down in his poetical compositions. He flourished about the year A.D. 950, A.H. 339; his father was a water-carrier in Kūfa. His principal patron was Saif-uddaula, prince of Damascus, of the family of Hamdan. The surname of Al-Mutnabbi (the pretended prophet) was given him because he had set up for a prophet in the flat country near Sawāma, where he was followed by a great multitude of the Banū Kalab and other tribes; but Lūlū, governor of Enessa, having marched against him took him prisoner and dispersed his partisans. He kept Mutnabbi in confinement for a long period, and having at length brought him back to the Muslim faith, he set him at liberty. He was attacked by a chief of the tribe of Asad, at the head of a troop of partisans; a combat took place, in which he was killed with his son Al-Muhassad and his slave Mutak. This event happened in the month of September, A.D. 965, A.H. 354.

Muwyiyad-uddaula (مويد الدوله), son of Rukn-uddaula, the son of Ali Bōya the Bōyite. He succeeded to a part of his father's dominions in Persia in September, A.D. 976, Muharram, A.H. 366. He was taken captive and imprisoned by Hsām-uddaula at Jurjan in January, A.D. 984, Sha'ban, A.H. 373, and his brother Fakhr-uddaula Abū'l Hasan Ali got possession of the empire.

Muwyiyad-uddaula (مويد الدوله), the son of Nizām ul-Mulk, the celebrated wazīr of Sultān Alp Arslān and his son Malikshāh. He served as minister to Barkayarak, the son of the latter for some time, and when dismissed by that monarch, he joined his brother Muhammad in an attack upon Barkayarak; but was taken, and put to death by that prince.

Muzaffar or Muzaffarian (مظفر و)

(مظفریان), a dynasty of petty rulers of Fars in Persia. From the period at which the fortunes of the house of Halakū began to decline, i.e. after the death of Sultān Abū Sa'id in A.D. 1335, till the conquest of Persia by Amīr Taimūr, the province of Fars was governed by a dynasty of petty rulers, who took the name of Muzaffar from their founder, Mubārīz-addin Muhammad, whose title was Al-Muzaffar, or the Victorious, which title he received on his victory over Abū Ishāq, the governor of Shīrāz, in A.D. 1353, A.H. 754. The capital of this family was Shīrāz, which is said to have attained its great prosperity under their rule.

Muzaffar (مظفر), the poetical name of a person who flourished about the year A.D. 1690, A.H. 1102. The name of his Murshid or spiritual guide was Ali Amjad, in whose praise he has written some ghazals.

Muzaffar Husain Mirza (مظفر حسين)

(مرزا) was the son of Sultān Husain

Mirzā, ruler of Khurāsān, after whose death in May, A.D. 1506, Zil-hijja, A.H. 911, he conjointly with his brother Badi-ūzzamān Mirzā, ascended the throne at Herāt; but they did not enjoy it long, for Shāhi Beg Khān, the Uzbek, defeated them in May, A.D. 1507, Muharram, A.H. 913, and took possession of the country. Muzaffar Husain Mirzā, who had gone to Astarābād, died there the same year.

Muzaffar Husain Mirza (مظفر حسين)

(مرزا), of the royal Safwī race of Persia, was the son of Sultān Husain Mirzā, the son of Bahram Mirzā, the son of Shāh Ismā'il Safwī. He left his jagīr of Qandahār, and proceeded to India; and on his arrival at the court of the emperor Akbar in August, A.D. 1595, was appointed an amir of 5000. The Sarkār of Sambhal was assigned to him in jagīr, and Qandahār (which was made over to the emperor) to Shāh Beg Kabuli. About the year A.D. 1609, Mirzā Khurram (afterwards Shāh Jahān) was married to a daughter of Muzaffar Husain, who received the title of Qandahārī Begam.

Muzaffar Husain Mirza (مظفر حسين)

(مرزا) was the son of Ibrāhīm Husain

Mirzā and Gulrukh Begam. He was married to Khānum Sultān, the daughter of the emperor Akbar, in A.D. 1593, and was living in A.D. 1600.

Muzaffar Jang (مظفر جنگ), also called Muzaffar Husain Khān, Nawāb of Farrukhābād, whose original name was Diler Himmat Khān. He succeeded his father Ahmad Khān Bangash in the month of November, A.D. 1771, Sha'ban, A.H. 1185, and received the above title from the emperor

Shāh 'Alam, who was then proceeding to Delhi from Allahābād. He ceded his territory to the English on receipt of a pension of 108,000 rupees on the 4th June, A.D. 1802. After his death, his grandson Tafazzul Husain Khān succeeded him.

Muzaffar Jang (مظفر جنگ), whose original name was Hadāet Muḥin-uddīn, was the favourite grandson of the celebrated Nizām ul-Mulk, the Subādār of Haidarābād. He was the son of that nobleman's daughter, and on his death he collected an army and gave out that his grandsire had in his will not only appointed him to inherit the greatest part of his treasures, but had likewise nominated him to succeed to the government of the southern provinces. Nāsir Jang, his uncle, who had taken possession of his father's wealth, was enabled to keep his father's army in pay; and this was so numerous, that the forces which Muzaffar Jang had collected were not sufficient to oppose him with any probability of success. Muzaffar Jang subsequently went to Arkāt (Arcot), where he defeated and killed Anwar-uddīn Khān, the nawāb of that place, by the assistance of the French, in a battle fought on the 23rd July, A.D. 1749, and was acknowledged the lawful Subādār of the Deccan. He was, however, after some months obliged to surrender himself to Nāsir Jang, who kept him in close confinement; but after the murder of Nāsir Jang in December, A.D. 1750, 17th Muḥarram, A.H. 1161, he was again raised to the masnad by the assistance of the French. His reign was, however, of short duration, for he was not long afterwards assassinated by the same persons who had raised him to power. His death took place on the 3rd February, A.D. 1751, 17th Rabi' I. A.H. 1161, when Salabat Jang, the third son of the old Nizām, was placed on the masnad by the French.

Muzaffar Khān, Nawab (مظفر خان) نواب was the younger brother of

- Amir ul-Umrā Khān Daurān Abdus Samad Khān, by whose interest he was appointed governor of Ajmir in the reign of Farrukhsiyar, and was ordered to march with a numerous army against the Maharaja chief Malhār Rāo Holkar, who had invaded the territories of the Maharaja Jaising Sawāi of Amber (now called Jaipur). Muzaffar Khān was slain along with his brother in the battle which took place between the emperor Muhammad Shāh and Nādir in the month of February, A.D. 1739, Zi-Qa'da, A.H. 1151.

Muzaffar Khan (مظفر خان), a nobleman who was appointed governor of Āgra by the emperor Jahāngir in the year A.D. 1621, A.H. 1030. He built the mosque in the city of Āgra called "Kalīn or Kalī Masjid," in the year A.D. 1631, A.H. 1041, which is still standing, but in a ruinous state.

Muzaffar Khan Tirbati (مظفر خان تربتی), a nobleman who was appointed governor of Bengal by the emperor Akbar in A.D. 1579, A.H. 987. In his time Bābā Khān Qāqshāl rebelled against the emperor, took Gaur, slew Muzaffar Khān at Tānda in April, A.D. 1580, Rabi' I. A.H. 988, and became independent for some time.

Muzaffar, Maulana (مظفر مولانا), a celebrated poet of Herāt in Khurāsān, who lived in the time of Sulṭān Ḡhayās-uddīn Kart and Shāh Shujā' of Shīrāz.

Muzaffar Qawami, Maulana (مظفر قوامی)

(قوامی مولانا). Vide Qawāmī.

Muzaffar Shah I. (مظفر شاه), whose original name was Muzaffar Khān, was the first king of Gujrāt. He was born at Delhi on the 30th June, A.D. 1312, 25th Muḥarram, A.H. 743. His family had been elevated from menial stations in the household of the kings of Delhi. He was, however, appointed governor of Gujrāt in A.D. 1391, A.H. 794, by Sulṭān Muḥammad Tughlaq II. king of Delhi, in the room of Farhat ul-Mulk, who had rebelled against the king; a battle took place, in which the latter lost his life. In the year A.D. 1396, A.H. 799, Muzaffar Khān caused himself to be proclaimed king under the title of Muzaffar Shāh, and directed coin to be struck in his name. He died after a reign of nearly 20 years, on the 27th July, A.D. 1411, 6th Rabi' II. A.H. 814, in the 71st year of his age, and was succeeded by his grandson Ahmad Shāh the son of Tātār Khān.

Muzaffar Shah II. (مظفر شاه) was born on Thursday the 10th April, A.D. 1470, 20th Sha'bān, A.H. 876, and succeeded his father Sulṭān Mahmūd Shāh P. Baiqara on the throne of Gujrāt, in the 41st year of his age, in November, A.D. 1511, Sha'bān, A.H. 917. He reigned nearly 16 years, and died on Saturday the 17th February, A.D. 1526, 3rd Jumādā I. A.H. 932, aged 56 lunar years. He was buried at Sarkīch. His son Sikandar Shāh succeeded him.

Muzaffar Shah III. (مظفر شاه), a supposititious son of Mahmūd Shāh III. named Nathū, was raised to the throne of Gujrāt by Ya'tmād Khān, the prime minister, after the death of Almad Shāh II. in A.D. 1561, A.H. 968. In the year A.D. 1572, A.H. 980, the emperor Akbar was invited by Ya'tmād Khān to occupy Gujrāt as in former times; upon which Akbar advanced on the capital of that kingdom, which he took possession of on the 20th November of the same year, 14th Rajab, A.H. 980, and re-united it to Dehli as a province of Hindūstān. Muzaffar Shāh, who had abdicated his throne in favour of Akbar, was sent to Agra in the first instance, but was subsequently remanded into close confinement, from which he not only made his escape but flying into Gujrāt, collected a respectable force, attacked the viceroy of Qutb-uddīn Khān, and slew him in action; and after an imprisonment of nearly nine years, re-ascended the throne of Gujrāt. His reign was, however, of short duration; for in the year A.D. 1583, A.H. 991, Akbar having deputed Mirzā Khān Khān Khānān, the son of Bairām Khān to re-take Gujrāt, Muzaffar Khān was defeated in a pitched battle and fled to Jūnagarh; and as he was pursued by Khān 'Azim, he cut his throat with a razor. His head was then cut off and sent to court. His downfall terminated the dynasty of the Muhammadan kings of Gujrāt; ever since which period that kingdom has been considered as a province of Dehli.

Muzaffar Shāh Purbi (مظفر شاه)

(پوری), whose former name was

Siddi Badar, was an Abyssinian slave; he murdered his sovereign Mahmūd Shāh, and ascended the throne of Bengal in A.D. 1495, A.H. 900. He reigned three years, and was killed in a battle fought with his minister Sayyad Sharif, who succeeded him with the title of 'Ala-uddin II. in A.D. 1498, A.H. 904.

Nadira Begam (نادره بیگم), daughter of Sulṭān Parwez, the son of the emperor Jahān-gir. She was married to prince Dārā Shikōh, the eldest son of the emperor Shāh Jahān, on the 23rd January, A.D. 1634, by whom she had two sons, viz. Sulaimān Shikōh and Sipehr Shikōh. She died of fatigue in May, A.D. 1659, Ramaṣān, A.H. 1069, at Dawar, the country of Malik Jiwan, where her husband had fled along with her after his defeat at Ajmir. She was buried in the Khānqa of Mian Mir at Lāhore.

Nadir Shah (نادر شاه), also called Nadīr Qulī Khān and Tahmasp Qulī Khān, the greatest warrior that modern Persia has ever produced. He was the son of a shepherd, born in the province of Khurāsān, A.D. 1687, but by selling some of his father's sheep, he collected a number of desperate followers who shared his dangers and the booty gained in plundering caravans. By degrees he saw himself at the head of 6,000 brave adherents, and his assistance was solicited by Shāh Tahmasp II. king of Persia, whose throne was usurped by Ashraf, the chief of the Afghāns. With impetuous valour, Nadīr attacked and routed the enemy, and then seated his master on the throne of his ancestors at Isfahān, A.D. 1730. He then pursued the flying Afghāns to Qandahār, and on his return, taking advantage of the odium created by an unfavourable treaty made by Shāh Tahmasp with the Turks during his absence, he deposed the king; and his son, an infant of six months he proclaimed Shāh, by the name of 'Abbās III. This event took place on the 16th August, A.D. 1732, A.H. 1145. In his name, Nadīr assumed to himself the sovereign power, and after having recovered all that had been taken from Persia, he concluded a peace with the Ottoman Porte in A.D. 1736. On the death of the young Shāh 'Abbās the same year, he signified his intention of resigning his honours; but the nobles, excited by his private intrigues, invested him with the sovereign power. The historian of Nadīr is careful in informing us that the crown of Persia was placed upon the head of the conqueror exactly at 20 minutes past 8 in the morning of the 26th February, 1736, Shawwāl, A.H. 1148. Nadīr, now elevated to the height of his ambition, wisely saw that war was the only support of his greatness, and therefore with a numerous army he marched against India in 1739. The Moghul empire was rapidly conquered, 200,000 men were put to the sword, and a booty estimated at one hundred and forty-five millions, in which was the imperial throne set with diamonds of an immense value, called the Peacock Throne, was brought away by him from Delhi. He latterly became capricious, proud, and tyrannical, and was guilty of such cruelty that the nobles conspired against him and assassinated him on the night of Sunday the 10th May, A.D. 1747, 10th Jumādā I. A.H. 1160, after he had reigned 20 years over one of the most extensive military monarchies of the time. He was buried at Mushhad nine days after his death. His nephew and murderer 'Alī Qulī Khān, who took the title of 'Alī Shāh or 'Adil Shāh, succeeded him. On his accession, he put to death thirteen of the sons and grandsons of Nadīr; the only descendant of the conqueror that was spared was his grandson, Shāhrukh, the son of Raza Qulī, who was 14 years of age. He went to Europe and died at Vienna an officer in the Austrian service, known as "Baron von Semlin." 'Adil Shāh was soon afterwards deprived of sight and imprisoned. After him Ibrāhīm his brother reigned for some time in A.D. 1748, Shāhrukh in A.D. 1749, Sulaiman in A.D. 1750, Ismā'il bin-Sayyad Mustafā from A.D. 1750 to 1759, and after him Karīm Khān Zand and 'Aqā Muhammad Khān Qājār, which see.

Najabat Khan Khan Khanan Nawab

(نجات خان خاخانان نواب), a nobleman of the reign of the emperor 'Alamgir, by whom he was much respected. His proper name was Mirzā Shujā; he was the son of Mirzā Shāhrukh, and the grandson of Mirzā Sulaimān of Badakhshān. He was born on the 25th November, A.D. 1603, and died on the 13th December, A.D. 1664, 4th Jumāda I. A.H. 1075, at Ujjain. He held the rank of 5000 at the time of his death.

Najabat, Mir (نجات میر), author of a poem called Gulkuṣṭī, on the art of wrestling, a Shurāh of which has been written by Sirāj-uddin 'Alī Khān 'Arzū; and another by Munshi Ratan Singh of Lucknow.

[Idē Najāt (Mīr).]

Najaf Khan (نجف خان), styled

Amir ul-Umrā Zulfikār-uddaula, was born in Persia of a family said to be related to the Safavī sovereigns of that empire, and in his infancy was, with many of his relations, a prisoner to the usurper Nādir Shāh, who kept all the personages any way allied to the throne in confinement for his own security. At the request of Mirzā Muḥsin Khān, the brother of Nawāb Saḍdar Jang, who was sent on an embassy to Nādir Shāh by Muhammad Shāh the emperor, after his invasion of Hindūstān, Najaf Khān and a sister much older than himself were released. This lady married her deliverer, and Najaf Khān accompanied her and her husband to Delhi. He was treated with parental affection by Mirzā Muḥsin, and at his death attached himself to Muhammad Qulī Khān, his son, the governor of Allahābād, who was shortly afterwards seized and put to death by his first cousin Nawāb Shujā-uddaula, the son of Saḍdar Jang. Najaf Khān, upon this event, retired with a few followers into Bengal, and offered his services to the Nawāb Mīr Qāsim 'Alī Khān, then at war with the English, who gave him great encouragement. When Qāsim 'Alī took refuge with Shujā-uddaula, Najaf Khān, not choosing to trust himself in the power of the latter, repaired to Bundelkhānd, and served Gumāu Singh, one of the chiefs of that country. Upon the flight of Shujā-uddaula, after the battle of Buxar, he offered his services to the English, representing himself as the rightful lord of the province of Allahābād, was received with respectful welcome, and even put in possession of a part of it; but when peace was concluded with the Nawāb Wazīr, the English, alleging the falsehood of his claim, set it aside, and rewarded his attachment with a pension of two lakhs of rupees and strong recommendations to the emperor Shāh 'Alam. The recompense was greater than his services to the English, as he had kept up a correspondence with Shujā-uddaula, whom he would have joined had he been successful in the battle of Kōrā. From Allahābād he accompanied the emperor Shāh 'Alam to Dehli in A.D. 1771, and having recovered the city of Agra from the Jāts, he was appointed Amir-ul-Umrā with the title of Zulfikār-uddaula. The Rājās of Jaipūr and several other Hindū princes were his tributaries. He died on the 22nd April, A.D. 1782, A.H. 1169, in the 49th year of his age, leaving no issue, when the succession was disputed by Mirzā Shafī' and Afīrāsāb Khān (q.v.). In spite of early intrigues Najaf Khān was an exceptionally efficient man, and gave the Empire some nine years of apparently renewed vigour. He was generally respected.

Najib-uddaula.

Najib-uddaula (نجیب الدوله), the title of Najib Khān, a Rohela chief, and nephew of Bashārat Khān. He came into Rohelqhand during the administration of 'Alī Muhammad Khān. He was at first appointed to the charge of a very small party, not consisting of more than twelve horse and foot. But his courage and activity soon brought him to the notice of his patron, who entrusted him with a respectable military command, and procured for him in marriage the daughter of Dūndē Khān the Rohela chief. He subsequently espoused the imperial cause, and was honourably received at Dehli by the wazīr Ghāzī-uddīn Khān, and, being soon afterwards promoted to the command of the army, he attacked Saifdar Jang, who had avowedly announced his hostile disposition to the court, and compelled him to cross the Ganges, A.D. 1753, A.H. 1167. On the successful conclusion of this campaign, in which he was wounded, he received from the emperor Ahmad Shāh the title of Najib-uddaula. He was created Amīr-ul-'Umra to the emperor 'Alamgir II. by Ahmad Shāh Abdālī on his return to Qandahār, in A.D. 1757, A.H. 1170, but was, soon after that conqueror's departure, deprived of his office by the wazīr Ghāzī-uddīn Khān, who conferred it on Ahmad Shāh Bangash, the Nawāb of Farrukhabād, as a return for his services. Najib-uddaula was present in the famous battle fought by Ahmad Shāh Abdālī with the Marhattas in January, A.D. 1761, and on his departure to Qandahār, was again restored to his former situation of Amīr-ul-'Umra, and was entrusted with the care of the city of Dehli and the protection of the royal family. He governed Dehli and the few districts yet in possession of the royal family with moderation and justice till his death, which took place in October, A.D. 1770, Rajab, A.H. 1184, when he was succeeded in his dominions by his son Zubāta Khān, who continued to protect the royal family, the emperor Shāh 'Alam residing at Allahābād with the English. Najib-uddaula was buried at Najibābād, a city founded by him.

Najib-uddīn Farsi (نجیب الدین)

(فارسی), a poet of Persia who died about the year A.D. 1231, A.H. 628, and left a Diwān.

Najib-un-Nisa Begam (نجیب النساء)

(بیگم), the sister of the emperor Akbar, and the wife of Khwāja Hasan Nakshbandī.

Najm Sani (نجم ثانی), a famous wazīr of Shāh Ismā'il Safwī I. whose proper name was Mirzā Yār Ahmad. He was taken prisoner in a battle fought against the Uzbaks, and put to death on the 12th November, A.D. 1512, 3rd Ramaṣān, A.H. 918, by order of 'Abdullah Khān Uzbek, king of Turān.

Najm-uddaula (نجم الدوله), whose proper name was Mir Phūlwārī, and the eldest son of Mir Ja'far 'Alī Khān, Nawāb of Bengal, Behār, and Uriṣā. He succeeded his father in February, A.D. 1765, Sha'bān, A.H. 1178, and the same year the East India Company received from the emperor Shāh 'Alam the appointment of Diwān of the three provinces of Bengal, and the Nawāb became a mere pensioner. Najm-uddaula died of the small-pox, after a reign of one year and four months, on the 3rd May, A.D. 1766, 22nd Zi-Qa'da, A.H. 1179, and was succeeded by his brother Saif-uddaula.

Na'mat Khan (نعمت خان علی), whose poetical name is 'Ali, and who afterwards received the title of Danishmand Khān, Comptroller of the Kitchen to the emperor 'Alamgīr and a constant attendant on his person. He is the author of a number of excellent poems, one of which is called Itmā' un-Nahq, but this held in the greatest estimation is a satire on the conquest of Golkonda by 'Alamgīr, A D 1657, in which the author lashes not only the generals but even the emperor himself, whose conduct in destroying the Muhammadan kings of Bijapur and Golkonda while the Mahrattas and other Hindu chiefs had excited the standard of defiance was much disapproved of by many of the zealous Muslims. The officers and soldiers were also much disgusted by incessant wars in the Deccan and the very great hardships they suffered during his campaign in that country. This book goes by the name of the author, Na'mat Khān 'Alī, and has no other name. It is sometimes called Waqaya Na'mat Khān 'Alī. He also compiled a very excellent book on Oriental Cookery. The whole of his work is called Khawān Na'mat, or the Table of Delicacies. He died in the reign of the emperor Bahadur Shāh, A D 1708, A H 1120

Namud (نمود). Vide Tashkīr.

Nana (نانا), a corruption of Nānhā, or Nannhā is the appellation by which Bīljī Rāo Peshwa was commonly known in Hindūstan, and is by most supposed to be a title of State, but, as we are informed, it arose from the nickname given him when a child by his father, Nannha signifying a little man

Nana (نانا فرسوس), or Nānhā Farnawis or Pharnawis, was the Karkun of Mithā Rāo Peshwa. His original name was Jinnadun, and he rose by the aid of great ability and lack of scruple. Was rival of Mithap Singhia, whose great-nephew Daulat Rāo caused the Nana's fall and ruin. Died about 1797

Nana (نانا صاحب), or Nānā Sāhib, the nickname of Dhuudhupant of Bihur near Cawnpor. This miscreant was an adopted son of Bāji Rāo II the ex-Peshwa of Pūnā, who died on the 28th January, A.D. 1853. The pension of the ex-Peshwā, amounting to 8 lakhs of rupees per annum, was not continued to the Nānā, and this appears to have been his principal, if not sole grievance, though he invariably maintained friendly relations with the European residents and indeed on many occasions treated them with apparently cordial hospitality. His residence was at Bihur, situated ten miles from Cawnpore, where he owned an estate left him by his patron the ex-Peshwā, and he was allowed a retinue of 500 infantry and cavalry, with three guns of small calibre, and these troops were of course entirely independent of European authority. On learning the general character of the outbreak of the Bengal army in 1857 he attacked the garrison of Cawnpore, all of whom he destroyed by the help of the vilest treachery; but fled before the avenging force of General Havelock. A proclamation was issued by the Governor-General in March, A.D. 1858, wherein a reward was offered of one lakh of rupees to any person who should deliver Nānū Dhundhupant of Bihūr to the district officer commanding in any military camp or at any military post; and, in addition to the pecuniary reward, a free pardon was guaranteed to any mutineer, deserter or rebel (excepting the Nawāhs of Farrukhābād, Bareilly, Banda and Rāja of Mainpūr) who should so deliver up the Nānā Sāhib. The Nānā was never afterwards heard of authentically, but probably perished in the Nipāl jungles.

Nanak (نانک شاه), or Nānak Shāh, the founder of the sect called Sikhs, was born in the year A.D. 1469. He was the son of a Hindū grain-merchant, and disciple of Sayyad Hussain, or as some say of Kabir, and consequently a sort of Hindū deist, but his peculiar tenet was universal toleration. He maintained that devotion was due to God, that forms were immaterial, and that Hindū and Muhammadan worship were the same in the sight of the Deity. During his travels Nānak was introduced to the emperor Bābar, before whom he is said to have defended his doctrine with great firmness and eloquence. Nānak died in the month of August, A.D. 1539, aged 70 years. After his sect had silently increased for more than a century, it excited the jealousy of the Musalmān government, and its spiritual chief, the Gurū Arjun, was put to death in A.D. 1606, within a year after the decease of the emperor Akbar. This tyranny changed the Sikhs from inoffensive quietists into fanatical warriors. They took up arms under Hargōbind, the son of the martyred Arjun, who inspired them with his own spirit of revenge and of hatred to their oppressors.

The following are the names of the Sikh Gurūs from Nānak.

Nandkumar (نندکمار), a Brāhman born about 1720, in the district of Birbham, became Wānu Fuzḍar of Hugli under Sirāj-ul-daula (q.v.) about 1756. All the power of the State had been committed to him without control, in the time of the Nawāb Ja'far 'Alī Khān. He was a treacherous enemy to the English. He was convicted of a forgery, condemned to suffer death, and hanged at the appointed place of execution in Calcutta on the 5th August, A.D. 1775, 7th Jumādā II. A.H. 1189. His treasure and effects were given up to his son Rāja Gurdās. It is said there were fifty-two lakhs of rupees in money, and about the same amount in jewels and rich goods. In the Siyar-ul-Mutakharin, it is said that in his house were found counterfeit seals of several eminent persons which he had forged.

[Warren Hastings was long charged with improperly influencing the trial of Nandkumar, but his memory is generally thought to have been cleared by Sir J. F. Stephen, whose book on the subject should be consulted.]

Naqib Khan (نقیب خان), the grand-son of Yahia bin-'Abdul-Latif, which see.

Narsingh Deo Bundeila, Raja (نرسنگه درندیلہ راجہ), son of Rāja

Madhukar Sāh Bundeila, who died in the reign of the emperor Akbar, A.D. 1592, A.H. 1000. He served prince Mirzā Salim (afterwards Jahāngir) for several years and by his orders slew Abū'l Fazl, the prime minister of his father Akbar, in A.D. 1602, A.H. 1011. In the first year of Jahāngir he was raised to the rank of 3000, and subsequently to that of 4000. The Hindū temple at Muthura (Muttra), which 'Alamgir afterwards converted into a mosque, was built by him at a cost of three lakhs of rupees. He died in the year A.D. 1626, A.H. 1036.

Nasafi (نسفی), or al-Nasafi, whose proper name is Abū'l Barakāt 'Abdullah bin-Ahmad, commonly called Hāfiz-uddīn al-Nasafi, is the author of a law-book entitled Wāfi and its commentary called the Kāfi. He is also the author of the Kanz ul-Dagāek, a book of great reputation, principally derived from the Wāfi, and containing questions and decisions according to the doctrines of Abū Hanifa, Abū Yūsuf, the Imām Muhammad, Zafar, al-Shāfi'i, Mālik, and others. Many commentaries have been written on this work; the most famous is the Bahr ar-Rāeq by Zain-ul-'Abidin bin-Nujaim al-Misri. Nasafi died A.D. 1310, A.H. 710.

[Vide Hāfiz-uddīn Nasafi.]

Nasafi (نسفی), surnāmō of Najmuddīn Abū Hāfiz 'Umar bin-Muhammad, a celebrated doctor, and author of the Aqā'id al-Nasafi, a book in Arabic containing the fundamental and principal articles of the Muhammad religion. This work is greatly esteemed by the Musalmāns, who prefer it to many others of the same title. A commentary on the above work was written by Taftazani. Nasafi died in A.D. 1142, A.H. 537.

Nasai (نسائی). Vide Abū 'Abdul

Rahmān Nasāi. He was a native of Nasā, a town in Khurāsān.

Nasir Jang, Nawab Nizam-uddaula

(ناصر جنگ نواب نظام الدوله) was the second son of Nizām-ul-Mulk ‘Asaf Jāh, whom he succeeded in the government of the Deccan in May, A.D. 1748, Jumādā II. A.H. 1161. He reigned two years and a half, and was slain on the 5th December, A.D. 1750, 17th Muḥarrar, A.H. 1164, by a conspiracy of his own servants, supposed to have been favoured by the French, who surprised his camp while he was engaged in quelling a rebellion raised by his nephew, Muzaffar Jang, who had been imprisoned by him. On his death Muzaffar Jang was placed on the musnad of the Deccan by the conspirators; but this young prince did not long enjoy his dignity, for he was assassinated almost immediately after his accession by the same persons who had raised him to power. This event took place on the 2nd February, A.D. 1751, 17th Rabī I. A.H. 1164. Nāsir Jang was buried at Burhānpūr near the tomb of his father.

[See The French in India, by Colonel Malletson, C.S.I.]

Haidarābād in Singh, succeeded his brother Mir Nūr Muhammad Khān in A.D. 1842. He was imprisoned and sent down to Calcutta by the English in A.D. 1843, 6th Rabī II. A.H. 1261, where he died on the 16th April, A.D. 1845.

Nasir Khan Faruqi (نصیر خان فیروزی). Vide Malik Nasir Khan.

Nasir Khusro (ناصر خسرو), a celebrated physician and poet of Isfahān, whose poetical name was Hujjat. He is the author of several works, among which are the two following, viz. Risālat-nama in verse, and Kanz-ul-Haq in prose. He has also left a Diwān consisting of 30,000 verses. He was a contemporary of Khwāja 'Abū'l Hasan Turjānī and the celebrated physician Avicenna. Some say that he was a Deist, and others considered him to be an Atheist, on which account he was persecuted by the Muhammadans, and fled from one city to another, till at last he was obliged to conceal himself among the hills of Badakhshān. Daulat Shāh has given a very interesting account of Nāsir Khuro, in his Tazkira. In 1872 there was discovered among the Elliot papers an Arabic work by Nāsir Khuro, on the buildings and water-works of Jerusalem. He is most precise in his information. It is said, that if this work had been found a little earlier, it might have saved the Palestine Exploration Committee some diggings and considerable outlay. There is also a work of the same kind in Persian, called The Travels of Nāsir Khuro, which he wrote in A.D. 1052, corresponding with A.H. 444.

Nasir Shah Purbi (ناصر شاه پوربی), a lineal descendant of Shams-uddin Bhangūrā, was placed on the throne of Bengal in A.D. 1427, A.H. 831, after the murder of Nāsir-uddin Ghulām, who had usurped the throne for several days after the death of his master Ahmad Shāh. General Briggs, in his translation, says that he reigned only two years, whereas it appears from Major Stewart's Bengal history, which seems to be correct, that he reigned 32 years, consequently his death must have happened in the year A.D. 1458, A.H. 863. He was succeeded by his son Bārbak. He is also called Nāsir Husain Shāh, as appears from an Arabic inscription on a mosque lately discovered in the district of Hughli in Bengal by the late H. Blochmann, Principal, Calcutta Madrasa.

Nasir, Shaikh (ناصر شيخ اکبر آبادی), of Akbarābād, a Musalmān saint who is said to have performed a number of miracles, and was highly respected by the emperor Shāh Jahān. He died on the 7th June, A.D. 1647, 13th Jumādā I. A.H. 1057, and was buried at Āgra.

Nasir-uddaula (نصیرالدوله), Nizām of the Haidarābād State, succeeded his father Sakandar Jāh on the 23rd May, A.D. 1820, and died in May, A.D. 1857. His son ascended the masnad with the title of Nawāb Afzal-uddaula.

Nasir-uddin (نصیرالدین), title of

Ahmad Shāh, the present king of Persia. [Vide Ahmad Shāh.]

Nasir-uddin (نصیرالدین), author of the Arabic work on Jurisprudence called Fatāwī Ibrāhīmī.

Nasir-uddin (نصیرالدین), king of Persia. Vide Nasir-uddin Shāh.

Nasir-uddin Haidar (نصیرالدین حیدر),

king of Audh, was the son of Ghāzi-uddin Haidar, whom he succeeded on the throne of Lucknow on the 30th October, A.D. 1827, 28th Rabi' I. A.H. 1243, with the title of Sulaimān Jāh Nasir-uddin Haidar. He reigned ten years, and died, poisoned by his own family, on the 7th July, A.D. 1837, 3rd Rabi' II. A.H. 1253, in which year died also William IV. king of England, and Akbar II. king of Delhi. Nasir-uddin Haidar was succeeded by his uncle Nasir-uddaula, who took the title of Abū Muzaffar Mōi-uddin Muhammad 'Alī Shāh, and Munna Jān the illegitimate son of Nasir-uddin Haidar was sent to the fort of Chunār, where he died on the 15th January, A.D. 1846, 16th Muharram, A.H. 1262.

Nasir-uddin Khilji, Sultan (ناصرالدین خلیجی سلطان), was the son of Sultān

Ghāyās-uddin Khiljī, king of Malwā. He ascended the throne of that kingdom a few days before the death of his father, which happened on the 26th October, A.D. 1500, 27th Rabi' II. A.H. 906. He reigned eleven years and four months; and, having previously declared his third son Ma'mūd as his successor, died about the year A.D. 1511, A.H. 917.

Nasir-uddin Mahmud (نصیرالدین محمد چراغ دهلی), also called, by Farishta, Nasir-uddin Mahmūd Awadhī, surnamed Chirāgh Dehli, or the Candle of Delhi, a celebrated Muhammad saint, who was a disciple of Shaikh Nizām-uddin Auliā, whom he succeeded on the masnad of Irshād, or Spiritual Guide, and died on Friday the 16th September, A.D. 1356, 18th Ramazān, A.H. 757. He is buried at Delhi in a mausoleum which was built before his death by Sultān Firōz Shāh Bārbak, one of his disciples, and close to his tomb Sultān Bahlōl Lōdī was afterwards buried. He is the author of a work called Khai-ul-Mujlis.

Nasir-uddin Mahmud (ناصرالدین محمد بغرا خان), surnamed Baghrā

Khān, governor of Bengal, was the son of Sultān Ghāyās-uddin Balban, and the father of Mōizz-uddin Kaiqubād, who was, during the absence of his father in Bengal, made king of Delhi. When Sultān Ghāyās-uddin Tughlaq, in A.D. 1324, marched in person towards Bengal, he was then living, and came from Lakhnauli to pay his respects, bringing with him many valuable presents. He was confirmed in his government of Bengal, and permitted to assume the ensigns of royalty. He died in the time of Muhammad Tughlaq Shāh.

[Vide Baghrā Khān.]

Nasir-uddin Mahmud, Sultan (ناصر)

(الدين محمد), son of Sultān Shams-uddin Altīmsh, succeeded his nephew Sultān 'Alāuddin Mas'ūd Shāh in June, A.D. 1246, to the throne of Dehli. He reigned 20 years, was imprisoned, and died on the 18th February, A.D. 1266, when Ghayās-uddin Balban succeeded him.

Nasir-uddin Muhtashim (ناصرالدين)

(محتشم) is the person in whose name Khwājā Nāsir-uddin Tūsi wrote the work entitled Akhlāq Nāsiri.

Nasir-uddin Murtaza (ناصرالدين)

(مرتضی), author of several works, one of which is called Risāla Misbāh ilm Nāhv. He died in A.D. 1213, A.H. 610.

Nasir-uddin Qabbacha or Fattah

(ناصرالدين قباچه يا فتح), ruler of Sindh. It is related in several histories, such as the Khulāsat ul-Hikāet, the Haj-nūma, and the History of Hājī Muhammad Qandahārī, that the first establishment of the Muhammadan faith in the country of Sindh took place in the time of Hajjāj bin-Yūsaf, governor of Basra, at the time when Walīd, the son of the Khalīf 'Abdulmalik, was ruler of the provinces of both 'Irāqs. Hajjāj deputed Mahmūd Husain in the year A.D. 706, A.H. 87, with a select army into Mikrān, and he subdued that country and made converts of many of the inhabitants called Ballochīs. He afterwards deputed Budmīn to conquer Dībāl (modern Thatta on the Indus). Budmīn failed in his expedition, and lost his life in the first action. Hajjāj, not deterred by this defeat, resolved to follow up the enterprise by another. In consequence, in the year A.D. 712, A.H. 93, he deputed his cousin Imād-uddin Muhammad bin-Qāsim, the son of Aqil or Ugail Thaqafi or Saqafi, with six thousand soldiers to attack Dībāl, and he in a short time conquered the place, and Rājā Dāhir, the ruler of Dībāl, was slain in battle. After the death of Muhammad bin-Qāsim, a tribe who trace their origin from the Ansārīs established a government in Sindh; after which the zamīndārs, of the tribe of Sūmara, usurped the power, and held independent rule over the kingdom of Sindh for the space of 500 years. About A.H. 737 the dynasty of Sūmara was subverted, and the country subdued by another native dynasty called Sūmana, whose chief assumed the title of Jām. During the reigns of these dynasties in Sindh, the Muhammadan kings of India Proper, such as those of Ghazni, Ghōr and Duffī, invaded Sindh, and, seizing many towns, appointed Muhammadan governors over them. Among these rulers, Nāsir-uddin Qabbācha asserted his independence, and caused the public prayers to be read in his name as king of Sindh. Nāsir-uddin was one of the Turkish slaves of Shahāb-uddin Muhammad Ghōrī, who made him governor of Uchcha in Multān about the year A.D. 1203, A.H. 600. He espoused the daughter of Sultān Qulb-uddin Aibak, viceroy, and afterwards king of Dehli, after whose death in A.D. 1210, A.H. 607, having seized many of the towns subjected to the Sindh government, he reduced the territory of the Sūmanas to the small tract of country around Thatta, and, renouncing his allegiance to the throne of Dehli, became independent. Besides Sindh, his kingdom embraced the provinces of Muftān, Kohrām and Sursati. He was twice attacked by Taj-uddin Elduz of Ghazni, but he successfully repelled both these invasions. In A.D. 1225 Shams-uddin Altīmsh, king of Dehli, made several attempts to remove him from his government, and even marched for that purpose as far as Uchcha, when Nāsir-uddin, having no hopes of eventually repelling the arms of the Dehli monarch, placed his family and personal attendants with his treasure, in boats, and endeavoured to occupy a contiguous island; when a storm coming on, the boat foundered, and every one perished. This usurper ruled in Sindh and Multān for a period of 22 years. In the latter end of the reign of Muhammad Tughlaq of Dehli, Sindh owed allegiance to that monarch; nevertheless, occasionally taking advantage of local circumstances, the Sindhis contrived, for a considerable period, to shake off their allegiance. The first of the family of which we have any account was Jām Afrā.

The following is a list of the Jām dynasty of Sūmana, originally Rājputs.

Nasir-uddin Qazi Baizawi (ناصرالدين)

(قاضى بيضاوى), the son of Imām

Badr-uddīn Umar bin-Fakhr-uddīn 'Alī Baizāwī.

[Vide Baizāwī.]

Nasir-uddin Shah (ناصرالدين شاد).

king of Persia, was born in A.D. 1831, and was the eldest son of Muhammad Shāh, the eldest son of 'Abbās Mirzā, so well known for his partiality to the English, and the great-grandson of Fatha 'Alī Shāh. Nāsir-uddīn ascended the throne after the death of his father, on the 4th September, A.D. 1848, in his 19th year. He visited Russia, London, France, Germany, etc., in A.D. 1873, and again in 1889.

Nasir-uddin Tusi, Khwaja (نصيرالدين)

(طوسى خواجه), the famous philosopher and astronomer who was employed by Halākū Khān, the grandson of Changiz Khān, to form the Ilkhānī Tables, etc. He was the son of Imām Fakhr-uddīn Muhammad Rāzī, was born at Tūs in Khurāsān on Saturday the 3rd March, A.D. 1201, 11th Jumādā I. A.H. 597, and though a somewhat over-zealous Shīa, was one of the best, and certainly the most universal scholar that Persia ever produced. He wrote on all subjects, and some of his works are to this day standard books in Persian Universities. He was a fair Greek scholar, and made a new translation of Euclid into Arabic, wherein he proved most of the propositions, sometimes in two, three, and four ways, wholly different from the demonstrations of the Greek author.

He likewise translated the Almajisti, and wrote a volume of learned explanatory notes upon it. He also wrote several works on geometry, astronomy, philosophy, theology, and dissertations on miscellaneous subjects. During the Mughal persecutions he wandered among the mountains of Khurāsān, and was taken captive by Alauddīn Muhammad, a descendant of Husan Sabbah, who forced him to remain with him for several years and employed him as his wazīr. It was during his captivity that he wrote the most celebrated of all his treatises, a well-known and excellent little work on moral philosophy, which he styled Akhlaq Nāsiri, or the Morals of Nasir, in compliment to Nasir-uddīn 'Abdul Rahīm, governor of the fortress of Dez; but the flattery did not procure him his liberty, he remained in that mountainous region till he was released by Halākū Khān in November, A.D. 1256, A.H. 654. It was Nasir-uddīn that persuaded Halākū to march against Baghdad, which was taken in A.D. 1258. The Akhlaq Nāsiri is a translation in Persian of the Kitāb-ut-Tahārat fil Ilkmat Amālī, an Arabic work by Abū 'Alī Muhammad of Mecca. There are two other works on Sūfism which he wrote, one called Awāif-ul-Ashrāf, the Praises of the Virtuuous, and the Bahar-ul-Ma'ānī, the Sea of Truth. He is also the author of a work entitled Akhlaqut-nāma Ilāhī, and another work on Prosody called Māw-ush-shohra. Nasir-uddīn died in the reign of Abakān, the son of Halākū, on the 24th June, A.D. 1274, 18th Zil-hijja, A.H. 672, and was buried at Baghdad near the tomb of Imām Mūsī Qāzīm. His brutal severity towards Ibn Hājib, a helpless captive, is an everlasting stain on the otherwise illustrious character of this distinguished man.

Nasrat Shah (نصرت شاد), the son of Fatha Khān, the son of Frōz Shāh Tughluq. The throne of Delhi, which was vacated by Sultān Mahmūd Shāh on the invasion of Amir Taimūr in A.D. 1399, was taken possession of by Nasrat Shāh on that conqueror's return to Persia. He reigned eleven months, and was defeated in a battle by his cousin Eqbāl Khān, the son of Zafar Khān, who succeeded him in A.D. 1400. The Sūbāhs had rendered themselves independent in their own governments, during the misfortunes and confusions of the empire. Gujrat was seized upon by Khān ‘Azim Zafar Khān; Mālwa by Dilāwar Khān; Qanauj, Audh, Kara and Jaunpūr by Sultān-ush-Sharaq Khwāja Jahān; Lahorē, Dīhālpūr, and Multān by Khizir Khān; Samāna by Khalil Khān; Bayāna by Shams Khān; Malūba by Muhammad Khān bin-Malikzada Firōz, and so on.

Nasrat Shah (نصرت شاد), who is called, by General Briggs, Nasib Shāh, succeeded his father ‘Alāuddin in the government of Bengal in A.D. 1524, A.H. 930. When Ibrāhīm Lodi fell in battle with Bābar (q.v.) the latter ascended the throne of Delhi in A.D. 1526, A.H. 932, when many of the adherents of the Lodi dynasty sought protection at the court of Bengal. Among others the prince Mahmūd (brother to Ibrāhīm Lodi) also took refuge there, and his sister became the wife of the king. Nasrat Shāh died in A.D. 1538, A.H. 945, and Mahmūd, who was then one of his ministers, succeeded in usurping his throne. About this period Sher Khān, who afterwards ascended the throne of Delhi, attacked and defeated Mahmūd in action, and eventually expelled him from Bengal, whence he fled to the court of Delhi, where, representing his grievances, the emperor Humāyūn marched with an army and took the kingdom of Bengal from Sher Khān, whom he defeated in a general action. Sher Khān, rallying his defeated troops in the year A.D. 1542, A.H. 949, succeeded in re-conquering Bengal. On his death, and after the accession of his son Salīm Shāh to the throne of Delhi, the province of Bengal was made over to Muhammad Khān Afghān, one of the officers of his court, on whose death his son declared his independence, and proclaimed himself king under the title of Bahādūr Shāh.

[Vide ‘Abū l Ma‘ālī, the son of ‘Abdul Majīd.]

Nasr-ullah (نصر الله), king of Bukhāra, who died in the year A.D. 1860. He was a great tyrant, a greater probably never ruled a people. When on his death-bed, and so weak as to be scarcely able to make himself understood, he directed one of his wives to be brought into his room. The poor lady's brother had recently been in rebellion, and the news of his defeat and capture reached the tyrant when on his deathbed. Unable to glut his eyes with the sight of their execution, he wreaked his vengeance on his own wife, because she was sister to the rebel chief. She was beheaded before his eyes, now about to close in death. Laden with every crime that could burden the conscience of a responsible king, Nasr-ullah died, leaving the throne to his son and successor Muzaffar-uddin.

Nasr-ullah bin-‘Abdullah al-Akhmi

Nihal Singh (نیپال سنگه), Rājā of Kapūrthala. He died in the year A.D. 1852, having made his last will and testament, in which he left the throne, with nearly the whole of his kingdom, to his eldest son, Randhīr Singh, and to his two younger sons, Bikrama Singh and Suchait Singh, he assigned a jagir of one lakh each, in case they disagreed with their brother. The Government of India was made the executor of the will. After the Rājā's death his eldest son, Randhīr Singh, ascended the gaddi. His youngest brother, Suchait Singh, fell out with him, and asked the British Government to execute his father's will in regard to him. Lord Dalhousie at once ordered the separation of a jagir of one lakh from the Kapūrthala Rāj, according to the provisions of the will. The other brother, Bikrama Singh, was a worthy man, and much attached to the British rule. Like his royal brother, he performed important services to the English Government in 1857, and was rewarded for them with a jagir in Aūdḥ and titles besides. Nizami Ganjawi, Shaikh (نظامی گنجوی شیخ), also called Nizām-uddin Ganjawi, a very celebrated poet who was a native of Ganja. He is the author of the poem called Sikandar-nāma, the history of Alexander the Great, which is one of the most celebrated Romances of the East, and is written in admirable poetry. The number of works attributed to Nizāmī amount to nine or ten, among which are the five following poems called the Khamsa, or the five books, viz. :—

1. Makhzan-ul-Asrār, the Magazine of Mysteries, which he dedicated to Bah-rām Shāh.
2. Laili-wa-Majnun, dedicated to Khāqān Manūchehr, ruler of Shīrwān.
3. Khawā-ṣṣa-Shirīn } dedicated to Qizal Arsalān, for which he received from that chief fourteen villages free of rent.
4. Haft Paikar }
5. Sikandar-nāma, which was his last work, and which he finished on the 15th October, A.D. 1200, 4th Muharram, A.H. 597, and died the same year, aged 54. This book, it seems, he had dedicated to Tughral III. Saljūqī, some years before his death, for Tughral died in A.D. 1194. Some authors say that Nizāmī died in A.D. 1209, A.H. 606.

To Nizāmī is accorded the palm for the best poem on the loves of Khawro and Shirīn; to Jāmī, for those of Yūsuf and Zulekha; and to Hāfiẓ, for the most musical, most melancholy version of the sad tale of Laili and Majnun. Nizāmī's Diwān contains nearly 20,000 verses on all subjects.

Nizami 'Uruzi (نظامی عروضی), of Samarqand, was a pupil of Amīr Mu'izzī, who lived in the time of Malikshāh. He is the author of a poem entitled Wāṣa-wa-Rāmin, and of another work in verse called Chahār Maqāla.

Nizam Saqqa (نظام سقہ) is the name of a person who was a water-bearer, and saved the emperor Humāyūn from being drowned in the river Chounsā after his first defeat by Sher Shāh, near Patna. It is said that the emperor, after his return to Āgra, rewarded this man by allowing him to sit on the throne for half a day and then honoured him with the dignity of an Amīr.

Nizam Shah Bahmani (نظام شاه بهمنی), son of Humāyūn Shāh the Cruel, whom he succeeded on the throne of the Deccan in September, A.D. 1461, A.H. 865, when only 8 years of age, the queen-mother acting as regent. Muḥmūd Gawān, who now held the government of Berar, was appointed wazīr, and Khwāja Jahān assumed the office of Wakil-us-Saltanat and was made governor of Tilangāna. By the happy co-operation and unanimity of these two personages and the queen-mother, a woman of great abilities, the injuries occasioned by the tyranny of the late king were soon repaired. Nizām Shāh died suddenly on the night of his marriage, being the 29th July, A.H. 1463, 13th Zi-Qa'da, A.H. 867, after a reign of two years and one month, and was succeeded by his brother Muhammad Shāh II.

Nizam, Shaikh (نظام شیخ), one of the authors of the Fatāwā 'Alamgiri, a work on jurisprudence. Of the collections of decisions now known in India, none is so constantly referred to, or so highly esteemed, as this work. It was compiled by Shaikh Nizām and other learned men, and commenced in the year A.D. 1656, A.H. 1067, by order of the emperor 'Alamgīr, by whose name the collection is now designated. It was translated into Persian by order of 'Alamgīr's daughter, Zeib-un-Nisa.

a variant of the name of Najm-ud-daula (q.v.), eldest son and successor of the unfortunate Mir Jafar, whom he succeeded as titular Nawāb Nāzim of the Eastern Provinces, or Bengal.

Nizam-uddin Ahmad, Khwaja (نظام الدین احمد خواجہ), author of the Tabqāt Akbarī, which is also known as Tārīkh Nizāmī, a general history of India, dedicated to the emperor Akbar about the year A.D.

1593, A.H. 1002. He was the son of Khwāja Muhammad Muqīm of Herāt, who was one of the dependants of the emperor Bābar Shāh, and who, at the latter part of that king's reign, was raised to the office of Diwān of the household. After the death of Bābar, when Gujrat was conquered by Humāyūn, and the provinces of Ahmadābād was entrusted to Mirzā 'Askāri, Khwāja Muqīm was appointed wazīr to the Mirzā. He accompanied Humāyūn to Agrā, after that monarch's defeat by Sher Shāh at Chounsā. The Khwāja subsequently served under Akbar. His son Nizām-uddin, in the 29th year of Akbar's reign, was appointed Bakhshi of Gujrat, to which office he continued for a long time. He died on the 28th October, A.D. 1594, 23rd Šafar, A.H. 1003, on the banks of the Rāwī, and was buried in his own garden at Lāhore. The following chronogram by 'Abdul Qādir Badāoni, translated by Mr. H. M. Elliot, records the date of his death: "Mirzā Nizām-uddin has departed in haste; but with honour has he gone to his final doom. His sublime soul has fled to the celestial regions, and Kādiri has found the date of his death in these words, 'A jewel without price has left this world.'"

Nizām-uddin Ahmad (نظام الدين)

(احمد بن محمد صانع), son of Muhammad Sālāh, author of a work called Majmū'a-us-Savāya, or Collection of Arts, containing some beautiful poetical inventions, compiled in the year A.D. 1650, A.H. 1060, and published in the Lithographic Press at Lucknow in A.D. 1845, A.H. 1260. He is also the author of the work called Karamat-ul-Aulia, containing a minute detail of the (pretended) miracles performed by the twelve Imāms and other saints of the Muhammadan faith, written in A.D. 1657, A.H. 1067.

Nizām-uddin Aulia, Shaikh (نظام)

(الدين اوليا شيخ), styled Sultān-ul-

Mushākeh. He was one of the noblest disciples of Shaikh Farīd-uddin Shakarganj, and a most celebrated saint among the Muslimāns. He was born at Badāon in October, A.D. 1236, Šafar, A.H. 634, and died at Dehli on Wednesday the 3rd April, A.D. 1325, 18th Rabi' I. A.H. 725, where he lies buried, and his tomb, which is in Ghayās-pūr, is visited by the Muhammadans to this day. Amir Khusrō, the poet, was one of his disciples. Sayyid Ahmad, the father of Nizām-uddin, is buried at Badāon.

Nizām - ʿiddin Sihālī, Maulāna

(نظام الدين سہالی مولانا), son of Quṭb-uddin, is the author of the Sharāʾ or marginal notes on the Sadra, and Shams Bāzighā, etc., etc. He died in A.D. 1746, A.H. 1161.

Nizām-uddin Sikham, Amir (نظام)

(الدين سخم امير), a poet who was a contemporary of Amīr Alisher, and a panegyrist of Mirzā Sulṭān Ahmad of Samargand.

Nizām-ul-Mulk (نظام الملك), a justly celebrated minister of Sultān Alp Arslān, second king of the Saljūkides, and afterwards of his son Malikshāh; to his virtue and ability is attributed the success and prosperity of their reigns. After an administration of 30 years the fame of the wazīr, his wealth and even his services, were transformed into crimes. This venerable statesman, at the age of 89 years, was dismissed by his master, accused by his enemies, and stabbed by an assassin, who was a follower of Hasan Sabbāh, the Old Man of the Mountain, on Friday night the 15th October, A.D. 1092, Ramazān, A.H. 485, at a place called Nahāwand. His body was carried to Isfahān, where he was interred with great pomp. It is said that the assassin was suborned against him by Malikshāh, who was fatigued to see him live so long. The Sultān survived him 35 days only. Nizām-ul-Mulk appears to be the author of the work entitled Siar-ul-Malūk. [Nizām and Hasan Sabbāh had both been school-fellows of the poet Uman Khāyyām (q.v.).]

Nizām-ul-Mulk (نظام الملك آصف)

(جاء), entitled 'Asaf Jāh, whose original name was Chīn Kulich Khān, was the son of Ghāzī-uddin Khān Jang, a favourite Turkman officer of the emperor 'Alamgir, under which monarch he also distinguished himself. In the reign of the emperor Farrukh-siyar, he held the government of Morādābād and was afterwards appointed governor of Mālwa, which province he restored to a flourishing condition, but the reputation he acquired rendered him an object of jealousy to the two brothers, Sayyad 'Abdullah Khān and Husain 'Alī Khān, who wished to remove him to another quarter less favourable to his interest than the frontier of the Deccan; but Nizām-ul-Mulk, not willing to quit his post, excused himself, and resolved to seek an independent power in the Deccan. The disturbed state of that country gave him a pretence for raising troops, and turned his attention to the conquest of the Deccan. By intrigue and money he obtained possession of the fort of Asirgarh about the year A.D. 1717, and procured the junction of several officers of the province.

He was pursued from Hindūstān by the force under Dilāwar Khān and another under Alam 'Alī Khān, both of whom he defeated and slew in battle in April, A.D. 1720, and at last remained without a rival in the Deccan. In the reign of Muhammad Shāh, after the death of the two Sayyads, he was invited to court by that emperor; and on his arrival at Dehli, the high office of prime minister was conferred on him, but Nizām-ul-Mulk, being soon disgusted with the state of things at court, sent in his resignation, and marched off for the Deccan, and though he continued to send honorary presents on fixed occasions to the emperor, he thenceforth conducted himself, in other respects, as an independent prince, and governed the provinces of the Deccan for 30 years with great ability and success. He was present in the battle which took place between Muhammad Shāh and Nādir Shāh, but soon returned to the Deccan; and the present Nizāms of Haidarābād are his descendants and successors. He died on the 22nd May, A.D. 1748, 4th Jumādā II. A.H. 1161, thirty-seven days after the death of the emperor Muhammad Shāh, at a very advanced age, and was buried at Burhānpūr near the tomb of Shāh Burhān-uddīn Ghārib. He left behind him six sons, viz. Ghāzī-uddīn, Nāsir Jang, Salāhat Jang, Nizām 'Alī, Basālat Jang and Mughal 'Alī, and was succeeded in the government of the Deccan by the second, Mir Ahmad surnamed Nāsir Jang, who was present at Burhānpūr when his father died; the eldest, Ghāzī-uddīn Khān, then residing at Dehli in the office of Amīr-ul-'Umrā. Nāsir Jang was assassinated in December, A.D. 1750, and Muzaffar Jang, a grandson of Nizām-ul-Mulk, was placed on the throne and soon afterwards assassinated, in February, A.D. 1751. Salāhat Jang, by the influence of the French, was then proclaimed and reigned until A.D. 1761, when he was imprisoned, and in A.D. 1763 put to death by his brother Nizām 'Alī, who assumed the administration, and reigned till 6th August, A.D. 1803, when he died, and was succeeded by his eldest son, Mirzā Sikandar Jāh. Sikandar Jāh died on the 23rd May, A.D. 1829, and was succeeded by his son Mir Farkhunda 'Alī Khān, the late Nizām (1-58). Nizām-ul-Mulk appears to have been the author of a Diwān, which was found in the Library of Tipū Sulṭān, called Diwān 'Asaf Nizām-ul-Mulk.

[Vide Sketch of the Hist. of Hindūstān.].

Nizām-ul-Mulk Bahri (نظام الملك)

(بحری), the father of Ahmad Nizām Shāh Bahri, who was the first king of the Nizām Shāhi dynasty. Nizām-ul-Mulk was originally a Brāhman of Bijānagar, but, being taken prisoner in his infancy by the army of Sulṭān Ahmad Shāh Bahmani, was made a Muslimān, and was educated as one of the royal slaves. He finished his education under the same tutor with the king's eldest son, Sulṭān Muhammad, and became eminently learned in Persian and Arabic literature. On the accession of Sulṭān Muhammad II. to the throne of the Deccan, in A.D. 1463, he was raised to the rank of a thousand and the charge of the royal falconry was entrusted to him, on which account he was called Bahri, i.e. a falconer. By degrees he rose to the highest honours and was appointed governor of Tilangāna. On the death of Muhammad Shāh, in A.D. 1482, he by his will became first minister to his son Sulṭān Mahmūd II. who added Bir and other districts to his jāgīr. This he committed to his son Malik Ahmad, who took up his residence at Khaibar and employed himself diligently in the affairs of his government, and after his father's death set up a separate dynasty in the Deccan called Nizām Shāhi, the capital of which was Ahmadnagar. Nizām-ul-Mulk, who had the sole power of the administration in his hands, latterly paid little or no regard for the king's authority, and was murdered by the orders of the Sulṭān about the year A.D. 1486, A.H. 891, or some time afterwards.

Nizām-ul-Mulk Mahmud (نظام الملك)

(محمد), the son of Abi Sa'īd Junaidī, a general and wazīr of Shams-uddīn Altamsh, king of Dehli. He died in the reign of Sulṭāna Razia, on the mountains of Sirmor, where he had taken refuge from his enemies about the year A.D. 1238.

Nizām-ul-Mulk Muhammad (نظام)

(الملک محمد), the son of 'Alī Sayyad Junaidī, to whom the Jāma-ul-Hikayat is dedicated, was the general of Shams-uddīn Altamsh, king of Dehli. He was living in A.H. 622.

Nizari, Hakim (نزاری حکیم قهستانی), of Qohistān, a man of talents, but given to gaieties and pleasure, particularly to wine. He travelled much, and during his travels he met Sa'dī and other distinguished men. Towards the end of his life he retired from the world and lived by agriculture. He died in A.D. 1320, A.H. 720, and left, besides a Diwān, two Masnawis.

Nudar or Nuzar (نودر), an ancient king of Persia of the Pishdadian dynasty. [Vide Mauūchehr.]

Nuh I. Samani, Amir (نوح سامانی)

(امیر), the fourth king of the Samānian dynasty, succeeded his father Amīr Nasr to the throne of Khurāsān and Bukhārā in A.D. 942, A.H. 331, and died in A.D. 964, A.H. 343. His son 'Abdulmalik succeeded him.

Nuh II. Samani, Amir (نوح سامانی)

(امیر دوم), seventh king of the Samānian dynasty, surnamed 'Abū'l-Qāsim, succeeded his father Amīr Mansūr I. in March, A.D. 976, Rajab, A.H. 365. His reign was marked by extraordinary vicissitudes of fortune. He was contemporary with Subaktagin, a chief of high reputation, who had established a principality at Ghazni. He died in A.D. 997, Rajab, A.H. 387, and was succeeded by his son Mansūr II.

Nur Jahan Begam (نور جهان بیگم), the favourite Sultāna of the emperor Jahāngīr, was the daughter of the wazīr I'tmād-uddaula, whose tomb is at Āgra. She had attracted the notice of the prince Sultān Salīm (afterwards Jahāngīr). The Prince was, at the suggestion of his father, the emperor Akbar, sent on service; while, in order to withdraw the lady from the attentions of the prince, she was married to Sher Afḡān Khān, a young Persian lately come into the service, to whom Akbar gave a jāgīr in Bengal. After the death of his father, Jahāngīr appointed Qutb-uddīn Khān, his foster-brother, the son of Shaikh Salīm Chishtī, as governor of Bengal. Qutb-uddīn Khān, on his arrival at Burdwan, was slain by Sher Afḡān Khān, who was himself despatched by Qutb-uddīn's attendants. Nūr Jahān was seized and sent as a prisoner to Dehli, and was at first placed by the emperor among the attendants of his mother, but he subsequently married her in the sixth year of his reign, A.D. 1610, A.H. 1019, changed her name, which was Mehr-un-Nisā, into Nūr Jahān (the light of the world), and raised her to honours such as had never before been enjoyed by the consort of any king in Indiā. From this period her ascendancy knew no bounds; the emperor took no step without consulting her, and on every affair in which she took an interest, her will was law. A circumstance so uncommon in an Asiatic government is thus recorded on the coins of that period:—"By order of the emperor Jahāngīr, gold acquired a hundred times additional value by the name of the empress Nūr Jahān." Her father, Mirzā Ghayās or Avas, was made prime minister with the title of I'tmād-uddaula; and her two brothers were raised to the first rank of 'Umra, by the titles of Ya'taqūd Khān and 'Asaf Khān. One of the accomplishments by which she captivated Jahāngīr, is said to have been her facility in composing extemporary verses. After the death of her husband, she was treated with much respect and allowed a stipend of £250,000 a year. She survived Jahāngīr eighteen years, and died aged 72 in A.D. 1645, A.H. 1055, at Lāhore, where she was buried in the mausoleum of her husband close to his tomb, some say near the tomb of her brother 'Asaf Khān on the banks of the Rāwī, at Lāhore. Hugh Murray, in his History of British India, p. 230, by his erroneous assertion, that she was buried in the mausoleum at Āgra called the Tāj Mahal, has misguiding many others. Even so late as the year A.D. 1858, the author of the History of the Indian Revolt, page 109, says that "this was the mausoleum of Shāh Jahān and his favourite wife Nūr Jahān." [Some further particulars may be found in the Turks in India, by the present Editor.]

Nur Manzil (نور منزل), name of a garden in Āgra, built by the emperor Jahāngīr, which is now called Bāgh Dahra. There is a large well in the garden, so large that it is more like a tank.

Nur Muhammad (نور محمد سید) بداونی), a Sayyad of Bādāon, was a learned and pious Musalmān of the sect of Naqshband. He died on the 3rd August, A.D. 1723, 11th Zī-Qa'da, A.H. 1135.

Nur-uddīn Ahmad, Shaikh (نور الدین) احمد شیخ), surnamed Qutb 'Alam, which see.

Nur - uddin 'Alī, Malik Mansur

(نور الدین علی ملک منصور), the second Sultān of the dynasty of Tartar or Baharite Mamlūks in Egypt, was placed on the throne by the Amīrs after the assassination of his father Malik Mo'izz 'Azz-uddīn Aibak, A.D. 1257, A.H. 655, at the age of 15. His short reign of two years was troubled by continual feuds among the Mamlūk chieftains, and attempts on the part of the Ayyūbids, princes of Syria to recover the lost sway of their family in Egypt; and the apprehension of an irruption of the Mughals under Hālākū, who had taken Baghdad and destroyed the Khilāfat, showed the necessity of substituting a ruler of matured years and experience. The Amīr Qutuz accordingly assumed the reigns of government, A.D. 1259, A.H. 657, and no more is heard of Nūr-uddīn.

[Vide Malik Mo'izz 'Azz-uddīn.]

Nur - uddin 'Ali, Malik - ul - Afzal

(نورالدين على ملك الافضل), the eldest of the seventeen sons of Sālāh-uddīn; born A.D. 1170, A.H. 556. In the partition of his father's extensive dominions, which followed his death in A.D. 1193, Damascus and Southern Syria with Palestine fell to the lot of Nūr-uddīn; but in the dissensions which soon followed, he was stripped of his kingdom by his uncle Saif-uddīn 'Abū Bakr (the Snphudin of Christian writers), and his brother 'Usmān made Sulṭān of Egypt, A.D. 1196.

[Vide Malik-ul-Afzal.]

Nur - uddīn 'Arsalan Shah, Atabak

(نورالدين ارسلان شاه اتابك), a prince of Mosul and Mesopotamia, of the family of Zangī, and grand-nephew of the famous Nūr-uddīn, Sulṭān of Aleppo and Damascus. He succeeded his father, Azz-uddīn Mas'ūd, A.D. 1193, A.H. 589 (the year of the death of Sālāh-uddīn). During a reign of 18 years he established in some measure the declining power of his house, and compelled the minor princes of his family to acknowledge his supremacy as lord paramount. He died A.D. 1210, A.H. 607, regretted by his subjects as a mild and beneficent ruler. His son Azz-uddīn, after a reign of between seven and eight years, was succeeded by an infant son bearing the title of Nūr-uddīn Arsalān II. who survived him only a few months.

Nur-uddin bin-Lutf-ullah (نور الدين)

(بن لطف الله), better known as Hāfiz

'Abū, which see.

Nur-uddin Mahmud, Malik-ul-'Adil

(نورالدين محمود ملك العادل), one of the most celebrated and powerful of the Muhammadan rulers of Syria in the age of the Crusades, born A.D. 1117, A.H. 511, was a younger son of 'Imād-uddīn Zangī, the second of the dynasty of the Atābaks of 'Irāq and Syria. At the death of his father, who was murdered by his own Mamlūks at the siege of Jabbār, A.D. 1146, A.H. 541, Nūr-uddīn, hastening to Aleppo with the signet of the deceased prince, secured the possession of that city and of his father's Syrian dominions; while Mesopotamia, with Mosul for a capital, fell to the lot of the elder brother Saif-uddīn; and the feeble attempts of Alp Arsalān, a prince of the house of Saljūq, to assert his ancestral claims to the dominion of these provinces were easily frustrated by the combined power of the two brothers. The earliest exploits of the reign of Nūr-uddīn were in continuance of the Holy War which his father had assiduously waged against the Latin Christians of Palestine. Josceline de Courtenay, whose capital of Edessa had been taken by Zangī a few years previous, was signally repulsed in an attempt to recover it, and the Christian inhabitants, who had aided the enterprise, were put to the sword without mercy by command of Nūr-uddīn, who even levelled the fortifications of the town to prevent it ever again becoming a bulwark to the kingdom of Jerusalem. The recovery of this important fortress was the avowed object of the second Crusade, undertaken A.D. 1148, A.H. 542, under Louis VII. of France and the emperor Conrad; but of the mighty hosts which they led from Europe, only a miserable and dispirited remnant escaped the arrows of the Saljūqī Turks in their march through Anatolia to Palestine, the project of retaking Edessa was abandoned as hopeless, the siege of Damascus, which was attacked by the crusading monarchs in conjunction with Baldwin III. of Jerusalem, was foiled when on the eve of success by the address with which the minister of the Muslim prince Mujir-uddīn fomented the mutual jealousies of the Christian leaders; and this vast armament, which if properly directed might have overwhelmed the rising power of Nūr-uddīn, only served by its failure to extend and confirm it. Resuming the offensive immediately after the departure of the Crusaders, he invaded the territory of Antioch, and in a pitched battle (27th June, A.D. 1149) routed and slew the prince Raymond, whose head was sent as a trophy to the Khālif at Baghdad; and though he sustained a severe defeat in the following year from his ancient opponent Josceline de Courtenay, who surprised his camp, this disgrace was amply compensated by the captivity of that active leader, who was soon afterwards seized, while hunting, by a marauding party of Turkman, and died in confinement, while the remaining dependencies of Edessa, the fortress of Aintab, Tellbasher, Ravenden, etc., fell almost without resistance into the power of Nūr-uddīn, whose dominions now included the whole of Northern Syria. Mujir-uddīn was still the nominal ruler of Damascus and the southern portion, but the government was entirely in the hands of his wazīr Mo'in-uddīn Anār, whose daughter Nūr-uddīn had married; and after the death of this able minister the inhabitants, alarmed at the capture of Ascalon by Baldwin III. in A.D. 1153, and dreading an attack from the Christians, voluntarily offered their allegiance to Nūr-uddīn (1154) as the price of his protection. The weak Mujir-uddīn resigned his power; and sought an asylum at the court of the Khālif of Baghdad, which then seems to have been the usual retreat of deposed princes; while Nūr-uddīn, the circuit of whose realms now encompassed on all sides by land the Latin territories in Palestine, and extended to the frontiers of the Fatimite possessions in Egypt, fixed his capital at Damascus, which he raised from the ruinous state in which it had been left by an earthquake, and adorned with mosques, fountains, colleges, and hospitals. The death of Baldwin III. in A.D. 1162, released Nūr-uddin from the ablest of his antagonists, his brother and successor, Almaric, or Amaury, being far inferior to Baldwin, both in prowess and abilities. Mesopotamia, ruled by the Sulfān's nephews, acknowledged his supremacy as head of the family; he was now, by his officers, absolute master of Egypt; his name was recited with that of the Khalif Mustazī of Baghlād in all the mosques throughout his dominions, and even in the holy cities of Mecca and Medina, which Tūrān Shāh, brother of Sālah-uddin, had made dependencies of Egypt. But the power and glory of Nūr-uddin had now attained their highest pitch, and the three remaining years of his life were unmarked by any memorable achievement, and disquieted by the forebodings of the future downfall of his house by the ambition of Sālah-uddin, who, though still ostensibly acting as his lieutenant, and making public professions of loyalty and obedience, had in fact become independent master of Egypt, and eluded or disregarded all the orders of his nominal sovereign. Nūr-uddin was preparing to march into Egypt to reduce or expel his refractory vassal, when an attack of quinsy terminated his life at Damascus after a prosperous reign of 27 years on the 26th May, A.D. 1173, 21st Shawwāl, A.H. 569. His son Malik-us-Sālah Ismā'il, a youth 11 years old, succeeded to the titular sovereignty of his extensive dominions, but was speedily stripped by Sālah-uddin of Damascus and the greater part of Syria, and died 8 years afterwards, reduced to the sovereignty of Aleppo and its dependencies.

Nur-uddin Muhammad, Mirza (نور الدین محمد میرزا), son of 'Alā-uddin

Muhammad, the son of Khwāja Husain. He was married to the daughter of the emperor Bābar, named Gulrukh Begam, by whom he had Salima Sultāna Begam, who was married to Bairām Khān.

Nur-uddin Muhammad Ufi (نور الدین محمد عوفی), the author of the Jāma'-ul-Hikāyāt, a collection of historical anecdotes. This work he wrote and dedicated to Nizām-ul-Mulk Mahmūd, a general of Shams-uddin Altūsh, king of Dehli, about A.D. 1230.

[Vide Muhammad Ufi and Sadr-uddin Ūfi.]

Nur-uddin Safaiduni, Mulla (نور الدین سافیدونی), entitled Nawāb

Takhān, was a native of Jām in Herāt and brought up at Mashhad. He was a favourite companion of the emperor Humāyūn; and as the Pargana of Safaidūn had been conferred on him as jagīr, he was consequently called Safaidūni. He cut a canal from the river Jamna to Karnāl in the year A.D. 1569, A.H. 977, and named it "Shaikhū Nahr, in honour of the prince Sulfān Salīm, who was born in that year and was nicknamed by his father the emperor Akbar, Shaikhū Bābā. He was an excellent poet and has left a Diwān or book of odes. His poetical title was Nūrī."

Nur-ul-Haq, Shah or Shaikh (نور الحق شاه), surnamed Al-Mashraqī, Al-Dehlawī and Al-Bukhārī, was the son of Shaikh 'Abdul Haq bin-Saif-uddin of Dehli. He is the author of the Zuhdat-ut-Tawarikh, which is an enlarged edition of his father's history, and was composed in order that by improving the style and supplying omissions, he might render it worthy the acceptance of his patron, Shaikh Farid-uddin Bukhārī, with whom he was connected by marriage, and who under the title of Murtaza' Khān managed for some time the affairs of the empire in the reign of the emperor Jahāngir. He has also written a Sharah on the Sakh Bakhārī and Muslim. He died in the reign of the emperor 'Alamgir, A.D. 1662, A.H. 1073.

Nur-ullah Shustari, Mir (نور الله شوستری میر), who is sometimes called Nūr-ullah bin-Sharif-ul-Husaini-ush-Shūstari, was a nobleman at the court of the emperor Akbar. He is the author of the work called Majālis-ul-Mominin. This great biographical work is a mine of valuable information respecting the most notable persons who professed the Shia faith. The author has given an entire book or section (the fifth Majālis) to the lives of the traditionists and lawyers, and has specified the principal works by each learned doctor at the end of their respective histories. Nūr-ullah was a zealous Shia and suffered in the year A.D. 1610, A.H. 1019, for his religious opinions in the reign of Jahāngir.

Nur-un-Nisa Begam (نورالنسا بیگم), the daughter of Ibrāhīm Hysain Mirzā by Gulrukh Begam. She was married to prince Mirzā Sulaiman afterwards Jahāngir.

Nubat Khan, Nawab (نوبت خان)

(نواب), an officer of the reign of the emperor Akbar, whose mausoleum is in old Delhi close to the scraglio of Shāh Jahān. It was built in the year A.D. 1565, A.H. 973, and is called "Nilī Chhatrī" on account of its having a blue canopy at the top. It is now in a ruinous state.

Nusherwan (نوشیروان عادل), surnamed 'Adil or the Just (Chosroes of the Greeks), was the son of Qubād, king of Persia, at whose death, A.D. 531, he ascended the throne of that kingdom. The accounts given by Eastern and Western authors of the successes of this king in his invasions of the Roman empire, differ but very little. Some of the former have falsely asserted that he took an emperor of the Romans prisoner; and they have all, with a partiality that, in national historians writing of this monarch, seems almost excusable, passed over the few reverses which his arms sustained. But the disgraceful peace which the emperor Justinian purchased at the commencement of the reign of Nushirwān, the subsequent war, the reduction of all Syria, the capture of Antioch, the unopposed progress of the Persian monarch to the shores of the Mediterranean, his conquest of Iberia, Całchos, and the temporary establishment of his power on the banks of the Phasis and on the shores of the Euxine, are facts not questioned by his enemies. They, however, assert, that his genius as a military leader, even when his fortune was at the highest, was checked by Belisarius, who was twice sent to oppose his progress; and whose success, considering his want of means and the character of the court he served, was certainly wonderful. In all the negotiations which took place between the emperor Justinian and Nushirwān, the latter assumed the tone of a superior. His lowest servants were treated, at the imperial court, in a manner calculated to inflame the pride and raise the insolence of a vain and arrogant nation; and the impressions which this conduct must have made were confirmed by the agreement of the Roman emperor to pay 30,000 pieces of gold, a sum which could have been of no importance to Nushirwān, but as it showed the monarch of the Western world in the rank of one of his tributaries. In a second war with the Roman emperors Justin and Tiberius, Nushirwān, who though 80 years of age, still led his armies, experienced some reverses of fortune; but the perseverance and valour of the aged sovereign were ultimately rewarded by the conquest of Dyra and the plunder of Syria, A.D. 572. He died after a prosperous reign of 48 years about the year A.D. 579, and was succeeded by his son Hurmuz IV.

Muhammad, who was born during the reign of Nushirwān, A.D. 571, used to boast of his fortune in being born when so just a king reigned. This is great praise, and from a source that cannot be suspected of flattery.

Nusherwan Kirmani (نوشیروان کرمانی)

(کرمانی), an author who translated the Ardai Virāf-nāma, originally written in the Zend, into the modern Persian. Another translation was made by Zaratash Bairām in Persian prose and one in verse. This work was translated into English by Mr. J. A. Pope and published in London in 1816.

O

· · OQTA ·

Oqtai Qaan or Khan (اقتاي قاآن), the eldest surviving son of Chingiz Khān, whom he succeeded to the dominions of Tartary and Northern China, being crowned as Khāqān or emperor A.D. 1227, A.H. 624. He died by excess of wine seven months after his brother Chughtāi, about the month of January, A.D. 1242, A.H. 639. He was of a mild and generous disposition, and governed his conquered subjects with impartiality and justice. As a warrior, he was brave but prudent, and as a sovereign, equitable and benevolent. He was succeeded by his son Kayūk Khān.

death of his father, succeeded to the kingdom of Persia (vide Halākū Khān) A.D. 1259

Oodham Bai (اودهم باي), a Hindū

lady, married to the emperor Muhammad Shāh. She was the mother of the emperor Ahmad Shāh. On the accession of her son to the throne, she received the titles of Nawāb Bāi, Nawāb Qudsia, and Sāhiba Zamāni, and her brother Mān Khān was raised to the rank of 6000 with the title of Mo'taqid-uddaula.

Orkhan (اورخان), the son of Othmān or Osmān, the son of Amīr Tughral. After his father's death he made himself Sulṭān of the Turks at Brusa in A.D. 1327, A.H. 727, by the destruction of his elder brothers. He added largely to the territories of his father, and formed a body of infantry, afterwards formidable to Europe—the Yenicheri or Jannisāri. He died about the year A.D. 1359, A.H. 760, and was succeeded by his son Mūrād I. (Amarath).

PADM

Padmawati (پدماوتی), daughter of the Rāja of Ceylon, who was carried off forcibly by Ratan Sain, Rāja of Chittor, and taken away from him by Sultān 'Alā-uddin, when he conquered Chittor about the year A.D. 1303, A.H. 703. Her story called Qissae Padmāvat has been written in Persian poetry by Husain of Ghazni, and there is also a version in the Bhākha language in verse, by Malik Muhammad Jāsi. There is another in Persian prose by Rāe Gobind Munshī, who wrote it in A.D. 1652, A.H. 1062, and called it Tukfat-ul-Kulīb, which is also a chronogram for that year. In the year A.D. 1796, A.H. 1211, another translation into Urdu verse was written by two poets, the first part by Mir Zivā-uddin 'Ibrat, and the last by Ghulām 'Alī 'Ishrat.

Palas or Palash (پالاس) (the Valens of Roman history) succeeded his father Firoz I. on the throne of Persia A.D. 484. He reigned four years, and was succeeded by his brother Qubād.

Panahi (پاناہی), a celebrated poet and artist, who, says 'Ashik, "broke the pencil of the Frank painters, and by painting a single rose-leaf could metamorphose Winter into Spring."

Parhez Bano Begam (پرهیز بانو بیگم), daughter of Shāh Jahān by Kandhari Begam. She died in the year A.D. 1675, A.H. 1086.

Parsaji (پرساجی), also called

Parsārān Bhosla, the son of Rāghoji Bhosla, succeeded his father in the government of Bepār or Nāgpur in March, A.D. 1816, but being an idiot, he was soon afterwards strangled by Mādhaji nicknamed 'Apā Sāhib, who was acknowledged by the English.

Parsaram Bhao or Bhosla (پرسارام)

(پہاؤ). Vide Parsaji.

Partab or Partap Pal (پرتاب پال), present Rāja of Karauli.

Partap Singh (پرتاب سنگہ), Rāja of Rānā of Udaipur, was the son of Udai Singh, the son of Rānā Sanga. Partap Singh, who is still idolized by his countrymen for the heroism with which he repelled the attacks of the Mughals, and preserved the germ of national independence in his wild fastnesses, reigned in A.D. 1614, and recovered the greater portion of his dominions before Akbar died. He founded the capital of Udaipur.

Partap Singh (پرتاب سنگہ), eldest son of Rāja Mān Singh, the son or nephew of Rāja Bhagwān Dās Kachhwahā of Amber. He died before his father, and left a son named Mala Singh, the father of Mirzā Rāja Jai Singh.

Partap Singh (پرتاب سنگہ), Rāja of Jaipur. He succeeded his father Mādhō Singh in A.D. 1778, joined the confederacy organised by Bijai Singh, Rathore (q.v.), and shared his overthrow 1790; made peace in consequence, and died in A.D. 1803, when he was succeeded by his son Rāja Jagat Singh. Don Pedro de Silva was employed by Partap Singh as a physician, at the time when Colonel Polier visited Jaipur in search of the Vedas of the Hindūs, about the year A.D. 1788. His son or grandson Augustine de Silva, who received a pension from the Rāja of Bhatpur, died in the year A.D. 1856; his son Joseph de Silva settled at Agra, and the pension was continued to him. After the death of Jagat Singh, who died without issue, Rāja Jai Singh III. posthumous, believed supposititious, succeeded him A.D. 1818.

Partap Singh Narayan (پرتاب سنگہ)

(ناراین), Rāja of Sitāra, the son of Rāja Sāhū, commonly called Alb. Sāhib, and grandson of Rāghoji Bhosla. He was closely confined by the Peshwa Bāji Rāo. After the dethronement of Apā Sāhib, he was released from confinement and formally enthroned by the English on the 11th April, A.D. 1818, and a part of the Pūna territories assigned for his support. On the 26th September, A.D. 1819, a treaty was concluded between the British Government and the Rāja, ceding to him the districts he subsequently possessed. He violated his treaty, was deposed in 1839, and died at Benares in A.D. 1847. He left only one daughter, but was reported to have adopted Balwant Singh Bhesla as her son. His next brother having died without issue in 1821, the third brother, Shahji alias Appa Sahib, succeeded in A.D. 1839, and died 5th April, A.D. 1848, leaving no issue.

Parwana (پروانه), poetical name of Kunwar Jaswant Singh, a son of Rājā Beni Bahādur. He died in A.D. 1832, A.H. 1248.

Parwiz, Sultan (پرویز سلطان), second son of the emperor Jahāngir. His mother's name was Sahib Jamal, daughter of Khwāja Hasan, uncle of Zain Khān Koka. He was born at Kābul about the year A.D. 1590, A.H. 998, and died at Burhānpūr in his 38th year on the 28th October, A.D. 1626, 6th Šafar, A.H. 1035. At a place called Sulānpūr near Agra, on a spot of 450 bighas, he had built many splendid buildings now in ruins.

Pashang (پشنگ), an ancient king of Tūrān, and father of Afrāsiāb.

Payam (پیام), the poetical name of Mir Sharaf-uddīn, who died at Agra in the year A.D. 1753, A.H. 1166.

Payami (پیامی), the poetical name of ‘Abdul-Salām. He lived during the reign of Akbar.

[Vide Āin Translation, i. 601.; and Sprenger, p. 119.]

Pelaji or Belaji (پیلاجی), the second

Gaikowār and Rājā of Baroda. In A.D. 1721, he laid the foundation of the future greatness of Baroda on the firm foundation of a most sagacious policy. He was murdered by the Rājā of Jaudpūr while engaged in the congenial occupation of lifting some of the Rājā's property. He was succeeded by his son Damaji, who was an unworthy representative of his illustrious sire. He had the audacity to declare open war against the Peshwa while the Peshwa was unencumbered with any other quarrels, and as the result of this unequal contest he lost half of his possessions, and was forced to hold the other half himself as a fief from the Peshwa. Syaji, the son of Dauroji, was a fool, and Anand Rāo was a fool, that is, not fools in the conventional and uncomplimentary sense of the word, but literally fools—persons of weak intellect. But they were the heirs to the throne, and it was sought to make them the victims of an usurpation. The British Government was horrified at this iniquity, and they stepped in to prevent it. Afterwards, when the British were engaged in their fresh struggle with the Peshwa, Baroda sided with us. The Marhatta confederacy was broken up, and in the final settlement the Gaikowār received a large accession of territory. Anand Rāo died in A.D. 1816, and was succeeded by Saiaji Rāo. Since then we have maintained what was called by the term of the treaty our alliance with Baroda.

Peroses (پیروسیس), of the Greeks.

Perron, General (پیرن جنرل), a

French adventurer who came to India as a ship's carpenter, and was employed by Nizām ‘Alī Khān of Haidarābād under the celebrated Raymond. When on the 1st September, A.D. 1798, a treaty was concluded between the English and the Nawāb, Perron with his French troops were discharged from his service and employed by Daulat Rāo Sindhiā the Gwāliar Chief. When M. de Boigne, who had the command of the districts of Koel, Alighurh etc., left India, Perron was appointed General and succeeded him, and continued in command till Lord Lake on the 29th August, A.D. 1803, took these places, and General Perron, being defeated, went over to Lake. He subsequently returned home to France.

Phul, Shaikh (پھول شیخ), a brother of the saint Muhammad Ghaus of Gwāliar, which see. He is also called Phul Shahīd. His tomb is on a hill near the fort of Bayana.

Piari Banu (پیاری بانو), the second wife of Prince Shujāa, son of the emperor Shāh Jahān. She bore him three daughters and two sons. She was so famed for her wit and beauty, that songs were made and sung in her praise in Bengal; and the gracefulness of her person had even become proverbial. After her husband's melancholy death in Arracan she dashed her head against a stone and died, and two of her daughters poisoned themselves, while the third was married to the Rāja of that place.

Pindar Razi (پندار رازی), a poet of Roi whose proper name is Kamāl-uddin, and who lived at the court of Sultān Majd-uddaula, son of Fakhr-uddaula, about the year A.D. 1009, A.H. 400, and wrote poetry in Arabic, Persian and the Dilami language.

Pir Ali Hajwiri, Shaikh (پیر علی)

(هجوری شیخ), a native of Hajwīr, a village in Ghazni, and author of the work called Kashf-ul-Mahjāb. He died about the year A.D. 1064, A.H. 456, and is buried at Lāhore.

Pir Badar (پیر بدر), a celebrated

Musalmān saint, whose tomb is at Chitagāw in Bengal and is evidently of great antiquity. There is a stone scraped into furrows, on which, it is said, Pir Badar used to sit; there is also another bearing an inscription, which from exposure to the weather, and having on it numerous coats of whitewash, is illegible. There is a mosque near the tomb, with a slab of granite, bearing an illegible inscription, apparently from the Qurān. At a short distance is the Masjid of Muhammad Asm with an inscription conveying the year of the Hijrī 1136. (A.D. 1724).

Pir Muhammad (پیر محمد جهانگیر) was the eldest son of Juhāngīr Mirzā and grandson of Amīr Taimūr. He was sent to India some time before his grandfather, viz. in the year A.D. 1397, A.H. 799, and had already taken possession of Multān when his grandfather invaded it. He was a brave prince and his grandfather had bequeathed his crown to him, but he was at Qandahār when his grandfather died; and Khalīl Sultān, another grandson, who was present with the army, obtained the support of several powerful chiefs, and the possession of Samarqand, the capital of the empire. A contest took place between these princes, which terminated unfavourably for Pir Muhammad, who was put to death by the treachery of his own minister six months after the death of his grandfather, A.D. 1405, A.H. 808.

Pir Muhammad (پیر محمد). Vide Aghar Khān.

Pir Muhammad, Mulla, of Shirwan

(پیر محمد ملا شروانی), an officer who held the rank of 5000 in the time of the emperor Akbar. He was drowned in the river Narbada in pursuit of Bāz Bahādūr, king of Mālwa, A.D. 1661, A.H. 999.

Pir Muhammad Shah (پیر محمد شاه), a Pīrzāda or Mutwalli of the Dargāh at Saleun, who died in A.D. 1688, A.H. 1099.

Pirthi Raj (پرتھی راج), the Chauhān

Rāja of Ajmere and Dehli who, in his last battle with Shahāb-uddin Ghori in A.D. 1192, was taken prisoner and conveyed to Ghazni, where he stabbed himself, or was put to death. He is also called Pithoura. He was sung by the poet Chand (q.v.).

Pirthi Raj Rathor (پرتھی راج راتھور), a Hindū chief who held a high rank in the service of the emperor Shāh Jahān, and died in the Deccan A.D. 1656, A.H. 1066. After his death his brother Rām Singh and his son Keisri Singh were raised to suitable ranks.

in the time of 'Alamgir, and is mentioned in the Mirat-ul-Khayāl.

Pur Hasan Asfaraini (پور حسن)

(اسفراینی), a very pious Musalmān who was a native of Asfarān. He was a disciple of Shaikh Jamāl-uddin Zākīr, a contemporary of Shaikh Rāzi-uddin Alī Lālā, and a good poet, and has left a Diwān consisting of Persian and Turkish ghazals. In his Persian poems, he uses for his poetical appellation his own name, viz. Pūr Hasan, and in his Turkish compositions, Hasan Ughli.

QAAN

Qaan. Vide Khān.

Qablai Quan (قبلاۋ قآن), or Khān, more properly Qawaila Qān, Grand Khān of the Mongols and Emperor of China, was the son of Mangū Khān, emperor of Tartary, and great-grandson of Chingiz Khān. He succeeded his father about the year A.D. 1259, A.H. 655, and founded the Yücen dynasty in China. Being ordered by his father Mangū, then Khakan of the Mongols, to subjugate Corea and China, he entered China with an immense army in A.D. 1290, drove out the Tartars of the Kin dynasty and took possession of North China. In 1279 he completed the ruin of the Song dynasty by invading and subduing Southern China, so that his dominion now extended from the Frozen Ocean to the Straits of Malacca and from Corea to Asia Minor—an extent of territory the like of which had never before, and has seldom since, been governed by any one monarch. The rule of the Mughuls, hitherto severe and barbarous, changed its character in the reign of this prince, who adopted entirely the manners of the Chinese, and who is regarded, even by that people, as one of the best and most illustrious of their emperors. He died in A.D. 1294, A.H. 693. English readers will recognise the “Khubla Khān” of S. T. Coleridge.

[Vide Yule's Marco Polo.]

Qabul (قبول), the poetical appellation of Mirzā ‘Abdul Ghāni Beg of Kashmere, who was a Sūfi and a pupil of Jōyā, the brother of Gōyā. He died in A.D. 1726, A.H. 1136.

Qabus (قابوس), a prince of the house of Shamgīr, or Dashmagīr, whose capital was Rei, and afterwards Jurjān in Khurāsān. Shamgīr was succeeded by his son Bistūn, of whom nothing particular is related. But the next of this family, Qābūs, whose title was Shumā-ul-Mulk, or “the candle of the kingdom,” is celebrated for his extraordinary wisdom and learning. He was, by the instigation of his son Manūchehr, slain by his own mutinous officers A.D. 1012, A.H. 403, whose excesses he had probably desired to restrain. He was succeeded by his son Manūchehr, who submitted to the power of Sultān Mahmūd of Ghazni; but that monarch not only continued him in his family possessions, but gave him his daughter in marriage.

QADI

He died A.D. 1070, A.H. 463, and was succeeded in the government of Jurjān by his son Gilān Shāh. Qābūs is the author of several works, one of which is called Kamāl-ul-Balāghat.

Qadard (قادر), the son of Ja‘far Beg

Dāūd, and brother of Alp Arsalān of the race of Saljūk. He was installed by Tughral Beg, his uncle, in A.D. 1041, A.H. 433, and became the first Sultān of the Saljūk dynasty of Kirmān, where he reigned 32 years and died of poison in A.D. 1072, A.H. 465, by order of Malik Shāh.

The following is a list of the Sultāns of Kirmān of the race of Saljūk.

Qādar, the son of Ja‘far Beg	A.D.	A.H.
Dāūd	began	1041 433
Sultān Shāh, the son of Qādar		1072 465
Tūrān Shāh, brother of Sultān Shāh		1074 467
Īrān Shāh, son of Tūrān Shāh, a tyrant who was slain in 1100		1096 489
Arsalān Shāh, son of Kirmān Shāh, reigned 42 years		1100 494
Mughis-uddīn Muhammad, son of Arsalān		1141 536
Tughral Shāh, son of Muhammad		1156 551
Bahrām Arsalān and Tūrān Shāh, sons of Tughral, dispute succession		1169 565
Muhammad Shāh, son of Bahrām Shāh, who after the death of his father and two uncles ascended the throne of Kirmān, was dispossessed by Ma‘k Dīnār, a Turk of the tribe of Ghuz, in A.D. 1187, A.H. 583. Thus ended the Saljūk dynasty of Kirmān of the race of Qādar.

Qadir Billah (قادر بالله). Vide Al-Qādir Bill

Qadir Shah (قادر شاه), of Mālwa.

After the occupation of Mālwa by the emperor Humāyūn, that monarch had left his officers in the government of that kingdom, but shortly after his return to Agra Mullā Khān, one of the officers of the late Khilji government, retook all the country lying between the Narmada and the town of Bilisa, after a struggle of twelve months against the Delhi officers, whom having eventually subdued, he caused himself to be crowned in Mandla, under the title of Qādir Shāh of Mālwa. He reigned till the year A.D. 1542, A.H. 949, when Sher Shāh took Mālwa, and conferred the government on Shihāz Khān, his minister and relative.

Qadr Khan (قدر خان), king of Khutān, who was a contemporary of Sulṭān Mahmūd of Ghazni. He was living between the years A.D. 1005 and 1024. It is related of him that he was very fond of music, and that four bags were constantly placed round his sofa, and as he listened to the song he cast handfuls of gold and silver to the poets.

Qael (قایل), poetical name of 'Abdullah, a Persian poet

Qaeli or Qabili (قایلی), of Sabzwār, is the author of a biography or Tazkira of poets. He died in A.D. 1548, A.H. 955.

Qaem Billah (قایم بالله), Khalifa of Baghdād. Vide Al-Qaem Billah.

Qaem Jang or Qayum Jang (قایم جنگ), the son of Muhammad

Khān Bangush, Nawāb of Farrukhābād, whom he succeeded in June, o.s. 1743, Jumāda I. A.H. 1156. He made war by the instigation of the Wazīr, Nawāb Saifdar Jang, with the Rohelas of Kājer, now called Rohilkhand, after the death of their chief, 'Alī Muhammad Khān, but was defeated and slain on the 10th November, o.s. 1749, 10th Zil-bijja, A.H. 1162, and his estates confiscated by the wazīr. The principal servants of the deceased were sent prisoners to Allahābād; but his mother was allowed to keep the city of Farrukhābād and twelve small districts for the support of the family as they had been conferred on it in perpetuity by the emperor Farrukh-siyar. The occupation of the city was committed to the wazīr, who was afterwards, Rāja Nawāb Rāe, who was afterwards slain in battle against Atmār Khan, the brother of Qaem Jang, who took possession of the country.

Qambari (قنبری نیشاپوری) or Qanbari, a poet of Naishāpūr, flourished in the time of Sultān Bābar, who died A.D. 1457, A.H. 861.

Qandahari Begam (قندهاری بیگم), the first wife of the emperor Shāh Jahān. She was the daughter of Muzaḥfar Husain Mirzā Safwī, of the royal house of Persia, who was the son of Sultān Husain Mirzā, the son of Bahram Mirzā, the son of Shāh Ismā'il I. of Persia. When Akbar Shāh, in the third year of his reign, made over Qandahār to Shāh 'Abbās, king of Persia, the latter conferred the government of that province on his nephew Sultān Husain Mirzā, after whose death his son Muzaḥfar Husain succeeded him. His three brothers came to India in the 38th year of Akbar (A.D. 1592), and Muzaḥfar Husain followed them afterwards, was received by the emperor with the greatest kindness, and honoured with the rank of 5000 and the jagir of Sambhal. His sister Qandahārī Begam was married in September, A.D. 1610, Rajab, A.H. 1019, to Prince Khurram (afterwards Shāh Jahān), the son of the emperor Jahāngir, and received the title of Qandahārī Begam, because she was born at Qandahār. The year of her death is unknown. She lies buried at Agra, in the centre of a garden called Qandahārī Bāgh. The building over her tomb, which is in the vault, is converted into a dwelling place; it is a beautiful edifice, and now belongs to the Rājā of Bhartpūr.

Qaplan Beg (قپلان بیگ), of the Qunghī family, was born in India and served under Khān-Khānān in the Deccan with great distinction, and was in high favour with Juhāngir. He is the author of a Diwān and a Maṣnawī; the latter is called Māh Dost, which celebrates the loves of Rustam and Rūdāba.

Qara Arsalan (قرا ارسلان) (which signifies, in Turkish, a black lion), surnamed 'Imād-uddin, was the son of Dāūd, the son of Sukmān bin-Artak. Nūr-uddin Mahmūd was his son, to whom Sālah-uddin (Saladin) gave the city of 'Amid or Qara 'Amid in Mesopotamia A.D. 1183, A.H. 597. His name is to be found in some of our Biographical Dictionaries under Qara Arslan.

Qarachar Nawian (قراچار نوبیان), name of the yazir and son-in-law of Chāngiz Khān.

Qara Ghuz (قرا غز), a Beglarbeg of Natolia, whom our historians call Caragosses. He was impaled near Qara Hisār by Shāh Quli in the reign of Bāyazid II. emperor of the Turks.

Qara Muhammad Turkman (قرا محمد ترکمان). The Turkumāns of Asia

Minor were divided into two great tribes, the Qara Koinlū and Aqa Koinlū, i.e. the tribes of "Black and White Sheep," from their carrying the figures of these animals in their respective standards. Qara Muhammad, the founder of the first dynasty, left his small territories, of which the capital was Van, in Armenia, to his son, Qara Yūsuf, who though possessed of considerable power was compelled to fly before the sword of Timur. When that conqueror died, he returned from Egypt, and was victorious in an action with Sultān Ahmad Julāyer Ilkāni, the ruler of Baghlād, whom he made prisoner and put to death in A.D. 1410, A.H. 813. After this success he collected an army of 100,000, and was preparing to attack Sultān Shāhrukh, the son of Amir Timur, when he was suddenly taken ill and died near Tabrez in A.D. 1411, A.H. 814. He was succeeded by his son Sikandar Turkman, who was defeated by Shāhrukh in A.D. 1421, A.H. 824. Sikandar after this had several battles with Shāhrukh, but was at last slain by his son Qubād A.D. 1437, A.H. 841, when Shāhrukh added Rei to his own possessions, and gave Tabrez to Jahān Shāh, the brother of Sikandar. Jahān Shāh, after a long reign of 30 lunar years, fell in one of the first actions he fought with Uzzan Hasan, chief of the Turkumāns of the White Sheep, in November, A.D. 1467, Rabi' II. A.H. 872.

Qarmat (قروط), or Qarmata, a famous impostor, named Abū Zar, who in the year A.D. 891 became the head of a sect called Qarmati or Karamatians, which overthrew all the principles of Muhammadanism. He came from Khōziṭān to the villages near Kāfa, and there pretended great sanctity and strictness of life, and that God had enjoined him to pray fifty times a day; pretending also to invite people to the obedience of a certain Imām of the family of Muhammad; and this way of life he continued till he had made a very great party, out of whom he chose twelve apostles to govern the rest, and propagate his doctrines. Afterwards, his courage failing him, he retired to Syria, and was never heard of any more. This sect began in the Khilāfat of Al-Mo'tamid; they multiplied greatly in Arabian Irāq or Chalden, and maintained perpetual wars against the Khalīf. In the year A.D. 931, they besieged and took the city of Mecca, filled the well Zamzam with dead bodies, defiled and plundered the temple and carried away the black stone; but they brought it again in A.D. 950, and fastened it to the seventh pillar of the portico, giving out that they had both taken it away, and brought it back again, by express order from heaven. This sect was dissipated by degrees, and at last became quite extinct.

Qarmatī (قَرْمَتِي), or Qaramatian, a follower of Qarmat, which see.

Qasim (قاسم اکبر آبادی), of Āgra, author of the Zafar-nāma Akbarī, or book of the victory of Akbar Khān, the son of Dost Muhammad Khān, which he completed in A.D. 1844, A.H. 1260. It is a poem and contains an account of the late wars in Kābul by the British.

Qasim (قاسم), the poetical name of Hakim Mīr Qudrat-ullāh, who is the author of a Tazkiru or Biography of poets.

Qasim Ali Khan, Mīr (قاسم علیخان), commonly called Mīr Qāsim, was the son-in-law of Mīr Ja'far 'Alī Khān, the Nawāb of Bengal. The English, deceived by his elegance of manners and convinced of his skill in the finances of Bengal, raised him to the maṣnad in the room of his father-in-law in A.D. 1760, A.H. 1174. He, in the latter years of his government, retired to Munger, and, actuated by a keen resentment against the English for their extensive encroachments on his authority and the commerce of his country, formed the plan of throwing off their yoke and annihilating their influence in Bengal; but was deposed and defeated, in a battle fought on the Odwa Nālā on the 2nd August, A.D. 1763, 22nd Muharram, A.H. 1177, and the deposed Nawāb Ja'far 'Alī Khān was again placed on the Maṣnad. Qāsim 'Alī, impensed to madness at these reverses, fled from Munger to Patna, and there cruelly ordered the massacre of the English in his power: there were fifty gentlemen, Messrs. Ellis, Hay, Lushington, and others, and 100 of lower rank. On the 5th October they were brought out in parties, and barbarously cut to pieces, or shot under the direction of a German, named Samrū or Sombre. Munger fell to the English early in October. Patna was stormed on the 6th November, and the Ex-Nawāb Qāsim 'Alī fled to the wazīr of Audh, with his treasures and the remnant of his army. On the 23rd October, A.D. 1764, Major Carnac fought the celebrated battle of Buxar, completely routing the wazīr Shuja-uddaula's army. The following day the Mughul emperor Shāh 'Alam threw himself on the protection of the British, and joined their camp with the imperial standard of Hindūstān. The British army advanced to overrun Audh. The wazīr refused to deliver up Qāsim 'Alī, though he had seized and plundered him. Qāsim 'Alī made his escape at first into the Rohela country, with a few friends and some jewels, which he had saved from the fangs of his late ally, the wazīr, and found a comfortable asylum in that country; but his intrigues rendered him disagreeable to the chief under whose protection he resided, he was obliged to leave it, and took shelter with the Rānā of Gohad. After some years' residence in his country he proceeded to Jōdhpūr, and from thence came to try his fortune in the service of the emperor Shāh 'Alam about the year A.D. 1774, A.H. 1188, but was disappointed, and died shortly afterwards in A.D. 1777, A.H. 1191, at Kotwal, an obscure village near Dehli, unpitied even by his own family. With Qāsim 'Alī ended, virtually, the powers of the Sūbadārs of Bengal.

Qasim Ali Khan, Nawab (قاسم علیخان), (نواب), uncle to the Nawāb of Rāmpūr. He was living in Bareilly in 1869, and his daughter was murdered on the 22nd December of that year.

Qasim Anwar, Sayyad (قاسم انوار), a (سید), surnamed Ma'in-uddīn 'Alī, a great mystical poet, called from his knowledge and writings the "diver into the sea of truth," the "falcon of the transcendent plains," the "profound knower of the world of spirits," the "key of the treasury of secrecy," etc. He was born at Tabrez; and was a member of a considerable family of the tribe of Sayyad, descended from the same stock as the Prophet. In his youth he dedicated himself, under the guidance of Shaikh Sadr-uddīn Mūsā Ardibeli, to the contemplative life and deep study of the Sūfīs. He then journeyed to Gilān, where he soon acquired great fame; and subsequently went into Khurāsān. During his residence at Herāt he obtained such celebrity, and was surrounded by so many princes and learned men, his followers, that Mirzā Shāhrukh (the son of Amir Timur), moved by jealousy of the Sayyad, and attentive to the danger of the increase of the Sūfi creed, commanded him to retire from the capital. In order to mitigate the harshness of this command Baisanghar, the son of Shāhrukh, a learned and noble prince, took upon himself to make it known to the Sayyad, which he did in the most humane manner, inquiring of him, in the course of conversation, why he did not follow the counsel contained in his own verse. The Sayyad inquired in which verse, and Baisanghar immediately quoted the following:—

“Qāsim, cease at once thy lay;
Rise and take thy onward way;
Other lands having waited long,
Worthy thy immortal song;
Give the bird of paradise
What the vulture cannot prize;
Honey let thy friends receive,
To thy foes the carrion leave.”

The Sayyad thanked him, and immediately set out for Balkh and Samarquand, where he remained for a time. He afterwards, however, returned to Herāt, where, as before, he was constantly followed by great and powerful men. His death occurred in the village of Kharjard in Jām, near Herāt, where a garden had been bought for him by his disciples, in which he greatly delighted. This event took place in the year A.D. 1431, A.H. 835, and his tomb was erected in the very garden which he so much enjoyed. Amir Alisher afterwards piously endowed it. A book of Odes is the only work he has left behind, in which he uses Qāsim for his poetical name.

Qasim Arsalan (قاسم ارسلان مشہدی), of Mashhad, a poet who was a descendant of Arsalān Jūzib, a general of Sultān Mahmūd of Ghazni. He flourished in the time of the emperor Akbar, and was in great favour with that monarch. He died in A.D. 1587, A.H. 995, and has left a Diwān.

Qasim Barid Shah I. (قاسم برید شاہ) was the founder of the Barid Shāhi dynasty in the Deccan. He was a Turkish or Georgian slave, became by degrees the wazir of Mahmūd Shāh II. king of the Deccan, and assumed such power as to take upon himself the entire government of the kingdom. He treated the king as a mere pageant, and about the year A.D. 1492, A.H. 898, by the advice of ‘Adil Shāh, Nizām Shāh and ‘Imād Shāh, became entirely independent, and, leaving to the king only the town and fort of Ahmadābād Bidar, read the public prayers and coined money in his own name. After having ruled his estate for a period of twelve years, during the lifetime of his sovereign, he died in the year A.D. 1504, A.H. 910, and his son Amir Barid succeeded him in office, and assuming still greater power deprived Mahmūd Shāh of what little power had been left him by his father. Seven princes of this family have reigned since their establishment in the capital of Ahmadābād Bidar; their names are as follow:—

Qasim Barid I	began	A.D. 1492
Amir Barid		1504
Ali Barid; first who assumed royalty		1542
Ibrāhim Barid Shāh		1562
Qasim Barid Shāh II.		1569
Ali Barid Shāh II.		1579
Amir Barid Shāh II.		1602

Qasim Barid Shah II. (قاسم برید شاہ) succeeded his brother Ibrāhim Barid Shāh to the government of Ahmadābād Bidar in A.D. 1569, A.H. 977, and died after a reign of three years in A.D. 1572. He was succeeded by his son Mirzā ‘Ali Barid II. who was deposed after a reign of 27 years by his relative Amir Barid II. who ascended the throne in A.D. 1609, and was the last of this dynasty.

Quli Qutb Shah I. Sultan (قلی قطب)

(شاه اول سلطان). This prince was the founder of the sovereignty of Golkanda (Golconda). His father Qutb ul-Mulk was originally a Turkish adventurer who came to try his fortune in the Deccan and embraced the service of Muhammad Shāh Bahmani. By degrees he was promoted to high rank; and in the reign of Mahmūd Shāh obtained the title of Qutb ul-Mulk and the Tarafdāri or government of Telingāna. In A.D. 1493, A.H. 899, he received orders to besiege the fortress of Jāmkonda, and as he was reconnoitring was killed by an arrow from the walls. After his death his office and titles were conferred by the king on his son Sulṭān Quli with the territory of Golkanda, part of Telingāna, in jagir. On the decline of Bahmani authority, when 'Adil Shāh and others assumed royalty, he also in the year A.D. 1512, A.H. 918, styled himself Sulṭān of Telingāna, under the title of Quli Qutb Shāh. He was a chief of great abilities and ruled the country for a period of 50 years, 18 of which he governed Telingāna in the name of Mahmūd Shāh, and reigned as king 32 lunar years, at the end of which he was assassinated by a Turkish slave supposed to have been bribed by his son and successor, Jāmsheḍ Qutb Shāh. His death happened on Sunday the 2nd September, A.D. 1543, 2nd Jumāda II. A.H. 950. The kings of the Qutb Shāh dynasty who reigned at Golkanda, are as follow:—

1. Quli Qutb Shāh.
2. Jāmsheḍ Qutb Shāh.
3. Ibrāhīm Qutb Shāh.
4. Muhammad-Quli Qutb Shāh.
5. Muhammad Qutb Shāh.
6. 'Abdullah Qutb Shāh.
7. Abū'l Hasan.

Quli Qutb Shah II. Sultan (قلی قطب)

(قطب شاه سلطان), who is also called

Muhammad Quli Qutb Shāh, was the son of Ibrāhīm Qutb Shāh, upon whose death in June, A.D. 1581, Rabi' II. A.H. 983, he ascended the throne of Golkanda in his twelfth year. In the beginning of his reign he was engaged in war with 'Adil Shāh of Bijāpūr, with whom he concluded peace in the year A.D. 1587, giving him his sister in marriage. The air of Golkanda not agreeing with his constitution, he founded a city at about eight miles distance, which he called Bhāgnagar, after his mistress Bhāgmātī, a celebrated courtesan; but being afterwards ashamed of his amour, he changed it to Haidarābād. Shāh 'Abbās, emperor of Persia, courted his alliance, by asking his daughter in marriage for one of his sons; and Qutb Shāh, esteeming connection with so august a monarch as an honour, complied with the request. He was much esteemed for his abilities and encouraged literature; he also is the author of the work called Kullīyat Qutb Shāh, a very copious volume, containing Hindi, Dakhani, and Persian Poems, on a variety of subjects. He was the fourth Sultān of the Qutb Shāhi dynasty and reigned 31 years. He died on Saturday the 11th January, A.D. 1612, 17th Zi-Qa'da, A.H. 1020, and having no son was succeeded by his brother Muhammad Qutb Shāh.

Qusi (قوسی), poetical name of Majd-uddīn 'Alī, an author.

Qutb 'Alam (قطب عالم), a celebrated

Muhammadan saint, whose original name is Shaikh or Sayyid Burhān-uddīn, but he is commonly known by the former; he was the grandson of Makhdūm Jahāniān Sayyid Jalāl Bukhārī. He chose Gujrāt for his place of residence, and died there on the 9th December, A.D. 1453, 8th Rīl-hijja, A.H. 857. His tomb is at Batūh, six miles from the city of Ahmadābād in Gujrāt. There is a slab kept at the door of his mausoleum, which some say is stone, others think it would be wood or iron. His son, named Shāh 'Alam, was also a pious Musalmān and is likewise buried at Gujrāt.

Qutb 'Alam (قطب عالم), another

Musalmān saint, whose proper name is Shaikh Nūr-uddīn Ahmad. He was born at Lāhore, and died in the year A.D. 1444, at Pindā in Behar, where he is buried. Shaikh Hissām-uddīn, whose tomb is at Kara Mānikpūr, and who is also considered a saint, was one of his disciples.

Qutb-uddīn 'Abdul Karīm ibn-'Abdul Nur قطب الدین عبدالکریم بن

(عبدالنور) is the author of the work called Sharah Sahih Bukhārī, and of a history of Egypt entitled Tārīkh Misr. He died in the year A.D. 1333, A.H. 733.

Qutb-uddīn Aibak (قطب الدین ایبک)

king of Dehli, originally a slave of Shihāb-uddīn Muhammad Ghōrī, prince of Ghōr and Ghaznī, who raised him to high rank in his army, and in the year A.D. 1192, A.H. 588, after his victory over Pithaura, the Rāja of Ajmer, left him as his deputy in India. The same year Qutb-uddīn conquered Mirath and Dehli and extended his conquest as far as Bengal. After the death of Shihāb-uddīn in A.D. 1206, A.H. 602, his nephew Ghayās-uddīn Mahmūd, who succeeded him, sent Qutb-uddīn all the insignia of royalty, a canopy, a crown and a throne, and conferred on him the title of Sultān. On the 27th June the same year, 18th Zi-Qa'da, A.H. 602, Qutb-uddīn, having invested himself with sovereign power, ascended the throne and made his residence the capital of Dehli. His reign, properly speaking, lasted only four years, though he enjoyed all the state and dignities of a king for upwards of twenty years. He died at Lāhore by a fall from his horse in A.D. 1210, A.H. 607, and was succeeded by his adopted son, Sultān 'Arām Shāh. The Jāma' Masjid in old Dehli, which is famous under the name of Qūwat ul-Islām, and stands close to the Qutb Minār, was formerly a Hindū temple. Qutb-uddīn first converted it into a masjid, commencing the Minār as its Mazina, and afterwards Shams-uddīn Altimash and 'Ala-uddīn Khiljī made some additions to it. The following is a list of the Sultāns of the Slave (or Turk) dynasty of Ghōr who reigned at Dehli.

(قطب الدين بختيار کاکي خواجه),

a celebrated Muhammadan saint of Dehli, commonly called Qutb Shāh, and sometimes called Ushī from his native country Ūsh near Andjān in Persia. He died at old Dehli on the 27th November, A.D. 1235, 14th Rabī' I. A.H. 633. His tomb is still conspicuous in that district, and is visited by devotees. He is the author of a Diwān. Shaikh Farid-uddīn Shakar Ganj was one of his disciples.

Qutb-uddīn Khan (قطب الدين خان).

brother of Shams-uddīn Auka, entitled 'Azīm Klān. He was an amir of 5,000 in the reign of the emperor Akbar; was made governor of Bahroch, and was treacherously slain by Sulṭān Muzaḥfar, king of Gujrat, in A.D. 1583.

Qutb-uddīn Khan Kokaltash (قطب الدين خان کوکلتاش), whose original name was Shaikh Khūbau or Khūbu, was the son of Shaikh Salim Chishtī's sister, and foster-brother of the emperor Jahāngir, who raised him to the rank of 5000. He was made governor of Bengal in A.D. 1606, A.H. 1016, and was killed at Burdwān by Sher Afkan Khān, the former husband of Nūr Jahān Begam, in A.D. 1607, A.H. 1016. His remains were transported to Fathapūr Sikri and buried there.

Qutb-uddīn Mahmud bin-Muhammad

Ghurrat-ut-Tāj (Splendour of the Crown) and several other works. He died A.D. 1310, A.H. 710.

Qutb-uddīn Mahmud Langa (قطب الدين محمود لنگا), second king of Multān of the tribe of Langa, who having secured the person of Shaikh Yūsuf, his predecessor and son-in-law, sent him to Dehli and ascended the throne of Multān in the reign of Sulṭān Bahlōl Lodi. He reigned for a period of sixteen years and died much lamented in A.D. 1469, A.H. 874. He was succeeded by his son Husain Langa.

Qutb-uddīn Muhammad (قطب الدين محمد), the son of Anūshtakīn, the cup-bearer of Sulṭān Sanjar Saljūqī. He was installed by the Sulṭān about the year A.D. 1140, and became the first king of Khwārizm of the race called Khwārizm Shāhī. The following is a list of the kings of this race:—

1. Qutb-uddīn Muhammad.
2. Atsiz, the son of Qutb-uddīn Muhammad
3. Alp Arslān, the son of Atsiz.
4. Sulṭān Shāh, the son of Alp Arslān.
5. 'Ala-uddīn Takash Khān, his brother.
6. Sulṭān Muhammad, son of Takash. He was defeated by Chāngēz Khān in A.D. 1218.
7. Jalāl-uddīn, the son of Sulṭān Muhammad, and last king of this race, slain A.D. 1230.

Qutb-uddīn Muhammad Ghori (قطب الدين محمد غوری) was the son of 'Izz-uddīn Ghōrī (q.v.). He married the daughter of Sulṭān Bahram Shāh, king of Ghazni, and having founded the city of Firōzkoh in Ghōr, made it his capital, and assumed all the dignities of a sovereign. At length he was induced to attack Ghazni. Sulṭān Bahram (q.v.), obtaining intimation of his intentions, contrived to get him into his power, and eventually put him to death. This is the origin of the feuds between the houses of Ghōr and Ghazni. Saif-uddīn Sūrī, prince of Ghōr, brother of the deceased, raised an army to revenge his death, with which he marched direct to Ghazni, which was evacuated by Bahram, who fled to India. After some time Saif-uddīn was betrayed into the hands of Sulṭān Bahram by the inhabitants of Ghazni. The unhappy prince had his forehead blackened, and was seated astride on a bullock with his face towards the tail. In this manner he was led round the whole city; after which, being first put to torture, his head was cut off and sent to his uncle Sulṭān Sanjar Saljūqī, while his wazir, Sayyad Majd-uddīn, was impaled. This took place about A.D. 1159, soon after which Bahram was defeated and expelled by Saif-uddīn's brother, Ala-uddīn Rasan (q.v.).

Qutb-uddin Munnwar, Shaikh (قطب)

(الدين منور شيخ), a Muhammadan

saint of Hānsī, who was a grandson of Shaikh Jamāl-uddin Ahmad. He lived in the time of Sulṭān Firōz Shāh Bārbak, king of Dehli. He was a contemporary of the celebrated saint Shaikh Nāsir-uddin Chiragh Dehli, both of whom were disciples of Shaikh Nizām-uddin Auliya, and both of whom died the same year. Nāsir-uddin died on the 16th September, A.D. 1356, 18th Ramazān, A.H. 757, and Qutb-uddin on the 22nd November, A.D. 1356, 26th Zil-Qa'da, A.H. 757. The former lies buried at Dehli and the latter at Hānsī.

Qutb-uddin Sultan (قطب الدين)

(سلطان), also called Qutb Shāh, was the son of Muhammad Shāh, king of Gujrāt. After the death of his father in February, A.D. 1451, Muharram, A.H. 855, he ascended the throne of Gujrāt, reigned more than eight years, and died on the 25th May, A.D. 1459, 23rd Rajab, A.H. 863. He was buried in the vault of his father, Muhammad Shāh, and was succeeded by his uncle Dāūd Shāh, who reigned only a few days and was deposed.

Raghoji Bhosla I. (رگهوجي بهوسله) was nominated Senā Sahib Sabhā, or general of the Marhatta confederacy, in A.D. 1734, received a sanad from the Peshwā and became the first Rāja of Berār or Nāgpūr in A.D. 1740, in which year a great revolution took place in the Marhatta government. The Rāja of Sitūra, Rāmārāja, a weak prince, being upon the throne, it was concerted between the two principal officers of the State, Bāji Rāo the Peshwā, and Rāghōji Bhosla, the Bakhshi or Commander-in-Chief, to divide the dominions of their master. In consequence of this arrangement, the former assumed the government of the western provinces, continuing at the ancient capital of Pūna; the latter took the eastern, and fixed his residence at Nāgpūr, a principal city in the province of Berār; whilst Rāmārāja was confined to the fortress of Sitūra, the Peshwā administering the government in his name. Hence the distinction between the Marhattas of Pūna and Berār. Rāghōji was the son of Vimboji, who was killed in Audh during the lifetime of his father Parsoji, who was Bakhshi under his brother Sāhoji, the son of Sambhoji, the son of Sivaji, the founder of the Marhatta empire. Rāghōji Bhosla died A.D. 1749 or 1753, and transmitted his government to his son Jānoji, who, dying in A.D. 1772, left his inheritance to his nephew and adopted son Rāghōji Bhosla II. the son of his younger brother Madhōji. This occasioned a contention between Jānoji's brother Sāmoji and Madhōji. The former claimed the government in the right of priority of birth, and the latter as father and guardian of the adopted child. They were accordingly engaged in hostility until the death of Sāmoji or Subhoji, who was killed in an engagement with his brother on the 27th January, A.D. 1775. From that period the government of Berār was held by Madhōji or Madhūji Bhosla.

Raghoji Bhosla II. (رگهوجي بهوسله) succeeded his father, Madhōji Bhosla, in the government of Berār or Nāgpūr in May, A.D. 1788, and died on the 22nd March, A.D. 1816, when his son Parsoji succeeded him.

Raghoji Bhosla III. (رگهوجي بهوسله),

Rāja of Berār. He died in A.D. 1853, not only without heirs but without any male relations who could support a legitimate claim to the Rāj; thereupon the Governor-General quietly annexed that large country to the Company's dominions.

Raghunath Shah (رگهوناتپه شاد), of the Mandla district, who was a direct descendant of the eldest branch of the Gond dynasty, was executed in A.D. 1857 for rebellion, and his estates confiscated. Fifteen years later the Government gave his widow, Mārō Kūpwar, a compassionate allowance of 120 rupees per annum.

Raghunath Rao (رگهوناتپه راؤ), commonly called Raghōba, a Marhatta chief who was at one time much connected with the English. He was the son of Bāji Rāo Peshwā I. and father of the last Peshwā Bāji Rāo II. and paternal uncle of Mādho Rāo Peshwā II. He usurped the Peshwāship after the death of Nārāyan Rāo, youngest son of Bālāji Rāo Peshwā. On the death of Bālāji Rāo, who left two sons, Mādho Rāo and Nārāyan Rāo, both minors, the power of the state was for some years wielded by his brother Raghunāth as regent. Mādho Rāo was enabled to take the reins of government into his own hands after some time, but died in A.D. 1772, and was succeeded by his brother Nārāyan Rāo. He was soon afterwards murdered in consequence of a plot which Raghōbā had formed against him. Raghōbā was acknowledged Peshwā after his death;

but it appeared soon afterwards that the widow of Narāyan Rāo was with child. The ministers proclaimed the event during Raghubā's absence. He was defeated and fled to Surat.

Rahia (راحیه), one of the earliest professors of Muhammadanism, although he was not present at the battle of Badar. Muhammad used to say of him, that of all men he had ever seen Rahia did most resemble the angel Gabriel. He died, in the year A.D. 670, A.H. 50.

Rahim Beg, Mirza (رحیم بیگ مرزا), of Sardhāna, author of a small work on Persian and Arabic poetry entitled Maḥẓau Shudrā, which he composed in the year A.D. 1852, A.H. 1268. It is also called Wasilat-ush-Shudrā.

Rahim-uddin Bakht, Mirza (رحیم الدین بخت مرزا), and Mirzā Muhsin Bakht (princes of Delhi and grandsons of Shāh Alam), who came to Āgra from Benares when the Duke of Edinburgh came to Āgra in A.D. 1870.

Rahmat-ullah (رحمت الله), author of the history of the martyr Malik 'Umar, who is buried at Bahraich. He composed this poem 750 years after the death of the saint.

Rai Gobind Munshi (رای گوبند), a Kayeth, who is the author of the story of Padmāwat in Persian, entitled Tuḥfat-ul-Kulāb, which he wrote in the year A.D. 1652, A.H. 1062.

Raiha (رایحه), poetical name of Mir Muhammad 'Alī of Sayālkōt, who died in A.D. 1737, A.H. 1150.

Rai Indarman (رای اندرمن), a Hindū, by caste a Bais of Hisār, and author of a work called Dastūr-ul-Hisāb. He was living in A.D. 1768, A.H. 1182.

Rai Lonkaran (رای لون کرن), Rāja of Pargana of Sumbhar, lived in the time of the emperor Akbar, and died in the 11th year of Jahāngir, A.D. 1615, A.H. 1024. He was a good Persian scholar, and used to compose verses; his poetical name was Tusani. He was succeeded in his territories by his son Manohar Dās, whose poetical title, some authors say, was Tusani and not his father's. He fought on the Imperial side in the battle of Goganda, A.D. 1577.

[Vide Noer's Kaiser Akbar.]

Rai Maldeo (رای ملدیو). Vide Maldeo Rāi.

Rai Phukni Mal (رای پهنکی مل). Vide Nashāt.

Raiq (رایق), author of the biography called Tashkira Rāiq, an abstract of which was made by Sirāj-uddaula Muhammad Ghāus Khān Nawāb of the Karnatik in A.D. 1842.

Rai Rai Singh (رای رای سنگه), son of Rai Kālīan Mal Rathor, a descendant of Rāi Maldeo and zamindār of Bikaner in the time of the emperor Akbar. Rāj Kālīan Mal, with his son, served under that monarch for several years, and received his niece in marriage. Rāi Singh subsequently gave his daughter in marriage to Sulṭān Salīm, who, on his accession to the throne, conferred on him the rank of 5000. Rāi Singh died in the year A.D. 1612, A.H. 1021.

Rai Rayan Raja Bikarmajit (رای رایان راجه بکرماجیت) was the title of a Brāhman named Sundardās, who at first served under the Prince Shāh Jahān in the capacity of a Munshī. He afterwards rose by degrees to higher dignities and received the above title from the emperor Jahāngir. When Shāh Jahān rebelled against his father, Bikarmajit, who was then with the prince, fell in the battle which took place between the troops of the prince and his father about the year A.D. 1621, A.H. 1030.

Rai Sarjan Hara (رای سرجن هارا), Rāja of Ranthanbūr in the province of Āgra, lived in the time of the emperor Akbar. After his death Rāo Bhuj Harā succeeded him.

Raja Ali Khan, Faruqi (راجہ علی خان فاروقی) succeeded his brother Mirān Muhammad Khān II. in the government of Khāndesh in A.D. 1576. At this period the princes of Hindūstān, from Bengal to Sindh including Mālwa and Gujrāt, had been subdued by the victorious arms of the emperor Akbar; and Rāja 'Alī Khān, in order to avoid an unequal contest, dropped the title of king, which his brother had assumed, and wrote a letter to Akbar, begging that he might be considered as his vassal and tributary. In order to convince him of his sincerity, he sent him many rich and valuable presents. After the death of Burhān Nizām Shāh II. king of Ahmadnagar in the year A.D. 1596, A.H. 1004, the prince Mirzā Murād and Mirzā Khān Khānān, the son of Bairām Khān, marched for the purpose of subduing the Deccan. Rāja 'Alī Khān accompanied them, and was killed with many officers of distinction by the explosion of a powder tunbril, in the famous battle fought between Khān Khānān and Suheil Khān, general of the Ahmadnagar forces. His death happened on the 26th January, A.D. 1597, 18th Jumādā II. A.H. 1005, after he had reigned 21 years. His body was carried to Burhānpūr, where he was buried with due honours. He was succeeded by his son Bahādūr Khān Faruqi.

Raja Kans Purbi (راجہ کنس پوربی), a Hindū zamindār, who succeeded in placing himself on the throne of Bengal after the death of Shams-uddin II. Pūzbi in A.D. 1386, and became the founder of a new dynasty. He reigned seven years and died in A.D. 1392, A.H. 795, and was succeeded by his son Jitmal, who became a Musalmān, and assumed the name of Jalāl-uddin.

Raja Ram (راجہ رام), the brother of Sambhāji the Marhatta chief, by another mother. He succeeded his brother in July A.D. 1689. On his accession Sambhāji, in April 1689, was seized and sent to reside in one of the forts of the Karnatic, with a decent appanage, but without any power in the government, and there he continued to reside till the death of his brother (July A.D. 1689), when he was acknowledged his successor. In his time the fortress of Sitāra was taken by 'Alamgir on the 21st April, A.D. 1700, 13th Zil-Qā'da, A.H. 1111, but before it fell Rāja Rām died of the small-pox the same year at Jhinjī. He was succeeded by his son Karan, who survived him but a few days, when another son of his, named Selwa, an infant only two years old, was put on the masnad under the guardianship of Rām Chānd Pandit and regency of his mother, Tārā Bāi. But when, after the death of 'Alamgir, Rāja Sāhū or Sāhji II. was released from confinement, he was put aside, and Sāhji was crowned at Sitāra in March, A.D. 1708.

Ram Charan Mahant (رام چرن), the founder of the Rām-sañchi sect, was a Rāmāyana Banāgi born A D 1719 in a village in the principality of Jaspur. Neither the precise period, nor the causes which led him to abjure the religion of his fathers, now appear, but he steadily denounced idol-worship and suffered, on this account, great persecution from the Brahmaṇs. On quitting the place of his nativity in A D 1750, he wandered over the country, and eventually a priest to Bhiṭwāra in the Udaipur territory, where, after a residence of two years, Bihm Singh, Rāna, or prince of that state was urged by the priests to harness him to a degree which compelled him to abandon the town. The chief of Shikhpuri offered the wanderer an asylum at his court where he arrived in the year A D 1767 but he does not seem to have settled there permanently until two years later, from which time it may be proper to date the institution of the sect. Rām Charan expired in April A D 1799 in the 79th year of his age and his corpse was reduced to ashes in the great temple of Shikhpuri. Rām Charan composed 36250 Shabds or hymns, each containing from five to eleven verses. He was succeeded in the spiritual directorship by Rāmpur, one of his twelve disciples. This person died at Shikhpuri in A D 1809 after a reign of 12 years 2 months and 6 days. He composed 18 000 Shabds. The third hirach, Dulha Rām, succeeded him and died in A D 1824. He wrote 10 000 Shabds, and about 4000 Saki or epic poems, in praise of men eminent for virtue not only of his own faith, but among Hindus, Muhammadans, and others. After him Chitra Das succeeded the gaddi, and died in A D 1831. He is said to have composed 1000 Shabds, but would not permit their being committed to paper. Nārāyan Dās, the fourth in descent from Rām Charan, succeeded him, and was living in A D 1835.

Ramjas Munshi (رام جس منشي) whose poetical name was Muhit, was a Khatiri by caste, and his father Lalā Gangā Bishun, whose poetical title was 'Ajaz, resided at Lāhore, but Muhit was born in Delhi. He obtained an appointment in the Customs Department at Benares, which gave him 1200 rupees a year. He is the author of several Masnawis, such as Muhit-i-'Ishq, Muhit-i-Dard, Muhit-i-Sha'm, etc. He also translated some books on mysticism from the Sanskrit, as Muhit-ul-Haqiqat, Muhit-ul-'Ishq, Gulshan-i-Ma'rifat, Muhit Ma'rifat, etc.

Ramji (رامجي), son of Rāja Bhagwān

Dās, the uncle of the celebrated Rāja Mān Singh. He, together, with his two brothers Bijū Rām and Sivām Rām, was crushed to death under the feet of an elephant, by order of the emperor Jiahangu in the early part of his reign.

Ram Mohan Rai (رام موهن رای), afterwards Rāja Rām Mohan Rai a Brahman of a respectable family in Bengal was early celebrated for his precocious genius, high linguistic attainments and other natural gifts which in his after life procured for him the reputation of a reformer. Among several other reforms the degenerate state of Hinduism demanded his earliest attention, and he, with his wonted zeal and assiduity took upon himself to introduce a reform which at the risk of his purse and reputation he succeeded in a great measure in effecting among his former co-religionists. His object was to reconstruct and vivify the old Hinduism, and not to abandon it altogether, as some of the modern reformers propose. He picked up axioms and precepts from the Vedic Dogmas, and Upanishads, which he thought most appropriate and instructive, but never accepted them as revelations. He likewise borrowed rules and precepts from other religions, but more particularly from Christianity. His originality of mind, his natural logical powers, his mastery of mental and moral philosophy, and above all his ardent desire to establish the true knowledge of God among his countrymen, made him discard all the prevailing religions of the world as revelations. When in England, the Rāja always attended the Unitarian church and much approved of its doctrines. He embarked for England and arrived at Liverpool on the 8th April, A D 1831, and died at Stapleton Grove near Bristol, while on a visit to that country, for the purpose of giving information and promoting the interests of his countrymen by advocating a more liberal intercourse with India. After his death his followers in Bengal strictly adhered to the faith, and multiplied in number by thousands. The works of Sh W Hamilton and Bishop Berkeley have also become their guides in points of philosophy. In a word the Brahmins are neither idolaters, as considered by some, nor infidels, as supposed by many. Rāja Rām Mohan translated the Upanishads of the Yajur Veda, according to the Comment of Sankar Achārya, into English, establishing the unity and incomprehensibility of the Supreme Being, whose worship alone can tend to eternal beatitude. A translation of the Vidant (an abridgment of all the sacred writings) in Hindustāni and Bengali, was made by this Hindū philosopher and philanthropist. The Rāja also published an abstract of it in English. His tomb is in Arno's Vale cemetery in Bristol.

Rām Narain, Rāja (رام ناراین). He was deputy governor of Bībār in the time of Mir Jā'far 'Alī Khān, the Nawāb of Bengal, and was driven out of Patna by the Shazādō 'Alī Gauhād (vide Shāh Alam) in 1760. Mir Qāsim 'Alī, on his accession to the masnad in A.D. 1760, A.H. 1171, having detected embezzlements of large sums from the revenues, the jāgirs, and pay of the troops, confiscated his effects. About seven lakhs of rupees in money and goods were found in his house, and nearly the same sum was recovered from persons to whom it had been entrusted by himself and his women. He was then kept in confinement with several others on suspicion. In August, A.D. 1763, Muhurram, A.H. 1177, a few days before Mir Qāsim 'Alī's defeat by the English on the banks of the Umda nala, he commanded these persons to be put to death, and Rāja Rām Nārāyan was drowned in the Ganges with a bag of sand tied round his neck. Rām Nārāyan was a Persian scholar and wrote poetry in Persian and Urdu, having adopted the word Mauzūn for his poetical name.

Ramraj (رام راج), a Rāja of Bijānagar or Bijaināgar, who was slain in battle against the four Muhammadan princes of the Deccan. This celebrated action took place on the banks of the Krishnā river on Friday the 25th January, A.D. 1565, 20th Jumādā II A.H. 972. It cost Rāmraj his life, and ended in the defeat of the Hindū army with the loss of nearly one hundred thousand men. Rāmraj, being defeated, was taken prisoner and brought before Husain Nizām Shāh, who ordered his head to be struck off, and caused it to be placed on the point of a long spear to be displayed to the army; and afterwards kept at Bijāpūr as a trophy.

Ramraja (رام راجه) succeeded Sāhji

II. as Rāja of Sitāra in December, A.D. 1749. He was the adopted son of Sāhji and grandson of Tarā Bāi. He died on the 12th December, A.D. 1777, having a short time before his death adopted Abha Sāhū, the son of Trimlakji Bhosla. This adopted son was formally enthroned under the title of Sāhū, but was always kept a close prisoner by the Peshwā.

Rām Singh (رام سنگه), name of the Rāja of Kōjā and Būndī (A.D. 1858).

Ram Singh Hara (رام سنگه هارا) and Dalpat Rāo Bundela, two Hindū chiefs who served under the emperor 'Alamgir in the military capacity, and were both killed at the same instant by a cannon shot in the battle which ensued between 'Azim Shāh and his eldest brother Bahādūr Shāh, on the 8th June, A.D. 1707, 18th Rabī' I. A.H. 1119.

Ram Singh I. (رام سنگه راجه), Rāja of Jaipur. He was honoured, after the death of his father, Rāja Jai Singh I. by the emperor 'Alamgir in A.D. 1666, with the title of Rāja, and put in possession of his father's territories. His son, Bishun Singh, succeeded him after his death about the year A.D. 1675.

Ram Singh Munshi (رام سنگه منشی), author of a collection of letters entitled Gulshan Ajāib, written in A.D. 1716, A.H. 1128.

Ram Singh Rathor (رام سنگه راتھور), son of Abhai Singh, Rāja of Jodhpūr. He poisoned Bakht Singh, his uncle, and usurped the throne. At his death, A.D. 1778, disorganization prevailed in Mārwār, promoted by the Mahrattas (who then got footing in Rājputāna) and by the evils generated by its feudal institutions. At Tonga, however, the Rathors defeated De Bonge, the celebrated general of Sindhiā; but they were crushed at the subsequent battles of Pātān and Mairta under their reigning prince Bijai Singh.

Ram Singh Sawai II. (رام سنگه سواہی), late Rāja of Jāipur, son of Jai Singh III. was born a few months before the death of his father, whom he succeeded in January, A.D. 1834. He became a member of the Governor-General's Council in A.D. 1869.

Rana Amar Singh (رانہ امر سنگه), the son of Rānā Partāp Singh of Chittor. He rebelled against the emperor Jahāngir for some time, but was at last compelled by force of arms to acknowledge fealty to the throne of Delhi. The emperor ordered to be cut in marble the images of Amar Singh and his son Qaran, which, when finished and brought to him, he took to Agra and placed in the garden seat called Jharokha Darshan, where the people assembled every morning to pay their respects to the emperor. Amar Singh died in A.D. 1619, A.H. 1029, but the statues were made while he was living.

Rana Karan (رانا کرن), son of Amar

Singh, the son of Rānā Partāp Singh, the son of Rānā Udai Singh, the son of Rānā Sankā. He succeeded his father Amar Singh in the rāj of Udaiyūr, A.D. 1619, and died in the first year of the reign of Shāh Jahān, A D 1678, when his son Rānā Jagat Singh succeeded him, and was honoured by the emperor with the title of Rana and rank of 5000 Jagat Singh died A D 1682, and was succeeded by his son Raj Kunwar, who received the title of Rāna Raj Singh

Rana Sanga or Sanka (راڻا سانگا),

Raja of Chittor His son Uda Singh is the founder of the state now known by the name of its capital Udaipur (formerly called Mewar) The Udaipur chieft is in the estimation of all the Hindu dynasties of India per excellence the head without a rival and free from stain It is true that the independence of the great Ranas of Chittor was rescued by the Moguls and that they succumbed to circumstances but they never acknowledged a superior in birth or descent The family dates back upwards of a thousand years Chittor was captured by Akbar (q t), but the conquest was but a barren slaughter it was in A D 1614, in the reign of the emperor Jahan, that the house was first compelled by force of arms to surrender that complete independence it had then maintained for eight hundred years, and to acknowledge fealty to the throne of Delhi In A D 1612 we first hear of the renowned Rana Singh of Chittor His army consisted of 50,000 horse supported by 300 war elephants Seven Rajas of the highest rank, and 113 of inferior note, attended his stirrup in the field The Rajas of Jaipur and Mārwār served under his banner and he was the acknowledged head of all the Rajput tribes In A D 1527 he espoused the cause of the dethroned dynasty of Delhi All the princes of Rajputana joined themselves under his banner, and he advanced with 100,000 men to drive Babar across the Indus The encounter took place at Bina, where the advanced guard of the Moguls was totally routed by the Rajputs Babar eventually put Rana Singh to flight 16th March, A D 1627, and he soon afterwards died (A D 1528) In A D 1668 Uda Singh, the son of Rana Sangā, came under the displeasure of Akbar He fled and left the defence of his capital, Chittor, to Raja Jaisal, who was killed by Akbar himself His death deprived the garrison of all confidence, and they determined to sell their lives as dearly as possible. The women threw themselves on the funeral pile of the Raja, and the men rushed frantically on the weapons of the Moguls, and perished to the number of 8000 In A D 1614 Partap Singh was Raja He had recovered the greater portion of his dominion before Akbar died In A D 1678, Aurangzib marched against Udaipur and succeeded in subjugating it, but the alienation of the Rajputs from the Moguls was now complete, and never changed The great boast of the chiefs of Udaipur is, that their house never gave a daughter to the Mogul zanana Jaipur and Jodhpur did so, and gloried in these imperial alliances as conferring additional dignity on their families

Randhir Singh, Raja (رندھیر سنگہ), of Kapurthalla, was the son of the Aljwal chieftain near Jalandhar, in the Punjab, who claimed equal rank with Maharaja Ranjit Singh, but whose fortune diminished as that of his rival increased. During the disturbances of A.D. 1837, he rendered excellent service to the State in and around Jalandhar, for which he was rewarded, though with no very liberal hand. He married a Christian wife.

Rangin (ریگن), takhallus of Sa'adat Yar Khan, who is the author of a poem called Mehr-uz-Mah, a story of the Sayyid's son and the jeweller's daughter, who lived at Delhi in the reign of Jahangir. He is also the author of several Diwans and also of a curious Diwan in Urdu, rather indecent in which he has brought in all the phrases of the women of the neighbourhood of Delhi and Lucknow. He died in October, A.D. 1813. Jumādī II A.H. 1201, aged 80 years.

Ranjit Singh (رنجیت سنگہ), the Jāt Rāja of Bhartpur, was the son of Kehri Singh, the brother of Ritau Singh and Jawahir Singh, the sons of Surajmal Jat, the founder of the principality. He succeeded his uncle Raja Nawab Singh in A.D. 1776. A.D. 1190. He was despatched by Sindhu to rouse the siege of Agra, near which a bloody battle was fought on the 16th June, A.D. 1788, 12th Ramadan, A.H. 1202, in which Isma'il Beg was completely defeated with the loss of all his cannon baggage, and stores. He was succeeded by his son Randhir Singh.

Ranjit Singh, Maharaja (رنجیت سنگہ), the Sikh ruler of the Punjab and faithful and highly-valued ally of the British Government, was the son of Maha Singh, and appeared as a leader, first in 1779, and obtained investiture as Chief of Lahore from the Afghan ruler Zaman Shah in A.D. 1799. At his death, which happened on the 27th June, 1839, minute guns corresponding with the years of the fortress were fired from the ramparts of the forts of Delhi, Agra, Allahabad and all the principal stations of the army. Four of his Ranis and seven slave girls burnt themselves with his corpse. He was succeeded in the Raj by his eldest son, Kharag Singh.

The following are the names of his successors.

Ranoji Bhosla (رابوچی بھوسلہ). Fido
Jānoji Bhōslā

Ranoji Sindhia (رابوچی سمندھیہ), the founder of the Sindhia or "Sindhāa" family of Gwalhar was born at Patli near Puna, and served first under a chief, who commanded the bodyguard of Bajī Rāo, the first Peshwa. From this inferior station he gradually rose, and afterwards accompanied the Peshwa in the expedition which was undertaken at the close of the reign of Raja Sahaji against the province of Malwa. This province was afterwards divided into three parts of which the first was allotted to Bajī Rāo the Peshwa, the second to the Raja of Sitara, the third to the family of Holkar. As a reward for the services which Ranoji rendered in the expedition against Malwa, the Peshwa granted a considerable portion of the shares belonging to himself and to the Raja of Sitara to Ranoji, which grant was afterwards confirmed in jagu to his descendants, now the Rājas of Gwalhar. He died in A.D. 1750 and left five sons, viz. Jaiji, Jotaji, Pattaji, Madhoji and Jokaji. Jaiji succeeded his father and was assassinated in his tent in A.D. 1769, his brother Madhoji succeeded him and although illegitimate was confirmed in the jagir by Mādhō Rāo Peshwa. He was the most powerful of the native princes of that day. He died at Puna in A.D. 1794 and was succeeded by his grandnephew and adopted son Daulat Rāo Sindhia, then only 13 years of age; the latter married the daughter of Sherji Rao Chitkar, and died on the 21st March, A.D. 1827.

Rashid (رشيد), or Ibn Raschid or Averroes. Vide Ibn-Rashid.

Rashid (رشيد) (Pasha), a celebrated Turkish Statesman, was born at Constantinople about A.D. 1802. Though a Turk, he was one of the most enlightened men of his time, and was well versed in foreign languages, general literature and science. He died 7th January, A.D. 1858. He was 52 years of age, and filled the position of grand vizier at the time of his death. He was known to Europeans as Ridschid Pasha.

Rashidi of Samargand (رشیدی), or of Balkh, surnamed

Watwat a poet celebrated for his ready wit and smallness of stature. He was a descendant of Umar Khattab and a native of Balkh, but brought up at Samargand. He flourished in the time of Sultan Atsiz, son of Khwarizm Shah, one of the Sultans of Khwarizm. He was a contemporary of Anwari, and was in the fort of Ilizai Asp while besieged by Sultan Sinjar in whose service Anwari was. During the siege the two poets wrote very bitter satires against the parties of each other, which they exchanged by means of arrows, but the tort being at length taken, Watwat was made prisoner. He was, however, released at the intercession of Anwari, and they both became intimate friends. He was called Watwat, which is the name of a small animal on account of his being of a small stature and thin in body. He died in the year A.D. 1182 A.H. 576 in the time of Sultan Shih the son of Arslan the son of Atsiz aged 97 years at Jurjania in Khwarizm. He is the author of the Mishab Sharif, an extensive collection of poems on various subjects and different metres also of several other works, one of which is called Hadiqat-ush-Shah. He is also called Rashid-uddin Abdul Fihl Watwat Umari. His Diwan contains 12,000 verses.

Rashid Mehrban (رشيد مهربان), a man who was the leading Zoroastrian inhabitant of Yazdan Behran, and enjoyed the confidence of the Shah of Persia. He was assassinated by the Muslims at Yazdan on the 26th November, 1874.

Rashid-uddin Amir (رشيد الدين امير), whose full name is Fazel-ullah Rashid-uddin ibn Imad-uddaula, Abul Khau-ibn-Miwaqqiq-uddaula. He was author of the Jumma-ul-Tauarikh, or collection of histories, which he completed in A.D. 1310, A.H. 710, and deposited in the mosque constructed by him at Tabriz. He was born in the city of Hamdan in A.D. 1247, A.H. 645, was by profession a physician, and it was probably from skill in the science of medicine that he procured office under the Tartar Sultans of Persia. He passed part of his life in the service of Aba Khan, king of Persia. At a subsequent period Qhasan Khan, who was a friend to literature, appointed him to the post of wazir in A.D. 1298, A.H. 697, in conjunction with Sa'd-uddin, who became his enemy. Rashid-uddin was maintained in his office by Aljaitu, surnamed Khuda Banda, the brother and successor of Ghazan Khan, and was treated by him with great consideration and rewarded with the utmost liberality. Rashid-uddin, in his first rupture with Sa'd-uddin, was compelled in self-defence to denounce him, and to cause him to be put to death. Amir 'Ali Shah Juban, a person of low origin, was appointed Sa'd-uddin's successor at Rashid-uddin's request, but they soon fell out, and shortly after the death of Aljaitu, who was succeeded by his son Sultan Abu Sa'id, Amir 'Ali Shah was so far successful in prejudicing the Sultan against the old minister, that he was removed from the vizarat in A.D. 1317, A.H. 717. A short time afterwards he was recalled, but it was not long before he again lost favour at court, and was accused of causing the death of his patron, Aljaitu Khan. It was charged against him that he had recommended a purgative medicine to be administered to the late king, in opposition to the advice of another physician, and that under its effects the king had expired. He was condemned to death, and his son Ibrahim, the chief butler, who was only 16 years old, and by whose hands the potion was said to have been given to the king, was put to death before the eyes of his parent, who was immediately afterwards cloven in twain by the executioner. His head was borne through the streets of Tabrez, and proclaimed by the public crier as the head of a Jew. Rashid-uddin was 73 years old when he died, and his death occurred on the 19th July, A.D. 1318, 13th Jumada I. A.H. 718. His eldest son, Ghuyas-uddin, was subsequently raised to the same dignities as his father, and met with an equally tragical death. Besides the Jama'-ut-Tawarikh, Rashid-uddin composed several other works, such as the Kitab-ut-Tauzhat, Miftah-ut-Tafsir, and the Risalat-us-Sultaniat (vide Fazl-ullah). The body of Rashid-uddin was buried near the mosque which he had constructed in Tabrez, but by a strange fatality it was not destined to repose quietly in this its last asylum. Nearly a century after his death, the government of Tabrez, together with Azurbaijan, was given by Timur to his son Miran Shah. This young prince, naturally of mild disposition, had become partially deranged in consequence of an injury of the head occasioned by a fall from his horse, and one day, during a temporary access of madness, caused the bones of Rashid-uddin to be exhumed, and they were finally deposited in the cemetery of the Jews.

Rudaki (رودکی), a celebrated Persian poet and musician who flourished in the reign of Amir Nasr, the son of Ahmad Sāmānī, and though born blind, soon attained, from the superiority of his genius, the highest rank at the court of that liberal ruler. History, indeed, gives no instance of a poet so honoured. His establishment was raised by Nasr to a level with that of the proudest nobles, and we may conjecture the style in which Rudaki lived, when assured that he was served by two hundred slaves, and that his equipment was conveyed, when he attended his patron in the field, by four hundred camels. He turned the Arabic translation of Pilpay's Fables into modern Persian verse in A D 925, A H 313, and received from his royal master a reward of 40,000 dirhams. He is the first who wrote a Diwān or book of Odes in Persian. His original name is Farid-uddin 'Abū 'Abdullāh, but he assumed the title of Rudaki from Rudak, the place of his birth in Samargand or Bukhārā. His death happened in the year A D 964, A H 343.

Sa'adat 'Ali Khan, Nawab (سعادت)

(علی خان نواب), surnamed Yeman-uddaula, was raised to the musnad of Audh at Lucknow by Sir John Shore, Governor-General, after the death of his brother Nawāb 'Asaf-uddaula, and the dethronement of that Nawāb's adopted son Wazīr 'Ali Khān, on the 21st January, A.D. 1798, 4th Shubhān, A.H. 1212. He died, after a reign of nearly 17 years, on the 11th July, A.D. 1814, 22nd Rajab, A.H. 1229, and was succeeded by his son Ghāzi-uddīn Haidar, who was afterwards crowned king of Audh. In the treaty with Sa'adat 'Ali Khān, the annual subsidy was fixed at 76 lakhs of rupees and the English force in Audh at 10,000 men. The fort of Allahābād was also surrendered to the English. Twelve lakhs of rupees were to be paid to the English as compensation for the expense of placing him on the musnad, and he was restrained from holding communication with any foreign state, employing any Europeans, or permitting any to settle in his dominions, without the consent of his British ally.

Sa'adat Khan (سعادت خان برهان)

(الملک), styled Burhān-ul-Mulk, whose former name was Muhammad Amīn, was originally a merchant of Khurāsān. He is the progenitor of the nawābs and kings of Audh. His father, Nasir Khān, came to India during the reign of Bahādur Shāh, and after his death Muhammad Amīn came also. At the commencement of the emperor Muhammad Shāh's reign he held the faujdārī of Bayāna, and was in the year A.D. 1724, A.H. 1136, appointed governor of Audh with the title of Sa'adat Khān, in the room of Rāja Girdhar, who was appointed governor of Mālwa. He afterwards received the title of Burhān-ul-Mulk and was present in the battle with Nādir Shāh, dying on the night previous to the massacre of Delhi by that monarch, i.e. on the 9th March, A.D. 1739, 9th Zil-hijja, A.H. 1152; he was buried at Delhi in the mausoleum of his brother Sayādāt

SA'AD

Khān. His only child was a daughter, who was married to his nephew Abū'l Mansūr Khān Safdar Jang, the son of Sayādāt Khān, who succeeded him in the government of Audh.

Sa'di, Shaikh (سعدی شیرازی), of Shiraz, a celebrated Persian poet, whose full appellation was Shaikh Mas'ud-uddin Sa'di-al-Shirazi. He was born at Shiraz about the year A.D. 1175, A.H. 571, and died in A.D. 1292, A.H. 691, aged 120 lunar years.

During his youth he served as a soldier both against the Hindus and the Crusaders, by the latter he was taken prisoner, and obliged to work at the fortifications of Tripoli, whence he was liberated by a person who gave him his daughter in marriage but the lady was of so bad a temper that the poet complained he had exchanged his slavery for a worse bondage. He was a great traveller, and made the pilgrimage to Mecca fourteen times.
He was a disciple of the venerated Sufi,
'Abdul Qadir Gilani, or, at least, adopted his opinion. His tomb is still to be seen in the neighbourhood of Shiraz. Besides the Gulistan and Bostan, he is the author of a large collection of odes and sonnets. There is likewise a short collection of poetical pieces attributed to him called Al-Khabsat or the book of Impurities. The author, however, seems to have repented of having written these indecent verses, yet endeavours to excuse himself on account of their giving a relish to other poems,
'as salt is used in the seasoning of meat.'
His works, all of which are held in high estimation, are the following —

A Preice	Ruba'iyat
Majalis Khan	Jardiat
Resala Shih Drwan	Ghazaliyat
Gulistan	Mukalliat
Bostan	Murakkabat
Pand-nama	Al-Khabsat
Qasaid Arifi	Tarjamat
Qasaid I'isai	Kitab-al-Badi'a
Marasi	Kitab I'yobal
Mulamma at	Al-Khawarim
Muzahabat

A very good edition of Sa'di's works was published in Calcutta by Mr Harrington, with an English Preface containing memoirs of the author and many interesting anecdotes, and Mr Gladwin translated some of his works, including the Gulistan. From the late Mr E. B. Eastwick, (C. B.), we have another English version of the Gulistan. Jami calls Sa'di the Lightingale of the Groves of Shiraz

Sahji (or Sahuji Bhosla I.) (ساهجی یا)

(ساهوجی), a Marhatta chief who rose to considerable rank in the time of Malik Ambar, an Abyssinian chief of Ahmadnagar. He afterwards entered the service of the king of Bijāpūr and was continued in his jāgir, which had fallen to that state in the partition of the Ahmadnagar territory. He was subsequently employed on conquests to the southward, and obtained a much more considerable jāgir in the Mysore country, including the towns of Sira and Bangalore. When at a great age he was killed by a fall in hunting, about the year A.D. 1664. He was the father of the celebrated Sewājī, who, though the son of a powerful chief, began life as a daring and artful captain of banditti, ripened into a skilful general and an able statesman, and left a character which has never since been equalled or approached by any of his countrymen. Sāhji, in consequence of some dispute with his first wife, separated from her and married Toka Bāi, by whom he had Ekōjī, who afterwards became king of Tanjore.

List of the family of Sewājī or Rājas of Sitāra.

[Vide Grant-Duff's History of the Marhattas.]

Sahji (Sahuji or San Bhosla . II.)

(ساهجی ساهوجی) یا سار, the son of Sambhājī, the Marhatta chief, after whose death in A.D. 1689, 15th Muharram, A.H. 1101, he (though then an infant) was acknowledged as Rāja, and his uncle Rāja Rām nominated to be regent during his minority; but when subsequently the infant Rāja fell into the hands of 'Alamgir and was confined, Rāja Rām proclaimed himself Rāja on the ground of the captivity of his nephew. In his time the fort of Sitāra was taken by 'Alamgir on the 21st April, A.D. 1700, 13th Zi-Qa'da, A.H. 1111, but, before it fell, Rāja Rām had died of the small-pox at Jhunjī, and had been succeeded by his son Sewā, a child of two years, under the regency of his mother Tārā Bāi, the widow of the deceased. After the death of 'Alamgir, Sāhji was released from confinement by 'Azim Shāh, and was acknowledged by the Marhattas as their principal chief, and crowned at Sitāra in March, A.D. 1708. During his reign the Marhattas, having overrun and plundered almost every part of Hindustān, excepting Bengal, extended their territories from the Western Sea to Orissa, and from Agra to the Karnātik, forming a tract of nearly one thousand miles long by seven hundred wide. Sāhu had lost the old Marhatta vigour during his long captivity; and his minister, the Peshwā Balājī Bishwanāth, gained such an ascendancy over the mind of his master as to persuade him to delegate the exercise of all authority and power in the state to himself. During the latter part of his reign Sāhji shut himself up in Sitāra, and his person and government were almost forgotten. Sāhu died (some time after the death of Nizām-ul-Mulk) about the month of December, A.D. 1749, after a reign of 50 years. He was succeeded by his adopted son, Rām Rāja, the grandson of Tārā Bāi, power resting with the minister or Peshwā. Before his death he entrusted the Peshwā with the sole management of the Marhatta empire, and directed that Kolhāpūr, then governed by Sambhājī, the son of Rāja Rām, should be always considered as an independent kingdom. The headship of the Marhatta tribes passed permanently to the Peshwās from this time.

Sahu (ساهو), also called Abba Sāheb, was the son of Trimbājī Bhosla, and adopted the son of Rām Rāja, whom he succeeded on the masnad of Sitāra on the 12th December, A.D. 1777. He was always kept a close prisoner. After his death, his son Partāp Singh succeeded him.

Saib Mirza (صایب مرزا), the poetical name of Mirzā Muhammad 'Alī of Tabrez, a celebrated poet of Persia, who, in the latter part of the reign of the emperor Jahāngīr, came to India as a merchant. He became intimate with Zafar Khān, a nobleman of the court, who, being appointed governor of Kashmere in those days by Shāh Jahān, took him along with him to that country. From Kashmere he returned to Isfahān, where he was honoured with the title of Malik-ush-Shu'arā, or the king of poets, by Shāh Abbās, king of Persia. He wrote Ghazals in an entirely new style, and may therefore be considered as the founder of the new school. He died in A.D. 1669, A.H. 1080, and was buried at Isfahān. His Diwān in Persian contains 80,000 verses.

Salah-uddin Yusuf (صالح الدین یوسف), the son of Ayyūb (the same who is called by Christian writers Saladin), a celebrated Sultān of Syria and the first king of Egypt of the Ayyūbite family, equally renowned as a warrior and legislator. He was of Kurd extraction, and born at Tahrāt, in Mesopotamia, about A.D. 1137. He rose in the service of the Fātimite Khalifs of Egypt, and conducted operations against the Syrians under Nur-ul-din (q.v.), on whose death he became Sultān of Egypt and Syria. He had all the qualities of his position, and the influence of his amiable character prevailed against the united efforts of the chief Christian potentates of Europe, who carried on gratuitous attacks against him, under the false appellation of Holy Wars. In A.D. 1187 he overthrew the Crusaders at Tiberias, and followed up the victory by capturing Jerusalem, their capital. He was, however, no mere soldier, as some of his public works, still extant, are enough to show. He reigned over Egypt and Syria from A.D. 1173 to A.D. 1193, A.H. 568 to A.H. 588, and in the year following he died at Damascus, leaving seventeen sons, who divided his extensive dominions. He was succeeded by his son Malik-ul-'Aziz 'Usmān in the government of Egypt, but as none of his successors possessed the enterprising genius of Sālāh-uddin, the history of Egypt from that time to the year A.D. 1250 affords nothing remarkable. At this time the reigning Sultān, Malik-al-Sālāh, was dethroned and slain by the Mamlūks, a kind of mercenary soldiers, who served under him. In consequence of this revolution the Mamluks became masters of Egypt, and chose a Sultan from among themselves

Salghar (سلغر), from whom the Atābaks of Fārs were descended, was a Turkish general in the service of the Saljuq kings, and was entrusted with the charge of one of the princes of that race and appointed to the government of Fārs and some adjoining provinces. Salghur managed not only to keep his government during his life, but to transmit it to his descendants, seven of whom held Fārs as governors, viz. —

- 1 Maudud, the son of Salghur
- 2 Farān-Shubān-Karra, who received the government from Alp Arslan, rebelled, but was subdued by Nizām-ul-Mulk, the prime minister of the Sultan
- 3 Ruku-uddaula
- 4 Atabak Jalāl-uddīn Jawālī
- 5 Atabak Kutāya, who built a college at Shirāz, and a palace called Taht Kutāya
- 6 Atabak Mankus
- 7 Buzaba, who is said to have been a just and wise governor. After the death of Buzaba, who was the last of these governors, Atabak Sunqar, the great-grandson of Salghur, succeeded in A.D. 1148, and became a powerful ruler.

of the Kasīm Khān and wife of the emperor Jahangīr, who gave her the title of Badshah Mahal.

Salik (سالك), poetical title of Shah Ibrahim.

Salik Qazwīnī and Salik Yazdī (سالك قازوينی و يزدي) These two poets, one from Qazwīn and the other from Yazd, flourished in the time of the emperor Shah Jahan, and both died in the reign of 'Alimgīr. Salik Qazwīnī died in A.D. 1699, A.H. 1080, and the other, one year after him.

Salim (سلم حاجی محمد), author of a Diwān, which he completed in A.D. 1701, A.H. 1082. His proper name is Hajī Muḥammad Aslam.

Salim (سلم), the poetical title of Muhammad Qulī who came to India from Persia during the reign of Shah Jahan and was employed by Iṣām Khān, wazīr. He was the author of a Diwān and also of a Maṣnawī, which he wrote in Persia, and in which he describes Lahijān. But when he came to India he altered the heading and called it a description of Kashmere. He died in the year A.D. 1647, A.H. 1057.

Salim (سليم مير محمد), Mir Muhammad Salim of Patna, a merchant who died at Murshidābād in A.D. 1781, A.H. 1195, and left a Masnawi in Urdū.

Salim I. Sultan (سالم سلطان), emperor of the Turks of Constantinople, and the greatest monster of that monstrous race, was the second son of Bāyezid II. whom he defeated in a battle, and after poisoning him and murdering eight of his brothers or nephews, ascended the throne of Turkey on the 6th April, A.D. 1512, 18th Safar, A.H. 918. He subverted the Mamlūks of Egypt, bringing it—with Palestine, Syria and Arabia—under the yoke of the Turks. He invaded the kingdom of Persia; subdued and slew Aladeules, the mountain king of Armenia, and reduced his kingdom to the form of a Turkish province. He repressed the forces of the Hungarians by a double invasion; but, when intending to turn all his forces upon the Christians, he was suddenly seized with a cancer on his back, of which he died on Friday the 21st September, A.D. 1520, 6th Shawwāl, A.H. 926, on the very spot where he had formerly unnaturally assaulted his aged father. He was succeeded by his son Sulaimān I. surnamed "The Magnificent."

Salim II. Sultan (سليم سلطان), succeeded his father Sulaimān I. surnamed "The Magnificent," as emperor of the Turks in September, A.D. 1566, Safar, A.H. 974. He was an idle and effeminate emperor; but his deputies took from the Venetians the isle of Cyprus, and from the Moors the kingdom of Tunis and Algiers. Over this emperor the Christians were victorious in that famous sea-fight called the battle of Lepanto, when he lost above 35,000 men besides his fleet. Devoting his time to the enervating pleasures of his seraglio, he died, little respected, on the 9th December, A.D. 1574, Shaban, A.H. 982, aged 52, and was succeeded by his son Sulṭān Murād III.

Salim III. Sultan (سليم سلطان), son of Mustafā III. was born in A.D. 1761, and succeeded to the throne of Turkey on the death of his uncle Ahmad IV. in April, A.D. 1789. He began his reign with a war with Catherine II. of Russia, in which peace was purchased by great sacrifices of territory. At a later period Egypt was invaded by the French; but they were defeated, and compelled to quit the country, by the English, in 1801. A revolt of the Janissaries deposed Salim on the 28th July, A.D. 1807, Jumādā I. A.H. 1222, and raised Mustafā IV. to the throne; but he was deposed after a reign of one year, and Mahmūd II. made emperor A.D. 1808.

Salim Chishti, Shaikh (سليم چشتي), of Rathapur Sīkrī, surnamed

Shaikh-ul-Islām, a Muhammadan saint, who during his life was greatly revered by the emperor Akbar. It is said that by his prayers the king was blessed with several children. His father Bahā-uddin was a descendant of Shaikh Farid Shakarganj. He was born at Dehlī in A.D. 1478, A.H. 883, was a disciple of Khwāja Ibrāhīm Chishti, and resided on a hill close to the village of Sīkrī about 20 miles from Āgra. By the liberality of the emperor, he was enabled to build a splendid Masjid or mosque on the hill, called the Masjid of Fathapur Sīkrī, which was completed in A.D. 1571, A.H. 979, at a cost of 5 lakhs of rupees. He died a few months after its completion on the 13th February, A.D. 1572, 27th Ramazān, A.H. 979, aged 96 lunar years, and was buried on the top of the hill, where his tomb is to be seen to this day. He was one of the chief saints of Hindūstān, and some of his sayings have been found worthy of commemoration. After his death his son Badr-uddin succeeded him to the gaddi. His pedigree runs thus: "Shaikh Salim Chishti, the son of Bahā-uddin, the son of Shaikh Sulaimān, the son of Shaikh 'Adam, the son of Shaikh Mūsā, the son of Shaikh Maudūd, the son of Shaikh Badr-uddin, the son of Shaikh Farid-uddin of Ajūdhan, commonly called Shakarganj." Twenty-four times Salim Chishti is said to have gone on a pilgrimage to Mecca and returned again. His bread was made of singhāras (water-nuts) that were produced in the reservoir of Sīkrī. His son Qutb-uddin was killed in Bengal by Sher Afkan, first husband of Nur Jahān. His grandson Islām Khān, the son of Badr-uddin, was raised by the emperor Jahāngir to the rank of an Amīr and was appointed governor of Bengal in A.D. 1601, A.H. 1017.

[Vide Islām Khān.]

Salim Shah Sur (سليم شاه سور), more properly called Islām Shāh, was the younger son of the emperor Sher Shāh. His elder brother, 'Adil Khān, being absent at his father's death, Jalāl Khān (as he was then) ascended the throne in the fortress of Kalinjar on the 29th May, A.D. 1545, 17th Rabi' I. A.H. 952, and assumed the title of Islām Shāh, which by false pronunciation was turned to that of Salim Shāh. He reigned nine years and became afflicted with a fistula, of which he died at Gwāliar A.D. 1554, A.H. 961, in which year also died Mahmūd Shāh, king of Gujrāt, and Burhān Nizām Shāh, king of Ahmadnagar. In commemoration of the remarkable circumstance of these monarchs dying almost at the same time, Maulānā 'Alī, the father of the celebrated historian Firishta, wrote a short epitaph, in which the words "the ruin of kings" exhibit the Hijri year A.D. 961. The remains of Salim Shāh were conveyed to Sahsārām and buried close to his father's tomb. Salim Shāh was succeeded by his son the prince Firoz, then 12 years of age, who was placed on the throne by the chiefs of the tribe of Sūr, at Gwāliar. He had not reigned three days (some say three months) when Mubārīz Khān, the son of Nizām Khān Sūr, at once the nephew of the late Sher Shāh and brother-in-law of Salīm Shāh, assassinated the young prince, and, ascending the throne, assumed the title of Muhammad Shāh 'Adil.

Salima Bano Begam (سليمه بانو بيگم), the daughter of Sulaimān Shaikh, the son of Dāra Shaikh, was married to Prince Muhammad Akbar, Aurangzeb's fourth son. Their offspring was Nekusiyar, who was proclaimed emperor at Agra and imprisoned by Rukn-uddaula.

Salima Sultana Begam (سليمه سلطانہ), (بيگم). The mother of this lady was Gubruk Begam, the daughter of the emperor Babar Shāh, who gave her in marriage to Mirzā Nūr-uddin Muhammad, by whom she had Salima. Salima was married to Bairām Khān Khānān in A.D. 1558. The marriage took place at Julandhar with the consent of the emperor Akbar, who was present at the nuptials. After the death of Bairām Khān in 1561, she became the wife of the emperor, by whom she had a daughter named Shāhzāda Khānam and a son named Sultān Murād. She was well-versed in Persian and had a good genius for poetry. She died in the reign of the emperor Jahangir A.D. 1612, A.H. 1021.

Salimi or Hasan Salimi, Maulana

(سليمی حسن مولانا), a poet who died and was buried at Subzwār, in the year A.D. 1450, A.H. 854. He has left a Diwān.

Saljuq (سلجوق). Vide Saljūqi.

Saljuqi (سلجوقی), a dynasty of Tartar.

kings who derive their name from Saljūq, a chief of great reputation, who had been compelled to quit the court of Bighū Khān, the sovereign of the Turks of Qapchāk. Saljūq, who had proceeded with his tribe to the plains of Bukhārā, embraced the religion of Muhammad and acquired the crown of martyrdom in the war against the infidels. His age of an hundred and seven years surpassed the life of his son Mikāil. Saljūq adopted the care of his two grandsons Tughral and Ja'far, the eldest of whom, at the age of 45 years, was invested with the title of Sultān in the royal city of Naishāpūr. It is said that Mikāil became known to Sultān Mahmūd of Ghazni, and was greatly honoured by that monarch. It is related that on Mahmūd asking the ambassador of their chief what force they could bring to his aid: "Send this arrow," said the envoy, presenting one of two which he held in his hand, "and 50,000 horse will appear!" "Is that all?" exclaimed Mahmūd. "Send this," he said, presenting the other, "and an equal number will follow." "But suppose I was in extreme distress," observed the monarch, "and want your utmost exertions?" "Then," replied the ambassador, "send my bow, and 200,000 horse will obey the summons!" The proud conqueror heard with secret alarm this terrifying account of their numbers; and we are told that he anticipated the future overthrow of his empire. Tughral Beg and his brother served for several years under Subān Mahmūd. In A.D. 1036, A.H. 429, the former resisted Sultān Mas'ūd, the son of Mahmūd, and received investiture as Sultān of Khurāsān from the Khalifa of Baghdad. Vide Tughral Beg, who was the first king of the Saljūq dynasty of Persia. Kadar was the first of the Saljūq dynasty who reigned in Kirmān; Sulaimān or Qutlamish, the first Sultān of the Saljūq dynasty who reigned in Rūm or Anatolia.

Salman (سلمان), a poet who died in

A.D. 1530, A.H. 937.

Salman, 'Aqa (آقا سلمان), also called

Mirzā Hīsābī, is the author of a commentary on the Preface of the Gulistan of about 3000 lines. He devoted himself to Sūfism and wrote a treatise thereon. He also compiled an Arabic commentary on Qūsanjī's Persian treatise on astronomy; another work of his is called Ausaf-ul-Bilād. He was living in A.D. 1585, A.H. 993.

Salman Farsi (سلمان فارسی), or the Persian. It is said to have been a native of a small place near Isfahān, and that on passing one day by a Christian Church he was so much struck by the devotion of the people, and the solemnity of the worship, that he became disgusted with the idolatrous faith in which he had been brought up. He afterwards wandered about the East, from city to city, and convent to convent, in quest of a religion, until an ancient monk, full of years and infirmities, told him of a prophet who had arisen in Arabia to restore the pure faith of Abraham. He then journeyed to Mecca, and became a convert of Muhammadanism. This Salimān rose to power in after years, and was reputed by the unbelievers of Mecca to have assisted Muhammad in compiling his doctrines. He died at Madāin in Persia in A.D. 653, A.H. 33.

Salman Sawaji (سلمان ساوجی), a celebrated Persian poet, native of Sawā, surnamed Jalāl-uddin Muhammad, who flourished in the time of Amīr Shaikh Hasan Jalāyār, also called Hasan Buzurg, and his son Sultān Aweis, rulers of Baghdad. In the latter period of his life he became blind, and having retired from the world died in the year A.D. 1377, A.H. 779. He is the author of a poem entitled Jamshod-wa-Khureshod, and of the Firāg-nāma, and several other works, and also of a Diwān.

Sam (سام), the son of Narīmān, and grandfather of Rustam, the celebrated hero of Persia.

[Vide Zāl and Manūchchr]

Saman (سامان), the great-grandfather of Ismā'īl Simān, the first king of the Samānides. His grandson Nasr Ahmad was appointed governor of Bukhārā by Mo'tamid, the Khalifa of Baghdad, in A.D. 874, A.H. 261.

[Vide Ismā'īl Samānī]

Samani (سامانی), a dynasty of Mu-hammadan Kings who reigned over Transoxiana, holding its court at Bukhārā. Its power extended over Khwāzizm, Mawār-un-Nahr, Juzjān, Siwastan and Ghaznī. This dynasty continued to reign in Bukhārā for a period of 128 years, when it became extinct by the death of its last prince, 'Abdulmalik II in A.D. 999, A.H. 399. The first king of this race was Ismā'īl Sāmānī, great-grandson of Samān, a robber-chief, from whom this dynasty took its name.

Samani or Samnani (سامانی), an Arabian author who in the 6th century of the Hijri, wrote a dictionary of the names of all the Arabian authors, entitled Fa'ī Anasab, which in the succeeding century was abbreviated by Ibn-al-Asir, and this extract again shortened by Siyuti.

or Samā-uddin, one of the great Mushākhkhs of India, and brother of Shaikh Ishāq. He lived in the time of Sultan Bahāul Lodī, and died according to 'Abdul Haq in A.D. 1496, A.H. 901, and lies buried on the banks of the Haуз Shamsī at Delhi.

Sambhaji (سمبہاجی), the son of Sewājī Bhosla, the Marhatta chief and second Raja of Sitara. He was at Parnāla when his father died, and a faction endeavoured to secure the succession to Rāja Rām, a son of Sewājī by another wife. But Sambhājī, supported by the greater part of the troops, who had been the companions of his contests with the forces of the emperor 'Alamgir, established his sovereignty. He behaved with great cruelty to his opponents, imprisoned Rāja Rām, and reigned nine years. He succeeded his father in April, A.D. 1680, generally spent his time in female society and excessive drinking, and possessed no talents for government. He listened to the advice of no one, having a conceited opinion of his own abilities, and chose for his favourite Kab Kalā or Kālūsāh, a Brāhman, with whom he acted such scenes as made him hateful to the world. He was taken prisoner together with his minion by the officers of the emperor 'Alamgir, who ordered them to be executed. Sambhājī's eyes were first destroyed with a hot iron, his tongue cut out, and he was at last beheaded along with his favourite. This event took place in July or August, A.D. 1689, A.H. 1100. His son Sāhji, also called Sao or Sāhū, an infant, was acknowledged Raja by the Marhattas, but he was soon afterwards taken prisoner by Alamgir and confined till the death of that monarch, when he was released.

[Vide Sāhji II]

Sambhu Singh (سمبھو سنگھ),

Maharana of Udaipur and Mewar, who was invested a G.C.S.I. on the 6th December, A.D. 1871, and died on the 7th October, A.D. 1874, at the early age of 27. He succeeded to the gaddi of Mewar by adoption in 1862. His elevation was great and sudden, as his father, a brother of the late Rana Sarup Singh, had fallen under suspicion of conspiring to gain his way to the throne by poisoning the invalid Sarup, and, while the father died under the hands of assassins in a prison within the walls of the palace, the son, along with other members of the family, suffered for several years the most cruel persecution.

Samdik Phra Paramitr (سامدیک فرامیتر), king of Siam, who came to Hindūstān in the beginning of 1872, and was received in Calcutta, Lucknow, Bombay, &c., with all the honours due to high rank.

Sanai, Shaikh (ثنائي شيخ), commonly called Hakīm Sanāi, a celebrated poet and native of Ghazni, who flourished in the reign of Bahrām Shāh, son of Mas'ūd Shāh of Ghazni. He is the author of several poems. His last work, which he dedicated to Bahrām Shāh, is called the Hadīqa, or Hadīqat-ul-Haqāeq, the Garden of Truth, a very beautiful poem on the unity of God and other religious subjects, said to contain 30,000 verses. This book he finished in A.D. 1131, A.H. 525, in which year he is supposed to have died, aged 62 years. He is also the author of a small work containing about 280 verses, entitled Banīq-ul-Anbīa wa Kanūz-ul-Auliā, and of a Diwān.

Sanai, Maulana (ثنائي مولانا), author of a poem entitled Bāgh Iram.

Sana-ullah, Maulana (ثنا الله مولانا), Qāzī of Panīpat, flourished about the year A.D. 1539, A.H. 946, and is the author of the commentary called Mazhari and other works, one of which is called Saif-ul-Masluḥ.

Sandhal Deo (سندھال دیو), one of the Rājās of Amir, now called Jaipur; after him reigned Gokul or Kantal, and after him reigned Pūjandeva or Pūjūrī about the year A.D. 1185. He married the daughter of Prithi Rāja. After him Malosi; after him the following Rājās reigned in succession: — Bijalji, Rajdeo, who was defeated by Mahmūd II. A.D. 1251, Kilan, Kantal, who built the city of Amir, Jūnsi, Uduikaran, Nar Singh, Banbir, Udhurao, Chandarsen, Prithiraj, murdered by his son Bhīm, Askaran; after him reigned Bhāramal, also called Pūrammal and Biharimal, which see.

Sangram Shah (سنگرام شاه), Rāja of Kharakpūr in South Bihār, defied the Mughal armies in the time of Akbar, lost his life in a struggle, and his son and successor were forced to become converts to Islām.

Sanjar, Mir (ساجر میر), also called Shāh Sanjar Bijāpūrī, was the son of Mir Haidar Kāshī the punster. He was an excellent poet and flourished in the time of Sulṭān Ibrāhīm 'Adil of Bijāpūr. He died in A.D. 1612, A.H. 1021, and left a Diwān.

Sanjar Shah (ساجر شاه), the son of Tughan Shāh II. He was contemporary with Takash Khān, who married his mother and adopted him; but when he rebelled against him, Takash blinded him.

Sanjar, Sultan (ساجر سلطان), the third son of Sulṭān Malikshāh Saljūqī. He held at his father's death, A.D. 1092, the government of Khurāsān, and took little concern in the troubles that ensued on that event; but after the death of his brother, Sulṭān Muhammad, he may be deemed the actual sovereign of Persia. He forced Bahrām Shāh, a monarch of the race of Ghazni, whose capital was Lāhore, to pay him tribute; and Alāuddin, prince of Ghūr, who had defeated Bahrām Shāh and taken Ghazni, yielded in his turn to the superior fortune of Sanjar, by whom he was defeated, made prisoner, and tributary to the house of Saljūq. But Sanjar, after a long reign marked by singular glory and success, was destined to experience the most cruel reverses of fortune. In the year A.D. 1140, A.H. 535, he advanced far into Tartary to attack Gour Khān, the monarch of Qara Khatā, and suffered a signal defeat, in which almost his whole army was cut to pieces, his family taken prisoner, and all his baggage plundered. He next marched, A.D. 1153, A.H. 547, against the Turkman tribe of Ghuz, who had withheld their usual tribute of 40,000 sheep: an action ensued, in which he was defeated and taken prisoner. During his long confinement of four years, his dominions were ruled by his favourite, Sulṭān Khātūn Turkān, at whose death in A.D. 1156, A.H. 551, Sanjar made an effort to escape and was successful; but he lived only a short time after he regained his liberty, for he died on Friday the 24th May, A.D. 1157, 11th Rabi' II. A.H. 552, in the 73rd year of his age, and was buried in Marv. The Saljūq dynasty in Khurāsān ceased with his existence, and the greater part of his kingdom fell into the possession of Khwārizm Shāh Atsiz ibn-Muhammad ibn-Anushtakīm, the grandfather of Takash Khwārizm Shāh. The poets of his court were Adīb Sābir, Rashid Wātwat, Abdul Wāṣā, Jabālī, Farid Kātib, Anwārī, Malik 'Imād Zauzani, and Sayyad Husain of Ghazni.

• Sarbaland Khan (سربلند خان), an Amir of the time of the emperor 'Alamgīr, who held the rank of 4000 and died in the year A.D. 1679, A.H. 1090.

Sarbaland Khan (سربلند خان), entitled Nawāb Mubāriz-ul-Mulk, was governor of Patna in the time of Farrukh-siyar, and was recalled to court about the year A.D. 1718, A.H. 1130. In the reign of the emperor Muhammad Shah he was appointed governor of Gujrāt, A.D. 1724, A.H. 1137, but in A.D. 1730, A.H. 1143, was removed from his government on account of his consenting to pay the Marhattas the Chouth or part of the revenue of that province, and Rāja Abhay Singh, the son of Ajit Singh Rathor, was appointed to succeed him. Sarbaland Khān made some opposition to his successor, but was defeated and prevented from coming to court by the emperor. He was, however, after some time appointed governor of Allahābād, A.D. 1732, A.H. 1145, when he deputed his son Khānazād Khān to command, himself residing at court. He died in A.D. 1745, A.H. 1158.

Sardar Singh (سردار سنگه), present Rāja of Bikaner (1857).

Sarfraz Khan, Nawab (سرفراز خان),

(نواب), entitled 'Alā-uddaula, was the son of Nawāb Shuja-uddaula or Shuja-uddin, governor of Bengal, whom he succeeded on the 13th March, A.D. 1739, 13th Zil-hijja, A.H. 1151. He reigned one year and two months, and was slain in an attack made by Alahwardī Khān Mahābat Jang on the 29th April, A.D. 1740, 13th Safer, A.H. 1153. The cause of this murder is thus recorded: " 'Alā-uddaula having accidentally met the niece of his wazīr, Mahābat Jang, a young lady who bore the repute of being the most beautiful woman of the age, first commanded and then entreated her to withdraw her veil, that he might enjoy one look at her face. The modest damsel, overwhelmed with confusion and terror, entreated the prince's pardon, and, pleading eloquently for her honour, declined to gratify his curiosity; but he, being charmed with her exquisite grace and the delicious tones of her voice, was fired with a hasty determination and himself withdrew the veil. He gazed in ardent admiration on her lovely countenance for a few seconds; then, dropping the drapery, he asked forgiveness for his rudeness, and, paying the beauty some princely compliment, passed on. The unhappy girl fled in tears to her father, 'Atāullah, and to her uncle the wazīr, and with mixed indignation and shame declared the sad tale of her disgrace, and immediately afterwards destroyed herself with poison. Suffice it to say that the prince became their victim within a few hours."

Sarfi Sawaji (سرفی ساوجی), a poet named Shaikh Yaqūb, who flourished in the time of the emperor Akbar, and wrote a chronogram on the death of Amir Fathullāh Shīrāzī and Hakīm Abū'l Fatha Gilānī, both of whom died in A.D. 1589, A.H. 997. He was a native of Sāwa in Persia and came to Indrapur where he died in A.D. 1595, A.H. 1003, and left a Diwān.

Sarfoji (سرفوجی), Rāja of Tanjore, a descendant of Ekkoji, the brother of the celebrated Siwāji, the Marhatta chief. By the treaty of the 25th October, A.D. 1799, the English Government decided between two rival claimants to place Sarfoji upon the masnad, on condition that he transferred the management of his territory to the British, consenting to receive in lieu of its revenue an annual payment of £118,350. The absolute sovereignty of the fortress and city of Tanjore itself were at the same time guaranteed to the prince. Sarfoji died in A.D. 1832, and was succeeded by his only son Siwāji, who reigned 23 years, and died on the 29th October, A.D. 1855, leaving no legitimate son to succeed him. The surviving family consisted of the following persons, viz.: the Queen Dowager, 16 wives, 2 daughters, 2 sisters, 6 natural sons, 11 natural daughters, and 44 collaterals.

Sarhindi Begam (سرهندي بيمگ), one of the wives of Shāhjahān, who built a garden at Agra, no traces of which are left now.

Sari Saqti (سرى سقتى), a celebrated Musalmān saint, called Saqti because he formerly dealt in metals, but afterwards became a disciple of Maṭīf Karkhī. He was the uncle of Shāikh Junaid as well as his master. The following anecdote is related on good authority: Sari Saqti said that for thirty years he never ceased imploring divine pardon for having once exclaimed "Praise be to God;" and on being asked the reason he said: "A fire broke out in Baghdād, and a person came up to me and told me that my shop had escaped, on which I uttered those words, and even to this moment I repent having said so, because it showed that I wished better to myself than to others." He died on Wednesday the 9th August, A.D. 870, 6th Ramazān, A.H. 256, and was buried at Baghdād. Some authors say that he died three years before that period.

Sarkhush (سرخوش), the poetical name of Muhammad Afzal, who was born in A.D. 1640, A.H. 1050, flourished in the time of the emperor 'Alamgir. He wrote a biography of the poets of his own time, entitled Kalmāt-ush-Shu'arā, the letters of which, if taken according to their numerical values, will give the year in which it was produced, viz. A.D. 1682, A.H. 1093. He was a good poet, and had the good fortune to become acquainted with almost all men of talents of his day. He died at the advanced age of 76 years, about the year A.D. 1714, A.H. 1126, and left, besides the above-mentioned work, four Masnawis or poems, viz. Husn-o-Ishq, Nūr-i-'Alī, Sāgi-nāma, and Shāh-nāma Muhammad 'Azim.

Sarmad or Muhammad Sarmad (سرمد)

Qazī of Seringapatam in the time of Tipū Sultān, by whose request he translated into Persian a work in the Dakhanī dialect, and called it Khulāsa Sultānī.

Sarmad (سرمد), the poetical name of an Armenian merchant who came to India in the reign of the emperor Shāh Jahān. In one of his journeys towards Thatta, he fell so passionately in love with a Hindū girl that he became distracted and would go about the streets stark naked. He was well versed in the Persian language and was a good poet. In the beginning of the reign of 'Alamgir he was put to death on account of his disobeying the orders of that emperor, who had commanded him not to go about naked. This event took place about the year A.D. 1661, A.H. 1072. Some say that the real cause of his execution was a Rubāi which he had composed, the translation of which is: "The Mullas say that Muhammad entered the heavens; but Sarmad says that the heavens entered Muhammad." His tomb is close to the Jamā Masjid at Dehli.

Sarmadi (سرمدى), takhallus of Muhammad Sharif of Isfahān. He died A.D. 1606, A.H. 1015.

Sarsabz (سارسابز), poetical name of Mirzā Zain-ul-Abidin Khān, son of Nawāb Salar Jang. He is the author of a Diwān.

Sarshar (سرشار), the poetical name of Murshid Qulī Khān 'Rustum Jang, son-in-law of Nawāb Shujā-uddin, of Bengal. He was living in the time of Nawāb Ala Vadi Khān.

Sarup Chand (سرپ چند), a Hindū who is the author of a history called Sāhih-ul-Akbar.

Sarup Singh, Rana (سرپ سنگه رانا), ruler of Udaipur (1857), died A.D. 1862.

Sarwar (سرور), poetical name of 'Azim-uddaula Nawāb Mir Muhammad Khān Bahādur, a son of 'Azim-uddaula Abū'l Qāsim Muzaffar Jang. He died in A.D. 1834, Shawwāl, A.H. 1250, and left besides the Tarkira called Unda-i-Muntakhsa, a thick Diwān.

Bareilly, who raised a religious war with the Sikhs in the Panjāb and was killed at Balakot. He began life in an indifferent school for the character of reformer and saint, which he ultimately assumed, as a sawar serving with Amīr Khān's freebooting horse in Mālwa. Quitting that service, he repaired to Dehli, and became a disciple of Shāh 'Abdul 'Aziz, a very celebrated devotee of the city; the fame of whose knowledge and piety has been widely extended throughout that side of India. It is frequently said by the natives, that it was from Shāh 'Abdul 'Aziz that Sayyid Ahmad derived the peculiar opinions which he subsequently promulgated, and the design which he adopted of preaching a religious war. It is at least certain that the chief of his first disciples and the most constant associates of all his fortunes were two near relatives of 'Abdullah Aziz, one his nephew, Maulwī Muhammad Ismā'īl, author of the First of Muqtadīn, the other his son-in-law and also partially a contributor to the book), named Maulwi 'Abdul Hai. By that school Muhammad Isma'il is generally esteemed to have been a man of much talent and learning. The extreme honour which he and his brother Maulwi paid to Sayyad Ahmad, who was himself nearly illiterate, had a powerful effect in attracting towards him the respect of the vulgar. They rendered him almost moral officers, running, it is said, with their shoes off, by the side of his palanquin, when he moved out with his servants. From his first leaving Delhi he assumed the character of a religious teacher, and commenced to spread his religious doctrines. The general spirit by which these were animated (identical nearly with that of the tenets of the Arabian Wahabites, of whom the sect of Sayyad Ahmad may perhaps be accurately termed an Indian imitation) was the ardent profession of Muhammadanism in its primitive simplicity and fervour, and the utter rejection of all idolatrous or superstitious innovations, whence-soever derived. The manner in which they were at first actually received was however, highly favourable. When Sayyid Ahmad at last came down to Bengal, he had got together many followers and had established an extensive reputation. He arrived in Calcutta with a considerable retinue towards the end of A.D. 1821 and immediately a great majority of the Muhammadans of the place, of all ranks and stations flocked to become, or to profess themselves his disciples. In the early part of A.D. 1822 he proceeded with his friends, the two Moulwis to Mecca from whence he returned in October of the next year, having tarried for a few days at Bombay, where, with reference to the shortness of his stay, his success in gaining numerous followers was nearly as remarkable as in Calcutta. In December, A.D. 1823, he again started for Upper India. The next important event of his career his commencing a religious war in the Indian territories did not occur till after a considerable interval, though the enterprise was one in which he had long openly announced his intention to engage. Its date is given in the Tughab-ul-Jihad, or Incitement of 1 hygon, Har, a little treatise written in Hindustani during the continuance of the struggle by a Maulwi of Quanauj with the view, as its name purports, of rousing the Faithful to rally round the standard which had been raised in the Panjab. "The tribe of Sikhs," says the indignant Maulwi, "has long held sway in Lahore and other places. Their oppressions have exceeded all limits. Thousands of Muhammadans they have unjustly killed, and on thousands have they heaped disgrace. The 'Azan, or summons for prayer, and the killing of cows, they have entirely prohibited. When at length their insulting tyranny could no longer be borne, Sayyad Ahmad going to the direction of Kabul and Qandahar, roused the Muhammadans of those countries, and, rousing their courage for action in the service of God, some thousands of believers became ready at his call to tread the path of God's service, and on the 21st December,

A.D. 1826, 20th Jumada I A.H. 1242, the Jihad against the Kafir Sikhs began." The events of this war were watched with a natural interest by the Muhammadan population of India generally, whether followers of Sayyad Ahmad or not. Many of the inhabitants of our Western provinces went in bodies to range themselves under his standard, and his emissaries gathered large contributions of money and jewels, even from our own distant Presidencies, and from the principal Muhammadan towns of the Deccan. The prominent occurrences of the war, the perseverance with which it was kept up, the temporary and occasional successes which Sayyad Ahmad met, and his ultimate death in battle, are well known. With his death the struggle appears to have entirely ceased. — Journal of Bengal, vol. 1 p. 450. [This story is chiefly interesting as an instance of what may be done in India by an ardent fanatic.]

Sayyad Ahmad Kabir (سید احمد کبر) grandfather of Sayyad Jalal Bukhari and a Muslim saint, whose tomb is in Buzmandil near the tomb of Shah Muhammad Khayali at Delhi.

Sayyad Ahmad, Sir, K.C.S.I. (سید احمد مسیح دہلی)

Munsif of Delhi in the British Government service, was the son of Sayyid Muhammad Muttaqi Khan Bihadur, and author of the work called Asar-e-Sandil containing a description of old Delhi and Shahjahanabad, and also of another work, entitled Silsilat-ul-Mulki. The native place of his ancestors is Arabia. They removed afterwards to Hiral, and during the reign of Akbar the Great they came into India. Ever since that period they have enjoyed titles and dignity. Under the British Sayyad Ahmad has been made Khan Bihadur and K.C.S.I. His greatest work is the Anglo-Muhammadan Colloquy, Alkurah, and he will have a place in Indian history as the greatest Muhammadan Reformer of modern times. His Life appeared in 1885, written by Lieut. Col. Graham [See also Dawson's Lives, vol. viii.]

Sayyad 'Ali or Sayyad 'Ali Hamdani

(سید علی ہمدانی), a famous Sayyad who fled to Kashmir from his native city of Hamdan, where he had incurred the wrath of Amir Taimur. Seven hundred Sayyads are said to have accompanied his flight to Kashmir in the reign of Sultan Qutb-uddin. He arrived in that province in A.D. 1380, A.H. 782. He remained at Kashmir six years and named it the "Garden of Solomon" (Bagh Sulaiman). He died at Pakli whilst on his return to Persia. His son Mir Muhammad Hamdani, also a fugitive, brought in his train three hundred Sayyads to Kashmir, where he remained twelve years. These two immigrations of fugitive Sayyads fixed the religion of the country, and were doubtless the chief cause of the religious persecutions which ensued in the following reign.

Sayyad 'Ali bin-Shahab-uddin Hamdani (سید علی بن شہاب الدین ہمدانی), author of the Tuzkirat-ul-Maluk, treating upon religion, articles of faith, duty of kings to their subjects, etc.

Sayyad 'Ali Shirazi (سید علی شیرازی), the saint of the Jokhia Sindhi tribe. His tomb is in Tatta. The inscription bears the date A.D. 1776, A.H. 1190.

Sayyad Husain (سید حسین خنک), commonly called Khink Sawar (سوار), It is mentioned in the Akbar-nāma that Sayyad Husain came to India with Shahab-uddin Ghori, who, after his conquest of India in A.D. 1192, A.H. 584, left him behind as governor of Ajmir, where he died some years afterwards, and was buried on the hill where the fort of Ajmir then stood. He is now venerated by the Muhammadans as a saint.

Sayyad Husain or Mir Husain (سید حسین), a celebrated Muhammadan of Ghazni, who died at Herat in December, A.D. 1317, Shawwāl, A.H. 717, aged 117 lunar years. He is the author of works called Nazhat-ul-Arwāh and Kanz-ul-Ramūz.

Sayyad Husain Shahid, Amir (سید حسین شہید امیر), a Muhammadan saint or martyr, who was slain on the 9th May, A.D. 1538, 9th Zil-hijja, A.H. 944, in the time of the emperor Humāyūn, and is buried at a place called Nāiki Mandi at Agra, where his tomb is to be seen to this day bearing a Persian inscription in verse.

Sayyad Ismail Shah (سید اسماعیل شاه), commonly called Pir Chattar, a Muhammadan saint, whose tomb is situated about two thousand paces out of the western gates of the city of Braoch on the northern bank of the Narbada. The tomb is said to be upwards of three hundred years old. It is built of the ordinary form in a small enclosure. It is shaded by a Khizri tree, which grows by the side of the eastern wall out of the enclosure. In the middle of the tomb is a reservoir about 5 feet 4 inches by 1 foot 8 inches, and in depth about 1 foot 2 inches. In the midst of the water there rises, about one inch above it, a small island, or the inner tomb, of 4 feet by 1. This miraculous reservoir is always full to the brim of very cold water. Hundreds of visitors go to the shrine every Thursday, and drink a tumbler full of the water, but it never diminishes nor increases.

Sayyad Ja'far (سید جعفر زمبیرپوری), of Zamirpūr or Zambirpūr, was a descendant of Sayyad Namat-ullah Wali. His poetical name was Rūhi. He died on the 30th October, A.D. 1741, 1st Ramazān, A.H. 1154, and is buried at Zambirpūr, a place situated thirty miles from Lucknow.

Seoji or Shioji (سوحی), a grandson of the renowned Juchind, the last Rathor monarch of Qinaur. He with a few retainers migrated in the year A.D. 1212 and planted the Rathor standard in Marwar. His successors in process of time, by valour and by taking advantage of the times, enlarged the state, and in A.D. 1432 Jodha Rao of Marwar founded the modern capital of Jodhpur, to which he transferred the seat of government from Mandor. The name of Marwar is a corruption of Maruwar, also called Marū-dēś, or "the region of death." Anciently, and properly, it included the entire western desert, from the Sarayu to the ocean.

Sewaji or Siwaji (سیواجی), a celebrated chief of the Bhosla family and founder of the Marhatta States in the Deccan, of whose origin we have the following account. Bhim Sen, rānā of Udupur, the first in rank among the Hindū princes, had a son named Bhāg Singh by a concubine of a tribe very inferior to his own. On the death of his father, Bhāg Singh finding himself despised and neglected by his relations, the Sisodhia rajputs, who from the low caste of his mother regarded him only as a bastard, and not of their tribe, became weary of the indignities shown him, and moved from Udupur to Khandesh, where he embraced the service of a Zamindar, named Raju 'Alī Mohan. He afterwards retired into the Deccan, where he purchased a tract of land near the present Marhatta capital of Puna, and settled upon it as Zamindar, in which situation he died. Bhāg Singh had four sons two of whom, Mullaji and Bambuji, being of an enterprising spirit entered into the service of Jadhoo Rao, a Marhatta chief of distinguished rank at the court of Bahadur Nizam Shah. Mullaji had a son named Sahji or Sawji, who married the daughter of Jadhoo Rao, and thus the Bhosla family became incorporated with the Marhattas, and are commonly esteemed as such in Hindustan. Sahji, after the death of his father, left Ahmadnagar with his followers and entered into the service of Ibrahim 'Adil Shah, king of Bijapur, who gave him a jagir in the Karnatic, with a command of ten thousand horse. Soon after this, in May, A.D. 1627, his son Sewaji, afterwards so celebrated in the Deccan, was born, from the daughter of Jadhoo Rao. Marhatta Sahji having disagreed with his wife sent her, with the infant Sewaji, to reside at Puna, of which and the vicinity he had obtained a grant. Sewaji, though neglected by his father, was properly educated and at the age of seventeen excelled in every accomplishment. Military fame was his first passion and the government of Bijapur being now weakened by intestine divisions and the encroachments of the Mughals he had soon an opportunity of signifying himself among other rebels. He raised banditti and plundered the neighbouring districts, and having now taken possession of the jagir raised more troops, successfully levied contributions on several Zamindars and much extended the limits of his territories. At this crisis the prime Aurangzeb governor of the imperial territories in the Deccan, was meditating the overthrow of his brother Dina Shikoh the favourite son of the emperor Shah Jahan, who was now in a dangerous state of health. For this purpose he was preparing an army to march to Agra, and, observing the outprising genius of Sewaji, sent him an invitation to his service. Sewaji pretending to be struck with horror at the rebellion of a son against a father, received the prince's messenger with indignity, drove him from his presence, and ordered the letter he had brought to be tied to the tail of a dog. Aurangzeb for the present stifled his resentment, but never would forgive Sewaji's insolence, and hence may be dated his tedious war in the Deccan, and finally the ruin of the Mughal empire by the Marhattas. Aurangzeb having left the Deccan in A.D. 1658, A.D. 1668, Sewaji resolved to turn the inactivity of the imperial troops, and the weakness of the Golkand and Bijapur princes, to the utmost advantage. He took the strong fortress of Rājgarh, which he fixed upon as the seat of his government. The Bijāpūr government having in vain desired his father Sālījī (who disclaimed all connection with him) to repress the excesses of his son, at length sent against him a considerable force under a general named Aizul Khan Bawājī with artful policy invited him to come and receive his submission. Aizul Khan advanced without opposition to his tent, when he was stabbed by the treacherous Zamindār in embracing him. Upon a signal given, the Mahattas rushed from an ambush, attacked the unsuspecting army of Bijāpūr, which, deprived of their chief, was quickly defeated. Swayj plundered their rich camp and by this victory became master of all Kōkan, the Zamindars of which flocked to acknowledge his authority, to save their possessions. The strong fortress of Sitara and other places also opened their gates to receive him. In the course of only three years Swayj became a powerful prince, his authority being acknowledged over almost the whole coast of Marwar. He built palaces and erected fortifications in every part of his country, gave much trouble to the emperor 'Alamgīr, reigned more than twenty years, and left a character which has never since been equalled or approached by any of his countrymen. He died on the 14th April A.D. 1680, 24th Rabi' I A.H. 1091, but, according to Elphinstone's History of India on the 5th April the same year, aged 53 years representing the difference between old and new styles. His funeral pile was administered with the same sacrifices as had been devoted to the memory to the obsequies of the Maharaja Jaswant Singh of Jodhpur, attendants, animals, and wives, were burnt with his corpse. He was succeeded by his son Sambha or Sambhaji.

Shabīb (شبيب بن ريد بن نعم), the son of Yazid, the son of Na'im, was a Khazajite. It is related that his father, Yazid, was sent by 'Usmān the Khalīf to assist the Syrian Muhammadans against the Greeks in the twenty-fifth year of the Hijra. The Muhammadans obtaining the victory the Christians were exposed for sale. Among the captives Yazid espied a beautiful maid, whom he bought and married. She provided with child of Shabīb, who was born on the 10th of the month of Zil-hijja being the day on which the pilgrims killed the sacrifices at Mecca. Yazid opposed Hājjāj, the governor of Mecca, for a long time, and was at last drowned in a river. His body being drawn out, his head was cut off and sent to Hājjāj. This happened in A.D. 696, A.H. 77.

Shadad (شداد), poetical title of Rāo

Chandra Lāl, an Amīr in the service of the Nizām of Haidarabad.

Shaddād (شداد), the Adite, was the son of 'Adad, the first king of the 'Adites, a race of ancient Arabs, the smallest of their tribe is said to have been 60 cubits high, and the largest 100 cubits. 'Ad had two sons, Shaddād and Shaddād, on the death of their father, they reigned conjointly over the whole earth. At length Shaddād died, and his brother Shaddād ruled after him. Shaddād was fond of reading the ancient books, and when he met with descriptions of Paradise and of the world to come, his heart enticed him to build its like upon the earth. A pleasant and elevated spot being fixed upon, Shaddād despatched one hundred chiefs to collect skilful artists and workmen from all countries. He also commanded the kings of Syria and Onnas to send him all their jewels and precious stones. Forty camel-loads of gold, silver and jewels were daily used in the building, which contained a thousand spacious quadrangles of many thousand rooms. In the arts were artificial trees of gold and silver whose leaves were emeralds, and fruit clusters of pearls and jewels. The ground was strewn with ambergris, musk and saffron. Between every two of the artificial trees was planted one of delicious fruit. This romantic abode took 500 years in the completion. To this paradise he gave the name of Iram. When finished Shaddād marched to view it, and when he arrived near, divided two hundred thousand youthful slaves whom he had brought with him from Damascus into four detachments which were stationed in encampments prepared for their reception on each side of the garden, towards which he proceeded with his favourite courtiers. Suddenly was heard in the air a voice like thunder and Shaddād, looking up, beheld a personage of majestic figure and stern aspect, who said, "I am the Angel of Death, commissioned to seize thy impure soul." Shaddād exclaimed, "Give me leisure to enter the garden," and was descending from his horse, when the angel of life snatched away his impure spirit, and he fell dead upon the ground. At the same time lightnings flashed, and destroyed the whole army of the infidel, and the rose-garden of Iram became concealed from the sight of man.

This paradise, though invisible, is still supposed to be standing in the deserts of Aden, and sometimes, though very rarely, God permits it to be seen.

Lighton, in his History of Arabia, says that "The whole fable seems a confused tradition of Belshazzar and the ancient Babylon, or rather, as the name would import, of Babel, mentioned in Scripture as one of the most famous of the Syrian kings, and who, we are told, was worshipped by his subjects."

Shadid (شدید), an author, whose

Shafa'i, Imam (شافعی امام), surname of Abū Abdullah Muhammad bin-Idrīs, who was thus surnamed from Shafīa, one of his forefathers, who was a descendant of 'Abdul Mutallib, grandfather of Muhammad. It is from that origin that the Sunnīs give to this doctor the title of Imām-ul-Mutallibī, as well as that of 'Arīdullāh, or 'Ikrām of God. He was born at Ghaza, a city of Palestine, on the very day that Abū Hanīfa died, A.D. 767, A.H. 150, and eventually became the founder of the third of the chief Sunnī sects. He died in Egypt on Friday the 20th January, A.D. 820, 30th Rajāb, A.H. 204, aged 54 lunar years. He is the author of several works, and is said by all Sunnī writers to have been a learned and virtuous man, who laboured to arrange the traditions so as to render them useful as a code of laws. In his youth he was a pupil of Mālik ibn-'Aus. His followers were at one time very numerous in Khurāsān; but at present his opinions are rarely quoted, either in Persia or India. He is reputed to have composed two collections of traditions, namely the Masnad and the Sunan. Besides the works on the traditions, he is said to have composed a most excellent treatise on jurisprudence called Al-Fiqh-ul-Akbar; but it has been questioned whether he was the author.

Shahab-uddin Adib Sabir (شهاب الدین ادیب صابر), a celebrated poet at the court of Sultān Sanjar Saljūqī. He was a contemporary of Auwarī and Rashīdī, and was drowned in the river Jalhūn by order of Sultān Atsiz of Khwārizm, who was an enemy of Sultān Sanjar. When Atsiz raised in Khwārizm the standard of revolt against Sanjar, the latter sent Adib as a spy to the court of Atsiz that he might continually keep him informed of the intentions of his enemy. It so happened that Atsiz despatched an assassin who was to murder Sanjar on Friday. Adib sent the intelligence of the plot and portrait of the assassin in advance to Sanjar. The plot was thus frustrated, but Adib paid with his life for his fidelity to his former patron. Atsiz ordered that his hands and feet be tied, and that he be thrown into the Oxus. This happened in A.D. 1152, A.H. 546. He has left a Diwān of Kasidas called Qasid Adib Sabir.

Shahab-uddin Ahmad (شهاب الدین احمد), son of Muhammad Maqdisī of Jerusalem, author of the Sharah Lāmia Shatibha. He died A.D. 1328, A.H. 728. There appears to be another Shahab-uddin, the son of Yū'af Chilpī, who is said to be the author of the above work. He died in the year A.D. 1355, A.H. 750.

Shahab-uddin, Mu'ammai (شهاب الدين معماي), or the Punster. He accompanied the emperor Babar Shah to India, was a good poet and wrote a book of enigmas, on account of which he received the title of Mu'ammā or the Punster. He died in the reign of the emperor Humayun, A.D. 1535, A.H. 942 and Khundamir, the historian, found the year of his death in the words "Shahab-ul-Suqih," or Shahab the Sublime.

Shahab-uddin Muhammad Ghorî (شهاب الدين محمد غوری), surnamed Moazz-uddin Muhammad Sam. He was appointed governor of Ghazni in A.D. 1174, A.H. 570, by his elder brother, Ghayas-uddin Muhammad, Sultan of Ghor and Ghazni. He defeated and took prisoner Khusrô Malik, the last prince of the race of the Ghaznavides, A.D. 1186, A.H. 582, and subdued Khurāsān and great part of India. He fought two battles with Pithoura, the Rājā of Ajmir, who was made prisoner and put to death along with Khāndê Rāo, King of Dehli, in A.D. 1192, A.H. 588. His brother Ghayas-uddin died in A.D. 1203, A.H. 599, when he succeeded to the throne and reigned over Ghor, Ghazni and India three years. He was murdered by the Gihkars on his way to Ghazni on the 14th March, A.D. 1206, 2nd Shaban A.H. 602, after he had reigned 32 years from the commencement of his government over Ghazni, and three from his accession to the throne. His remains were taken to Ghazni and buried there in a new vault which had been built for his daughter. He was succeeded by his nephew Ghayas-uddin Mahmud, the son of Ghayas-uddin Muhammad.

Shahab-uddin, Qazi (شهاب الدين قاضي), of Daulatabad, author of the Commentary on the Qim called Bahr Manu'at, in Persian. He received the title of Muhi-ul-'Ulma "King of the learned," from Sultan Ibrahim Shaiqi of Timpur and died in the year A.D. 1137 A.H. 842. He is also the author of the work entitled Munagibat-Saudat.

Shahab-uddin Suharwardi (شهاب الدين سهروردی شمس), generally called Shamkh Magtūl and Qutb-ullah because he was put to death by the famous general Salah-uddin (Saladin of Aleppo), for having more philosophy than religion. According to the work called Hitt Akhbar, he was starved or put to death at Aleppo in A.D. 1189, A.H. 587, aged 36 or 38 years. He is the author of the Commentary called Sharah Haqaiq al-Sharh Izzat. In the 4th vol of Hayat Akhbar, p. 236 he is said to be the author of another work called Al-Sukh.

Shahab-uddin Suharwardi, Shaikh

(شهاب الدين سهروردی شمس), the son of Abu Najib, was born at Suharward in January, A.D. 1140, Rajab, A.H. 539. He was a pious Shaikh, most assiduous in his spiritual exercises and the practice of devotion. He is the author of several works, among which is one called Awārif-ul-Mawārif, also called Awārif-ul-Haqiqat. He died on the 26th September, A.D. 1234, 1st Muharram, A.H. 632, in his 93rd year, at Baghdad, where he was buried. There is another work in Arabic found in the Library of Tipū Sultan, entitled Hikmat-ul-Ashraf, of which he is said to be the author.

Shahab-uddin, Sultan (شهاب الدين سلطان), the son of Sultan 'Ala-uddin, whom he succeeded on the throne of Kash-mere, A.D. 1356, A.H. 757. He turned his attention to foreign conquest, and during the succeeding ten years subdued Thibet, Kashgar, Badakhshan and Kābul. He then, according to the historian Haidar Malik, invaded Hindūstān with an immense army, and is said to have worsted Firōz Shāh, king of Dehli, in a pitched battle on the banks of the Satlaj, the result of which was to cause that potentate to acknowledge his supremacy. Shahab-uddin then returned to Kashmere, where his religious zeal led him to destroy the idol temples at Bijbihārī and elsewhere. He died after a reign of 19 years, A.D. 1376, and was succeeded by his brother Quṭb-uddin during whose reign the famous Sayyad 'Alī Hamdāni arrived at Kashmere.

Shahadat (شهادت), poetical name of Mirzā Sālah of Balkh, who died in A.D. 1742, A.H. 1155.

Shah 'Alam (شاه عالم), king of Dehli, whose original name was 'Alī Gauhar, was the son of the emperor 'Alangīr II. by Zinat Mahal, surnamed Bilāl Kunwar; and was born on the 15th June, A.D. 1728, 17th Zi-Qa'da, A.H. 1140. In the year A.D. 1758, A.H. 1172, fearing he might be made a prisoner by 'Imād-ul-Mulk Ghāzi-uddin Khān, the minister of his father, he left Dehli to try his fortune in Bengal, the Nawāb of which province, Sirāj-uddaula, had been deposed by the assistance of the English, and Mir Jafar set up in his room. He was in Behār when he received the intelligence of the murder of his father, and, having assumed the imperial authority, he ascended the throne on the 25th December, A.D. 1759, 4th Jumādā I. A.H. 1173, with the title of Shāh 'Alam. After the defeat of Shujā-uddaula, his prime minister, at Buxar, on the 23rd October, A.D. 1764, 26th Rabi' II. A.H. 1178, and his flight to the upper province, the king followed the English to Allahābād, where he granted the East India Company the Sanad of the Diwānī of Bengal, dated 12th August, A.D. 1765, 24th Šafar, A.H. 1179, on the Company agreeing to pay the emperor 24 lakhs of rupees annually from the revenues of the three provinces, viz. Bengal, Behār, and Orissa. This important business being settled by Lord Clive, he returned to Calcutta, leaving General Smith to attend the emperor, but in fact to rule him; for the General resided in the fortress, and his majesty in the town; and the sound of the imperial naubat in the fort being disagreeable to General Smith, he forbade the band to play, nor did the servants of the emperor dare to disobey the disgraceful order. Shāh 'Alam continued to reside at Allahābād under the protection of the English till the year A.D. 1771, A.H. 1185, when, growing weary of his retirement, he proceeded to Dehli, where he arrived on the 25th December the same year, but not long afterwards fell into the power of Ghulam Kādir Khān, a Rohila chief, who put out his eyes on the 10th August, A.D. 1786, Ramazān, A.H. 1185. Shāh 'Alam, after this event, re-assumed the throne, and died on the 19th November, A.D. 1806, 7th Ramazān, A.H. 1221, aged 81 lunar years. Shāh 'Alam's poetical name was Afšāb. He was a good poet, and has left a Diwān called Diwān-Afšāb, in Persian and Urdū verse. His remains were deposited close to the tomb of Bahādur Shāh, adjoining the Motī Masjid, near the Dargāh of Quṭb Shāh.

He was appointed governor of Bengal in A.D. 1584, A.H. 992, and died in the 44th year of the reign of that monarch, A.D. 1599, A.H. 1008, aged 70 years. He was buried at Ajmīr, near the mausoloum of Khwāja Mo'in-uddin Chishtī. His liberality and the money he expended was so great, that it made the people think that he had in his possession the Philosopher's Stone.

Shah Begam (شاه بیگم), the mother of Sultān Khusrō, the son of the emperor Jahāngīr. [Vide Khusrō (Sultān).]

Shah Begam (شاه بیگم). This was the title conferred by Jahāngir on his first wife, who was the daughter of Bhagwān Dās, the son of Rājā Bohārī Māl. She was married to prince Śahīm (afterwards Jahāngir) in A.D. 1584, A.H. 993, and became the mother of Sultān Khusrō, who was born in A.D. 1587, A.H. 995. When Jahāngir rebelled against his father Akbar, and was living independently at Allahābad, he gave himself up more than ever to debauchery. He had always entertained a peculiar dislike for his eldest son, Sultān Khusrō, whose own levity and violence seem to have given him reasons for his displeasure. Some circumstance in their disputes so affected Khusrō's mother that she swallowed poison (opium) in A.D. 1603, A.H. 1012, and died at Allahābad, where she was buried in a place called Sultān Khusrō's garden, where her son Sultān Khusrō also was afterwards buried.

Shah Begam (شاه بیگم), a daughter of Muḥammad Muqīm, brother of Shāh Beg Arghūn, governor of Qandahār and afterwards king of Sindh. She was married to Qasīm Koka, who was killed in the wars of the Uzbaks. On the conquest of Qandahār by Bābar Shāh, she was taken away to Kābul.

Shah Begam (شاه بیگم), mother of Khān Mirzā, of Kādakshān, traced her genealogy to Alexander the Great.

Shah Beg Arghun or Urghun (شاه بگ ارغون), king of Sindh and founder of the Arghūn family, was the son of Mirzā Zunnūn Beg Arghūn, the commander-in-chief and head of the nobles at the court of Sultān Husain Mirzā, king of Khurāsān, and Governor of Qandahār and the provinces of Shāl, Nīfūnak and Arghūn. Mirzā Zunnūn met his death in attempting to resist an invasion under Muḥammad Khān Shaibānī Uzbek. After his death the government of Kandahār devolved on his son Shāh Beg Arghūn. When the emperor Bihār Shāh invaded the province of Qandahār, Shāh Beg, unable to resist him, retreated towards Sindh, and having overcome Jām Firzā, the last king of the Samāna dynasty, A.D. 1521, A.H. 927, he settled himself as king in that country. His reign was, however, but of short duration, for he died two years and some months after the conquest, in the year A.D. 1524, A.H. 930, and his eldest son, Shāh Husain Arghūn, succeeded him.

Shah Dai-ullah, Shirazi (شاه داعی)

الله شيرازی), a pupil of Shāh Namat-ullah Wālī. He was a mystical poet and a great saint. His tomb, which is at Shīrās, is a place of pilgrimage.

Shah Ghulam Azīm (شاه غلام عظیم), son of Shāh Aḥyū Māli, the son of Shāh Ajmal of Allahābad. He is the author of two Diwāns and a Maṣnawī.

[Vide Afzal.]

Shah Gīrami or Mirza Gīrami (شاه

گرمی), a poet who lived in the dress of Kalandar and Dehlī, and died in the year A.D. 1743, A.H. 1156.

Shah Gul (شاه گل). Vide Wahdat.Shah Hatim (شاه حاتم), surname of Shah Husain Arghun (شاه حسین ارغون), king of Sindh, succeeded his father, Shāh Beg Arghūn, in A.D. 1524, A.H. 930. He reigned 32 years, and died in A.D. 1555, A.H. 962. After his death the government of Sindh was divided between two rivals, Mahmūd, the governor of Bakkar, and Mirzā Iṣa Turkhān, governor of Thatta, who both assumed the title of king, and between whom frequent dissensions arose, and battles were fought. The emperor Akbar on coming to Lāhore reduced the whole of the province of Bakkar exclusive of the fort, till at last Mahmūd was willing to give it up, and Akbar deputed Geisū Khān to receive it, but Mahmūd died before his arrival, A.D. 1574, A.H. 982, after a reign of 20 lunar years, and Akbar thus became possessed of Upper Sindh, and put an end to the hopes of the race of Mahmūd. Iṣa Turkhān, who took possession of Thatta after the death of Shāh Husain, died after a reign of 13 years in A.D. 1567, A.H. 976.

Shah Husain Safwi (شاه حسين صفوی) succeeded his father, Shāh Sulaimān, king of Persia, in A.D. 1594, A.H. 1004. In the year A.D. 1722 Mahmūd, an Afghān chief of Qandahār, besieged Isfahān and compelled Sultān Husain to surrender and resign his crown to him. This circumstance occurred on the 23rd October the same year, A.H. 1135, and the unfortunate Sultan was confined in a small palace, where he remained seven years, when a reverse of fortune, which threatened their downfall, led his enemies, whose chief was Ashraf, the successor of Mahmūd, to put an end to his existence. This melancholy event took place in November, A.D. 1729, A.H. 1142. The Safwian family may be said to have actually terminated with Sultān Husain. His son Tahmasp assumed the title of king, and struggled for a few years with his fate.

but a weak, effeminate, and debauched youth was unsuited for such times, and he only merits a place in history as his name furnished a pretext for the celebrated Nadir Shah to lay the foundation of his great power.

Shah Husain Sayyad (شاه حسين), Vide Haqiqat.

Shahi (شاهی), poetical title of Prince Mirzā Nūr-uddīn, the son of Mirzā Khān Bakht, the son of Mirzā Sulaiman Shikoh.

Shahi Beg Khan Uzbek (شاهی بگ), also called Shubānī

Khan, who, after he had conquered Transoxiana, invaded Khurasan, took Herat in A.D. 1507, A.H. 913 and extinguished the principal branch of the house of Timur. He was, however, defeated and slain in a battle against Shah Ismā'il I Sāfi in A.D. 1510, A.H. 916 when his skull was overlaid with gold, and made into a drinking cup by this monarch. After his death Timur Sultan succeeded him and Jam Beg Sultan and Abdallah Khan divided Bukhara between themselves. The Uzbeks were Tartars who came from the borders of Russia where they had been governed by a race of princes descended from Shubānī, the grandson of Chāngiz Khan, but they derived their name from Uzbek the seventh of their race, who introduced the Muhammadan religion among them. The last prince of this tribe was Burzu Khan who was slain by Shah Bikhṭ, upon which the Uzbeks quitted their ancient habitation, and conquered Khurasan, Khwarezm, etc.

Shahidi (شاهدی), poetical name of Mir 'Abdul Wāhid of Bilgram, which see.

Shahidi Qummi (شاهدی قومی), an author, who was a native of Qumm, and died in A.D. 1629, A.H. 935.

Shahi, Mir or Amir (شاهی میر), poetical name of 'Aqā Malik, son of Jamal-uddin Firozkohi. His mother was the sister of Khwāja Muwyyad, a chief of the race of Saifadādis of Sabzwār. He was himself a native of Sabzwār and a very learned man. He wrote a beautiful hand, and was a good musician and painter. He flourished in the time of Baisanghar Mirzā and Sulṭān Babar, and died at Astrabad in A.D. 1450, A.H. 854, aged more than 70 years. He was buried at his own request at Sabzwār. He is the author of a biography of poets called Magmūsa-shāh-Shuara, and of a Diwan entitled Diwan Shahi.

Shah Jahan (شاه جهان), emperor of Dehli, surnamed Shahab-uddin Muhammad Sahib Qiran Sanī, was the third son of the emperor, Jihangir. He was born at Lahore on the 5th January, A.D. 1593, 29th Rabi' I A.H. 1000, and named Mirzā Khurām. His mother Balmati, was the daughter of Raja Uday Singh, son of Raja Malsoda, of Jodhpur, and sister to Raja Suraj Singh. At the time of his father's death he was absent in the Deccan but the throne was secured for him by his father-in-law, 'Asaf Khan, the wazir, the brother of Nur Jahan Begam. He marched towards Lahore on hearing of the throne being at his disposal, and began his reign 4th February, A.D. 1628, 8th Jumada II A.H. 1037. He was the most magnificent prince that ever appeared in India. The most striking instance of his pomp and proclivity was his construction of the famous peacock throne. It took its name from two peacocks fashioned splendidly in sapphires, emeralds rubies and other appropriate jewels which formed the chief ornament of a mass of bullion and precious stones that dazzled every beholder. Tavernier, a jeweller by profession, reports that it cost nearly six millions and a-half sterling. His greatest splendour was shown in his buildings. He founded a new city at Delhi called after him Shahjahanabad but of all the structures erected by him there is none that bears any comparison with the Taj Mahal at Agra, a mausoleum of white marble decorated with mosaic, which in the richness of the material the chiceness of the design, and the effect of one brilliant and solemn is not surpassed by any edifice, either in Europe or Asia. Taj Mahal is a corruption of Mumtaz Mahal (Arjuman Begum, q.v.), the name of Shah Jahan's favourite wife, whose sepulchre it forms. Shah Jahan reigned thirty years, but was deposed and confined in the fort of Agra by his son 'Alamgir Arzangzeb on the 9th June A.D. 1658, 17th Ramezan, A.H. 1068, and died at Agra, after an imprisonment of 7 years and 10 months, on Monday night, the 23rd January, A.D. 1666, 26th Rajab A.H. 1076, aged 78 lunar years 3 months and 17 days, and was buried in the Taj close to his wife's tomb. There were living at the time of his imprisonment four of his sons and four daughters. Of the sons the eldest was Dara Shikoh, the second Sulṭān Shujāa, the third 'Alamgir, and the fourth Mu'az Bakhsh, but 'Alamgir, who succeeded his father, murdered two of his brothers, viz. Dara and Mu'az, and the third, Sulṭān Shujāa, died in Arracan, or was murdered by the Raja of that country. His daughters were Arjuman 'Arā, Gauh 'Arā, Jahan 'Arā, and Dahr 'Arā (or Roshan 'Arā).

Shah Jahan Begam of Bhopal (شاه)

succeeded to the principality of Bhopāl on the death of her mother, Sikandar Begam, on the 30th October, A.D. 1868. Her Highness in A.D. 1871 married her prime minister, Muhammad Sādik Hasan Khān, by the advice or consent of the Supreme Government. He was her second husband. She commanded that in future he should be addressed thus: Motamid-ul-Muhārri Muhammad Sādik Hasan Khān Sahib Bahādur, second minister of the State of Bhopāl.

Shah Jalāl (شاه جلال), a Muhammadan

saint of great sanctity, whose tomb is in Sylhet. This shrine has a large number of attendants to minister at it, and the pigeons and other birds which flock there are held as sacred as the birds within the temple of Mecca.

Shah Karak (شاه کرک), a celebrated

Muhammadan saint, who is buried at Kara, a city in the province of Allahābād, and whose tomb is still held sacred by the Musalmāns. It is mentioned by Firishṭa, that the day before the assassination of Sulṭān Jalāl-uddin Firuz, in A.D. 1296, Sulṭān 'Alā-uddin visited the holy man, who, rising from his pillows repeated the following extempore verses: "He who cometh against thee shall lose his head in the boat, and his body shall be thrown into the Ganges;" which, they say, was explained a few hours afterwards by the death of the unfortunate king, whose head fell into the boat upon this occasion. Shāh Karak died between the years A.D. 1296 and A.D. 1316.

Shah Maḍar (شاه مدار), a celebrated

Muhammadan saint, whose proper name was

Badi-uddin. He was a disciple of Shaikh Muhammad Taifūr Bastāmī, and is the founder of the sect called Madāria in India. Many curious anecdotes are related of him. He died on the 20th December, A.D. 1434, A.H. 838, aged 124 years, and is buried at Makanpūr in Qanauj, where a great assembly is held every year at his tomb. He was a contemporary of Qāzi Shāhāb-uddin Daulatābādī, who lived in the time of Sulṭān Ibrāhīm Sharqī of Jaunpūr.

Shah Mansur (شاه منصور), last

Sulṭān of the dynasty of the Muzaffarians, was the son of Shāh Muhammad Muzaffar. He reigned in 'Irāq and Fars after Shāh Zain-ul-'Abidin, whom he deprived of sight, and took possession of Shirāz. He was defeated by Amir Taimūr, who put him to death on Thursday, the 22nd May, A.D. 1393, 10th Rajab, A.H. 795.

Shah Mir (شاه میر), also called Miān, whose proper name was Shaikh Muhammad, was a descendant of the Khalif 'Umar, and a very pious Musalmān. He is reckoned amongst the Muhammadan saints. He was born at Shīstān A.D. 1550, A.H. 957, came to Lāhore, where he resided 60 years, and died there on Tuesday, the 11th August, A.D. 1635, 7th Rabi' I. A.H. 1045, aged 88 lunar years. He is buried at a place called Hās-himpūr, near Lāhore. He had numerous disciples, one of whom was Mullā Shāh, the spiritual guide of the prince Darā Shikōh, the eldest son of the emperor Shāh Jahān. He is the author of the work called Ziyā-ul-Ayūn, or the Light of the Eyes, containing the rules for propriety of conduct through life.

Shah Mir (شاه میر), first Muhammadan king of Kashmere. The original inhabitants of Kashmere appear to have been the followers of Brahmā. The period of the first establishment of the Muhammadan faith in that country took place during the reign of Rāja Seina Dēva, about the year A.D. 1315, A.H. 715, when a person called Shāh Mir, coming to Kashmere in the habit of a Dervish, was admitted into the service of that prince. Upon the death of the Rāja he was appointed prime minister to his son and successor, Rāja Ranjan. When this Rāja died Anand Dev, who succeeded him, also made Shāh Mir his minister. The whole of this family not only gained great ascendancy over the Rāja, but also over the minds of the people, till the Rāja, becoming jealous of their power, forbade them in court. This exclusion drove Shah Mir into rebellion, when, having occupied the valley of Kashmere with his troops, most of the officers of the Rāja's government also joined him. This insurrection soon brought the Rāja to the grave, and in the year A.D. 1327, A.H. 727, he died of a broken heart, leaving his widow regent. Shāh Mir, after some years, married Kaula Devi, the wife of the Rāja, who embraced the Muhammadan faith, an event which secured to him the country which he had before nearly usurped. It is related by another author, that when preparations for the marriage commenced, the devoted princess, despairing and ignorant, surrounded by her train of maidens, advanced into the presence of the usurper and, upbraiding him for his ingratitude and treachery, stabbed herself before him. Thus perished, by her own hand, the last Hindū sovereign of Kashmere, and Shāh Mir, who is considered the first Muhammadan king of that country, ascended the throne under the title of Sulṭān Shams-uddīn in the year A.D. 1341, A.H. 742. He died in A.D. 1344 or A.D. 1349, A.H. 745 or A.H. 750, and was succeeded by his son Jamshid.

List of the Muhammadan Kings of Kashmere.

1. Sulṭān Shams-uddīn Shāh Mir.
2. Jamshid, son of Shāh Mir, reigned 14 months, and was expelled by his younger brother, 'Alā-uddīn 'Alishir, and slain.
3. 'Alā-uddīn 'Alishir, son of Shāh Mir, reigned 13 years.
4. Shahāb-uddīn, son of 'Alā-uddīn, reigned 19 years, and died A.D. 1376.
5. Qutb-uddīn, brother of Shahāb-uddīn, during whose reign the famous Sayyad 'Alī Hamdānī arrived in Kashmere. He reigned 15 years.
6. Sikandar, surnamed Butshikan, who destroyed all images and subverted the Hindū religion, was the son of Qutb-uddīn, and a contemporary of Amir Taimūr. He reigned about 25 years.
7. 'Alī Shāh, the son of Sikandar, reigned nearly 7 years.
8. Zain-ul-'Abidīn, brother of 'Alī Shāh, reigned 52 years, and died about the year A.D. 1474.
9. Haidar Shāh, son of Zain-ul-'Abidīn, reigned little more than a year, and was killed by a fall from his palace.
10. Sulṭān Hasan, son of Haidar Shāh, reigned 12 years in excess and drunkenness.
11. Muhammad Shāh, a child of seven years of age, son of Hasan Shāh. He had several battles with Fatha Khān, and after a reign of 11 years was imprisoned by his uncle.
12. Fatha Khān, who took the title of Fatha Shāh, reigned 10 years.

Muhammad Shāh re-ascended the throne in A.D. 1596, and reigned two months, and then Fatha Shāh one year, after which Muhammad Shāh ascended the throne the third time, and was deposed after a reign of 19 years. He was once more raised to the throne, and died in A.D. 1533 after an interrupted reign of 50 years.

Ibrāhīm, the son of Muhammad, reigned five years.

Mubārīk Shāh, also called Nāzūk and Barbak, son of Ibrāhīm, ascended the throne and, after a reign of three months, was expelled by the army of the emperor Humāyūn, who, being defeated by Sheir Shāh in A.D. 1541, had fled his country, and had retreated to Lāhore, whence he sent an army under the command of Mirzā Haidar Dughlāt, who, invading Kashmere, conquered that province, and reigned there 10 years.

Mirzā Haidar Dughlāt, after a reign of nearly 10 years, was killed in a night attack in A.D. 1551, A.H. 958. After his death the leading men divided the country into three principalities among themselves, though for form's sake Nāzūk, the son of Ibrāhīm, was again seated on the throne, and was again deposed the second time, by his brother.

Ibrāhīm II. was placed on the throne by Daulat Chak, and after a short time was deposed and blinded, and his brother

Ismā'īl was raised to the throne in A.D. 1556. He reigned nearly two years, and was succeeded by his son

Habīb, who ascended the throne and reigned three years, after which he was imprisoned by Ghāzī Chak.

Ghāzī Chak declared himself king and assumed the title of Ghāzī Shāh, and reigned four years, when, being attacked by a leprosy, he abdicated the throne in A.D. 1563.

Iḥsān Shāh, his brother, mounted the throne, reigned six years, and was compelled to abdicate in favour of his brother 'Alī Khān in A.D. 1569.

'Alī Shāh ascended the throne in A.D. 1569, and in the year A.D. 1572 Mullā Ishqī and Qāzī Saḍr-uddīn came as ambassadors from the court of Delhi, the result of which was that Akbar was proclaimed emperor of Kashmere in the public prayers; and 'Alī Shāh, at the request of Akbar, sent his niece, the daughter of his brother Husain Shāh, to be married to the prince Salīm. In the year A.D. 1578, 'Alī Shāh was killed by a fall from his horse, after a reign of nine years, and was succeeded by his son

Yūsaf Chak, who proceeded to the court of Akbar in 1586, and his son

Yaqūb Chak succeeded to the throne in consequence of his father's detention at the court of Delhi. In the year A.D. 1587, A.H. 995, Akbar appointed Muhammad Qāsim Khān, Amīr-ul-Bahr (Admiral), to march and subdue Kashmere. Yaqūb was defeated and at last seized and sent to Delhi in 1588, where Akbar enrolled Yūsaf Shāh and his son Yaqūb among the nobles of his government. Each of them received estates in the province of Behār, and from that period the kingdom of Kashmere has been a province of Delhi.

Shah Muhammad, Khalifa (شاه محمد),

خلیفہ), author of the book called Inshāh Jāmg-ul-Qawānīn, commonly called Inshāh Khālifa, containing forms of letters.

Shah Murad (شاه مورد). Vide Murad Mirzā.

Shahnawaz Khān (شاهنواز خان), son of 'Abdul Rahīm Khān KhānKhānān. His daughter was married to prince Shāh Jahān. He died in the year A.H. 1028.

Shahnawaz Khan (شاهنواز خان), a nobleman of the reign of the emperor Shāh Jahān, was the son of 'Asaf Khān, wazīr, and father-in-law of the emperor 'Alamgir, and of his brother prince Murād Baksh; though the author of the Māsi-ul-Umrā says that he was the son of Mirzā Rustam Qandahari. He was appointed governor of Gujrāt in the room of the prince Murād Baksh, who was imprisoned by order of his brother 'Alamgir in July, A.D. 1658. When Dārā Shikoh, through various adventures, after his flight from Multān, came to Ahmadābād Gujrāt, Shāhuawāz Khān, his maternal uncle, was then in that city, and his daughter, the wife of Murād Baksh, was in his palace. Her bitter supplications against 'Alamgir, the impending murderer of her husband, prevailed on him to join the cause of Dārā, for whom he levied an army, and marched with him towards Ajmīr, where on their arrival a bloody battle ensued between the armies of Dārā and 'Alamgir, on Sunday, the 13th March, A.D. 1659, Jumādā II. A.H. 1069, which ended in the defeat and flight of Dārā and death of Shāhuawāz Khān, who fell by the lance of Dilīr Khān. He was buried by the orders of 'Alamgir in the mausoleum of Khwāja Mo'in-uddīn Chishtī at Ajmīr.

Shahnawaz Khan (شاهنواز خان), a nobleman of Shāh 'Alam's court, author of the book called Mirāt-i-Afshār-nūma, a work on the history of modern Delhi.

Shahnawaz Khan (شهنواز خان سمس), الدولة, entitled Samsām-uddaula.

The original name of this nobleman was 'Abdul Hazzāk; he was descended from the family of Sadāt of Khawāf in Khurāsān, but his great-grandfather Amīr Kamāl-uddīn left Khawāf, and came to Hindūstān in the reign of the emperor Akbar, when he was admitted amongst the nobles of the court of Agra. Mirak Husain, the son of Kamāl-uddīn, held a situation in the service of the State, in the reign of Jahāngīr. The son of Mirak Husain, Mirak Mo'in-uddīn, commonly called Amānat Khān, was in great favour with Shāh Jahān, and rose to the first rank. He retained also the patronage of 'Alamgir, was appointed by him to various important governments, as those of Lāhore, Multān, Kābul and Kashmir. Amānat Khān was the ablest man in the court, and a great favourite of 'Alamgir. When the emperor resided in Upper India, he bestowed the Subādārī of the Deccan on Khān Khān Bahādūr Kokaltāsh about the year A.D. 1670, A.H. 1081, and Amānat Khān was appointed Diwān of the Deccan, or Paymaster-General, and Historiographer. He had four sons of eminent character: the first, 'Abdul Qādir Dayānat Khān, was the keeper of the Privy Purse; the second, Mir Husain Amānat Khān, was the public treasurer and governor of Sūrat; after his death the latter post was assigned to his elder brother; the third son was Mir 'Abdul Rahmān Wazīrat Khān, who was promoted to the Diwān of Mālwa and Bijāpur; he was an excellent poet and composed a Diwān under the poetical title of Bīkrāmī; the fourth son, Qāsim Khān, was Diwān of Multān. Mir Hasan 'Alī, the son of Qāsim Khān, was the father of Nawāb Samsām-uddaula Shāhuawāz Khān. He was born on the 10th March, A.D. 1700, 29th Ramazān, A.H. 1111, at Lāhore, but repaired to Aurangābād at an early age, and took up his abode with his relations and kinsmen who resided there before him. He was enraged first by Nizām-ul-Mulk 'Asaf Jāh, under whom, and his son Nāsir Jang, he served as Diwān of Berār for several years. In the time of Salābat Jang he was raised to the rank of 7000 with the title of Samsām-uddaula. On the 12th May, A.D. 1768, 3rd Ramazān, A.H. 1171, the day on which 'Abdul Rahmān Haidar Jang, the counsellor of Monsieur Bussy, the French general, was assassinated by the instigation of Nizām 'Alī, the brother of Salābat Jang, he also was murdered in the confusion, together with his youngest son, Mir 'Abdul Nabi Khān, but his two other sons, Mir 'Abdur Salām and Mir 'Abdul Hai, escaped. The remains of the father and son were interred in the tomb of their ancestors in the southern part of the city of Aurangābād. The chronogram of this event gives the following: "We have been murdered by 'Abdul Rahmān." Shāhnawāz Khān is the author of the work called Māsi-ul-Umrā Taimūriya, containing the memoirs of the nobility who served in Hindūstān and the Deccan under the house of Taimūr. It was commenced by him, but he left it unfinished, and in the turbulent scenes which attended his death the manuscript was scattered in various directions, and was considered as lost; some short time afterwards Mir Ghulam 'Alī Asād, a friend of his, collected the greater portion of the missing leaves, and restored the work to its entire form with a few additions, amongst which was the life of the author. At a subsequent period again, his son Mir 'Abdul Hai Khān, who had received the title of Samsām-uddaula Samsām Jang after his father's death, completed the work in the form in which it now occurs, in the year A.D. 1779, and died on the 26th April, A.D. 1782, 15th Jumādā I. A.H. 1196.

Sultān Begum, was the daughter of Shāh Sultān Husain Satwa. Shahrukh was raised to the throne some time after the death of his grandfather, but was soon afterwards seized and deprived of sight. He retired to Mash-had, which province he was allowed to hold in his possession till the time of his death, which happened at Dāmghān in A D 1796.
His death was the consequence of the tortures that had been inflicted upon him by 'Aqa Muhammad, king of Persia, who by this act extorted from him many precious stones of great value which had once belonged to Nādir Shāh.

Shahrukh, Mirza (شاهرخ میرزا), was the fourth son of Amir Tamūr, and held the government of Khujānsāu at his father's death, which took place in February, A D 1405. After the imprisonment of Sultān

Khalīl, his nephew, ruler of Samargand, A D 1408, A H 811, he marched from Khujānsāu to take possession of his dominions. His authority was immediately acknowledged, not only in Samargand, but over all Transoxiana.
He was brave and generous, but not an ambitious prince, and during a reign of 42 years we hear of no wars in which he was engaged, except with the Turkmān tribes of Asia Minor, whose power Tamūr had overcome, but not destroyed. Mirzā Shahrukh was born at Samargand on the 21st July,
A D 1377, 14th Rabi' l A H 779, and died at Fīshawād in the province of Rei, on the Persian new year's day, viz Sunday, the 12th March, A D 1447, 25th Zil-hijja, A H
850, aged 71 lunar years. He reigned 42 years, during which the conquests of his father in India seem to have remained in subjection to his authority. At his death he left five sons, viz Mirzā Ulugh Beg, Ibrahim Mirza, Mirzā Bawanghar, Sayū-ghumish, and Muhammad Jugi. He was succeeded by his son Mirzā Ulugh Beg.

Shahrukh Mirza (شاهرخ میرزا), a descendant of Amir Tamur, was the son of Ibrahim Mirza the son of Mirzā Sulaimān, ruler of Badakhshan. His mother's name was Muhtamim Khanum. About the year
A D 1570, A H 983 he forcibly took possession of Badakhshan from his grandfather, and reigned there about 10 years after which,
in A D 1585, A H 993, that province was conquered by Abdullah Khan Uzbek, and Shahrukh compelled to fly to India, where he was kindly received by the emperor Akbar, who gave him his daughter Shikar-un-Nisā
Begum in marriage in the year A D 1592, A H 1001 and raised him to the rank of an Amir of 5000. In the time of Jahangir the rank of 7000 was conferred on him.
He died at Ljūm in A D 1607, A H 1016, and was buried there.

Shahruk Mirza or Mirza Shahruk (شاهرخ میرزا), who had a pugnacious temper, was murdered by his younger brother in the year A H 1032.

Shahryar (شهریار), a king of Persia of the Sassanid race, who reigned in Persia a few months in A D 629. Fide Shu'dja

Shahryar, Sultan (شهریار سلطان), the youngest son of the emperor Jahangir, was married to a daughter of Nūr Jahan Begum by her former husband, Sher Afghān Khan.
On the death of Jahangir in A D 1627, A H 1037, this prince, who was then at Lahore, seized the royal treasure brought over the troops, and turning a coalition with the two sons of his uncle, the late prince Daniāl, marched out to oppose 'Asif Khan the warrior, who had released prince Dawar Baksh, surnamed Bulāq, the son of Sultan Khwāro, from prison, and proclaimed him king. The battle ended in Shahryār's defeat. He fled, but being given up by his adherents, was imprisoned and blinded. He was, after three months, put to death, together with Dāwar Bakhsh and the two sons of Daniāl, named Tahmur and Hoshang, by order of Shāh Jahān (q.v.). Shuhryār was famous for the beauty of his person as also for his mental imbecility, on which latter account he was called "Nāshudani" (the Inefficient), answering to the O. E. "Niddering."

Shah Sadr (شاد سادر), a Muhammadan

saint, whose tomb is situated at the foot of a large mountain of Siwistān, at the distance of about 300 yards from the village of Lakki in Sindh, which belongs to the Sayyads of that place. This famous saint, says Lutf-ullah in his Autogrophy, originally came from Arabia, and brought thousands of infidels to the light of Islām from the darkness of idolatry in Sindh. The year of his death is not known, but his tomb was built here by order of Nādir Shāh, king of Persia, in A.H. 1155. Tradition states that Nādir in a dream was invited by this saint to come to Amarkote, where he was to find a very large treasure. Nādir, having acted upon the visionary command, discovered the treasure promised to him, and received a very large amount as a tribute from the Amirs of Sindh. Nādir then bestowed a large sum of money upon the Sayyads of the village, and directed them to have the edifice built over the remains of the saints. This they carried into execution, and an inscription at the door of the shrine, of which translation follows, gives the date of its completion:—

"I inquired of intellect the year of its date.
"Inspiration informed me, It is the Paradise of the members of the sacred house." A.D. 1742, A.H. 1155.

All Sayyads of Sindh that are called Lakki Sayyads are, I am informed (says Lutf-ullah), the descendants of this saint, whose parentage ascends up to the Imām 'Alī Naki. I am therefore inclined to think that the word Lakki is a corruption of Naki, which is the name of the tenth Imām.

Shah Safi (شاد صفي), grandson of Shāh Abbās the Great, king of Persia. His father's name was Safi Mirzā and his original name Bahram Mirzā. He succeeded his grandfather in January, A.D. 1629, Jumādā I. A.H. 1038, and took the title of Shāh Safi. He was a capricious tyrant; and every year of his rule presented the same horrid and disgusting scene of barbarous cruelty. All the princes of the blood royal, and almost every minister, or general of family or character, were either put to death, or deprived of their eyes, by command of this monarch. He reigned nearly 14 years, died in May, A.D. 1642, Safar, A.H. 1052, and was succeeded by his son, Abbās II.

Shah Sharaf-uddin (شاد شرف الدين),

a Muhammadan saint, who died in the year

A.D. 1379, A.H. 781, and is buried in Behar, where his monument is still standing and is visited by the Muhammadans. There is an inscription in the Kūfi character over the entrance to the dargāh, which however time has rendered illegible with the exception of the date of the death of the saint, and of the erection of the tomb in A.D. 1569, A.H. 977. The dargāh is held in great veneration by the Muhammadans, who at the 'Urs or anniversary of the death of the saint, assemble from all parts of the country, it is said to the number of 50,000. He is also called Makhdūm-ul-Mulk Shāh Sharif-uddin and Shaikh Sharif. The emperor Sikandar Shāh, the son of Bahlōl Lodi, went to visit his tomb about the year A.D. 1495, A.H. 900.

Shah Sharif or Sharif-uddin (شاد شريف).

Vide Shāh Sharaf-uddin.

Shah Shujāa' (شاد شجاع), Sultān of the Muzaffarians, whose capital was Shirāz. It is said that this prince was in such a manner plagued by a malady called Jū'ī Baqar, or canine hunger, that he could not satisfy his hunger, neither on his journey, nor when he was at rest. He deprived his father, Muhammad Muzaffar, of his sight in A.D. 1359, and held the reins of government in his own hands. His brother Shāh Mahmūd of Isfahān besieged Shirāz in 1364, took possession of that country, and died before his brother in A.D. 1375, 9th Shawwāl, A.H. 776, after a reign of 16 years. Shāh Shujāa' died on Sunday the 9th October, A.D. 1384, 21st Shabān, A.H. 786. He was succeeded by his son Zain-ul-'Abidin, who, on the approach of Amīr Taimūr to Shirāz, retired to Tishtar, where his uncle, Shāh Mansūr, seized him and deprived him of his sight. Shirāz was bestowed by Amīr Taimūr on Shāh Abia, the son of Muzaffar, but it was soon afterwards taken by Shāh Mansūr, in whose possession it remained till it was retaken by that conqueror in A.D. 1393, A.H. 795. There is a garden near Shirāz called Haft-tan, which contains the remains of Shāh Shujāa', and has on one side of it a small building ornamented with a variety of pictures.

Shah Shujāa' or Shuja'-ul-Mulk (شاد شجاع يا شجاع الملك), king of Kābul, was the youngest son of Taimūr Shāh, the son of Ahmad Shāh Abdālī. He was sent to Kashmere by his brother Muhammad Shāh and imprisoned in the fort of the Kāh-i-Mārū in A.D. 1812, from which place he was released in 1814 by Ranjit Singh and detained at Lāhore as a prisoner, till his escape to the British territories. He was placed by the British Government on the throne of Kābul on the 8th May, A.D. 1839, and was murdered by his nephew, a son of Zamān Shāh, on the 2nd May, A.D. 1842. He is the author of a biographical sketch of his own life, written at Luddiana in 1826-27. This work was translated by Lieut. Rennet, of the Artillery, and published in the Asiatic Researches vol. xxx p. 6, under Asiatic Intelligence.

[See Keene's History of India, II]

Shah Sub-han (شاه سوبان), a Muhammadan saint, who died in A.D. 1200, A.H. 596.

Shah Sufi (شاه صوفی), a Muhammadan saint, whose shrine is at a village called Sūfīpūr, in the Pargana of Ferozabad in Agra. It is related by the Khudims of the dargah that in the reign of the emperor Akbar, Shah Sūfī a man of some celebrity, wandered from Istahan to India and took up his hermitage among the Jamna ravines near the city of Chandwar, then the county town of the Pargana of the same name and which, from the remains which still cover the surrounding country in miles, round mosques, dilapidated octagonal mausolea, fallen entrance gates, and such like works of costly strength must have been an important post in a fiscal and military point of view. All the time from which the fable of Shah Sūfī's miracles commence, Raja Chandwar was the lord of the fort of Chandwar, and a troublesome tributary of the Delhi court. Non-compliance with the royal demands for payment of revenue brought upon the Raja the investment of his fort by the army of Akbar who is said to have commanded his fort as a person, and to have prosecuted his attack with no approach to success for a period which the ridiculous or unpoetical Khudims of the establishment have exalted into a term of ten years. In the language of Oriental metaphor, the emperor is said to have planted a mango tree on the commencement of the siege, and to have eaten the fruit of it ere his success was secured. This success he owed to the anchorage of the ravines Shah Sūfī. During a severe land storm the lamps of the entire camp were put out and the light of the Shah's hut alone glimmered in the surrounding darkness. This extraordinary fact led to the Shah's being visited by some of the courtiers. The miraculous character of the event being much commented on by visitors, the Shah acknowledged himself to be under the special favour of heaven and in the end the conversation turned upon the difficulties of the siege, and the grateful sense of the hermit's intercession which the sovereign would entertain in the event of its being brought to a close by his holy means. The Shah promised the required aid, and declared that the fort should be captured by a fixed day. Thus much for the emperor. In respect to the Raja, the Shah acted effectually upon his superstitious fears, told him that the fort was destined to fall, and proffered his own miraculous powers to secure for the Raja a safe and honourable retreat for himself, family, and valuables. The whole were accordingly passed invisible through the besieging camp, and the Raja quitted Hindustan for the eastward. In return for this valuable service, the emperor bestowed half of an hamlet of Chandwar on the Shah. The place assumed the name of Sūfīpūr, and has since been inhabited by the descendants of the Shah. The descent of Shah Sūfī took place soon after the grant was made, and he was buried on the brow of a deep ravine, a handsome tomb being erected over his remains. The mausoleum is still in good order, and forms a picturesque object in the midst of the desolation of the Jamna ravines in the vicinity of Chandwar and Ferozabad. Its pretty dome and minarets, commanding as they do the heights of the Jamna ravines, often lead the voyagers on the river to visit the shrine of the saint, and landwards the building is an object of interest and beauty, which says Mr. Minnel, Collector of Agra, in a letter to the Commissioner of Revenue at Agra, 29th May, 1839, No. 120) all would regret to see lost to the country. There are several darāns a handsome gate, and a small mosque comprised within the building, and the whole is kept in occasional good repair by the outlay of part of the funds of the grant. The fable of the whole is palpable. Indeed, the Raja, who, under the name of Chandwar, was ousted from Chandwar, lived, it is supposed by those best acquainted with the annals of Ferozabad, in the reign of 'Alauddin and his descendants were the party who fell under the displeasure of Akbar.

Shah Sulaiman Safwi (شاه سلیمان صوفی), the son of Shah Abbās II. king of Persia, whom he succeeded on the 26th August A.D. 1666 5th Rabi' I A.H. 1077. He reigned over Persia 29 years, and died A.D. 1694 A.H. 1106. He was succeeded by his son Shah Husun Safwi.

Shah Tahir Junaidi (شاه طاهر حنیدی) also called Dakhani, was the youngest brother of Shah Jafar. He came to India in the time of the emperor Humayun, and went afterwards to the Deccan and was appointed minister to Burhan Nizam Shah I of Ahmadnagar. He was of the Shia sect, and succeeded in converting his sovereign to the Shia persuasion in the year A.D. 1532 A.H. 941, and induced him to exchange the white canopy and scarlet pavilion for the green standard assumed by the followers of 'Ali. Shah Tahir died in the Decem. A.D. 1546, A.H. 952. He was an excellent poet and is the author of several works.

Shaida, Mulla (شیدا ملا), title of a poet who flourished in the latter part of the reign of Jahāngir and commencement of the emperor Shāh Jahān. He was one of the Shāhkhzādas of Fathapūr Sikrī, and a contemporary of the poets Tālib Kālm, Qud'ī, Hākīm Hāzūk, and Nawāb Islām Khān wazīr. His works contain more than 60,000 verses. He has left a Masnawī of 12,000 verses in the style of the Mukham-mal-Asrār of Nizāmī. He died in A.D. 1662, A.H. 1062, in Kashmere, and was buried there. He also had a home at Āgra.

Shaikh 'Alai (شیخ علای), a philosopher of Bayana, who made a great stir in the world in the reign of Sultān Salīm Shāh by introducing a new system of religion. He called himself Imām Majdī, who is believed to be the last of the prophets. This impostor raised great disturbances in the empire, and converted some thousands by force and persuasion. After being twice banished by the king, he returned and kindled fresh troubles, for which he was scourged to death at Āgra, by order of the king, A.D. 1548, A.H. 955. He remained firm to his doctrine in the agonies of death; but his religion was not long maintained by his disciples.

Shaikhi 1st (شیخی), a poet, on whom

Murād I. had conferred a wazirship. The following amusing anecdote of this poet is recorded by an author. In the early part of his career Shaikhi suffered much from a complaint in the eyes, and, being very poor, he was so inconsequent as to open a shop for the sale of eye-water. The price was an asper a bottle. One day, however, a stranger, passing by and observing the bloodshot eyes of the poet, stopped to purchase a bottle, and in paying for it laid down two aspers. "I charge but one asper," said Shaikhi, "as you not know that?" "Certainly I know it," said the stranger, "and therefore you see I give you a second." "Give me a second!" replied Shaikh angrily, "for what?" "To enable you to buy one of your own bottles, my friend," replied the other coolly, "and cure yourself?" The poet shrugged his shoulders and shut up his shop. He flourished about the year 1395.

the celebrated founder of the sect of Sūfi in Persia, from whom were descended the royal Safawi family. He dwelt in Ardabil, in Media, and died there. His son Shaikh Sadr-uddin Mūsā was held in such high estimation that he was honoured by a visit from the great conqueror, Amīr Tīmūr.
That monarch was so much pleased by the Shaikh's conversation that, at his request, he released all the prisoners taken in Asia Minor and Turkey. Many of the captives were persons of wealth and family, who afterwards enriched their benefactor by costly presents and acknowledged him as their tutelary saint.
Their respect, and that of their descendants, was continued to him and his posterity.
Shaikh Safi died at Ardabil on the 7th
August, A.D. 1335, 17th Zil-hijja, A.H. 735.

He died A.D. 1687, A.H. 1098.

Shaiq (شایق), poetical name of Mir
Ghulām 'Alī bin-Sayyad Fatha 'Alī Razawī
Jālisī. He flourished under Ghāzi-uddin Ikbar, king of Audh, who reigned at Lucknow from A.D. 1814 to A.D. 1827, A.H. 1229 to A.H. 1243. He is the author of a Diwān.

Shaiq (شایق نذیر الدین حسن), poetical name of Nasir-uddin Hasan, son of Shāh

Ghulām Muhi-uddin Aweis. He is the author of a work called Maadar Fayda, a grammar to learn the Persian language, which he wrote at Bareilly in the year A.D.
1815, A.H. 1230, when in the service of Nawāb Ahmad Yār Khān.

Shaista Khan, Amir-ul-Umra (شایسته خان امیر الامرا). His original name was Abū Talib, or Mirzā Murād. He was the son of 'Asaf Khān, wazīr, and grandson of 'Itmād-uddaula (q v). After the death of his father, A.D. 1641, he was appointed wazīr by the emperor Shāh Jahān. The large Jama Masjid which stood (till 1857) on the banks of the Jamuna river to the west of the fortress of Allahābād, was built by him in the time of Shāh Jahān and completed in the year A.D. 1646, A.H. 1056. His son Khudā-bānda Khān also held a high rank in the time of 'Alamgir, and was appointed Faujdār of the Karnatic Bījāpūr, and subsequently, after the death of Itih-ullah Khān, he held the post of grand steward of the household.

Shaista Khān was appointed governor of Berār by Shāh Jahān in A.D. 1638; and in A.D. 1652 to the more important command of Gujrat. In A.D. 1656 he was employed by 'Alamgir (Aurangzeb), at that time viceroy of the Deccan, to serve as lieutenant to his eldest son, Sultan Muhammad, in the war of Golkanda. In the contentions of Shāh Jahān's sons for the throne in A.D. 1658, he served with Dārā Shikōh, whom he betrayed by giving intelligence and guides to Aurangzeb. He was appointed in July, A.D. 1659, governor of the Deccan in the room of Muhammad Muazzin, the son of the emperor
'Alamgir, who was recalled to the presence, and in A.D. 1666 as governor of Bengal. He kept his court at Dacca, and by his injustice provoked a war with Job Charnock, Governor of the factory of the East India Company at Golāghāt, near Hughli. He died in the reign of 'Alamgir on the 31st May, A.D. 1694, 16th Shawwāl, A.H. 1105, aged 93 lunar years.
Some traces of his Rauza and garden are still to be seen at Āgra on the bank of the Jamna.

Shaista Khan, Nawab (شایسته خان) (نواب), the son of Asaf Khān, the prime minister.

Shakar-un-Nisa Begam (شاکران نسا)
(بیگم), the daughter of the emperor
Akbar, who gave her in marriage to Mirzā Shāhrukhh son of Ibrāhīm Mirzā. She is buried in the mausoleum of Akbar at Sikaudra in Āgra. Her mother's name was Bihā Daulat Shāh.

Shakir (شاکر), the poetical name of Nizām-ul-Mulk 'Asaf Jah.

Shakir (شاکر), the poetical name of

'Abdur Rahmān, author of the poetical work called Gulistan Musarrat, which he also named Hadiqat-ul-Ma'ani. He wrote this book at Lucknow during the reign of Amjad 'Ali Shāh in A.D. 1845, A.H. 1261, and finished it in the time of Wajid 'Ali Shāh.

Shali (شالی), author of a Diwān, which goes after his name, Diwān Shāhī.

Shama'ul-Mulk (شمع الملک), title of the ruler of Jurjān, named Qābūs.

Shamgar (شمگر). Vide Qābūs. He is called Shamgīr by Daulat Shāh.

Shamru, Samru of Sombre (شمرو), whose real name was Walter Reinhardt, a person of obscure parentage in the Electorate of Treves. He entered early as a common soldier the service of the French, taking for his nom-de-guerre Summer, which his comrades, from his saturnine complexion, turned into Sombre, and the Indians, by corruption, Samrū and Shamrū. At length he repaired to Bengal, and enlisted in one of the Swiss Companies then employed at Calcutta; but at the end of eighteen days deserted to the French at Chandernagar, where he became a serjeant. Desiring this post he fled into the Upper Provinces, and was for some time a private trooper in the cavalry of Saldar Jang, tather to Shajā-uddaula. This service he quitted and led a vagabond life in different provinces; but in A.D. 1766 was with the rebel Fāzdar of Purnia Khādim Husain Khān. Upon his being expelled from Bengal, Shamrū left him and entered into the service of Gregory, an Armenian, then in high favour with Nawāb 'Āsim 'Ali Khān and distinguished with the title of Gurgin Khān. From him he had the command of a battalion of Sepoys, and afterwards obtained from the nawāb the addition of another. In this station he massacred the English captives at Patna in A.D. 1763. Some time previous to the battle of Buxar he treacherously deserted 'Āsim 'Ali with his corps, and embraced the service of the Nawāb Shujā uddaula, who had gained him over by bribes. Upon the nawāb's defeat at Buxar he was entrusted with the protection of the Begams, and remained with nawāb till he made peace with the English, when, fearful of being delivered up to them, he retired to Agra, and entered into the pay of the Jāi Rāja Jawāhīr Singh; but quitted him for the service of the Rāja of Jaipur, who soon dismissed him on a remonstrance from the English General. He then again served the Jāis; quitted them once more, and came to Delhi, from whence he followed the fortunes of Nawāb Nujaf Khān, in whose service he died. Such are the outlines of the fortunes of this man, who had some merit as a soldier,* but wholly obscured by a treacherous and blood-thirsty disposition. His corps was continued after his death in the name of his son and a favourite concubine, who received for their maintenance the sum of 65,000 rupees per month. He died, or was murdered, in the year A.D. 1778, A.H. 1192, at Agra, where his tomb is to be seen in the Roman Catholic burial-ground, with a Persian inscription in verse, mentioning the year of his death and his name.

Shamru Begam (شمرو بیگم), the celobrated princess of Sardhana, whose native title was Zeb-un-Nisa, was the wife, or rather concubine, of Shamrū or Sombre. She held an extensive jagir at Sardhana, and died on the 27th January, A.D. 1836, 8th Shawwāl, A.H. 1251, aged 88 lunar years. She was buried in the church of Sardhana, of which she was the founder. She was one of the oldest and most sincere allies of the English. At her death she left upwards of six lakhs of rupees to various charitable and pious purposes, and gave instructions for founding a college for young men, to serve on the apostolic mission of Thibet and Hindustān. Captain Mundy, in his Journal of a Tour in India, says that the history of her life, if properly known, would form a series of scenes such as, perhaps, no other female could have gone through. Colonel Skinner had often, during his service with the Marhattas, seen her, then a beautiful young woman, leading on her troops to the attack in person and displaying, in the midst of carnage, the greatest intrepidity and presence of mind. The Begam contracted a lawful marriage in A.D. 1793. Her first lord, Reinhardt, who bought her when a young and handsome dancing girl, married, and converted her to the Roman Catholic religion. Her second husband was a French adventurer, a soldier of fortune named Levasseult, who commanded her small army. It is of this man that the following anecdote is related, which is wondrous strange, if it be true. Skinner used to say that her husband had become possessed of wealth, power, and a numerous army; of these his ambitious wife coveted the undivided possession, and she then accomplished her purpose. A mutinous disposition, on the subject of pay, having manifested itself among his body-guard, the Begam, then about twenty-five, exaggerated the danger to her husband, and got intelligence conveyed to him that the rebels had formed a plan to seize and confine him, and to dishonour his wife. They consequently arranged to escape together from the fury of the soldiery; and at night started secretly from their palace in palankeens. Towards morning the attendants, in great alarm, announced that they were pursued; and our heroine, in well-feigned despair, vowed that, if their escort were overcome, she would stab herself to the heart. The devoted husband, as she expected, swore he would not survive her.

Soon afterwards the pretended rebels came up, and after a short skirmish drove back the attendants, and forced the bearers to put down the palankeens. At this instant Levassault heard a scream, and his wife's female slave rushed up to him and exclaimed that her mistress had stabbed herself to death. The husband, true to his vow, instantly seized a pistol and blew out his brains. His tomb is at Sardhana. [So wrote Mr. Deale, but the Begam's collusion has never been proved.]

Shamshir Bahadur I. (شمشير بهادر),

an illegitimate offspring of the Peshwā Baji Rāo Marhāṭya by a Muslimān concubine named Mastāni, who brought him up in the Muhammadan religion. He was severely wounded in the famous battle which took place between the Marhāṭyas and Ahmad Shāh Abdālī in January, A.D. 1761, and got to Dīg, where Sūrajmāl Jāt had his wounds treated with the greatest care, but he died soon afterwards, and was buried at Dīg.

Shamshir Bahadur II. (شمشير بهادر),

Nawāb of Banda, was the eldest son of 'Alī Bahādūr, the son of Shamshir Bahādūr I., the son of Baji Rāo Peshwā. He succeeded to the territories of his father in Bundelkhānd about the year A.D. 1802, but subsequently a pension or stipend of four lakhs of rupees annually was granted him in perpetuity by the British Government. He died on the 30th August, A.D. 1823, 24th Zil-Qa'da, A.H. 1238, and was succeeded by his brother Zulfiqār 'Alī Khān.

Shamshir Khan (شمشير خان), a nobleman, at whose request a prose abridgment of the Shāh-nāma of Firdausi was made by Tawakkul Mūnshī in A.D. 1652, A.H. 1063.

Shams Shahab 'Afīf (شمس شهاب عفيف), the son of Malik Sad-ul-Mulk, who was Amaldār of Abūhar and Dībālpūr in the reign of Sultān Ghayās-uddīn Tughlaq. He was born the very day that Sultān Fīroz Shāh came into the world, i.e. in the year A.D. 1309, A.H. 709, and was the grandfather of Shams Sirāj Afīf, the author of the Tārīkh Fīroz Shāhī.

Shams Sirāj 'Afīf (شمس سراج عفيف),

the grandson of Shams Shahab Afīf, was an historian who flourished in the reign of Sultān Fīroz Shāh Bārbak, king of Delhi, who reigned from A.D. 1351 to 1388. He is the author of the entire history of that monarch, called Tārīkh Fīroz Shāhī, in which he relates that when that emperor built the city of Fīrozābād, adjoining to that of (old) Delhi, in the year A.D. 1354,

A.H. 755, he (the author) was then 13 years of age, and that the red stone pillar in the Koshak of Fīrozābād, near the mosque or Jama Masjid, was brought by that emperor in the same year, with great expense and labour, from a place called Nawāira, in the vicinity of Sitaura, near Khizrābād, a city situated at the foot of a mountain, ninety cās distant from (old) Delhi, where it then stood. The whole length of this pillar, says the author, was 32 gaz, eight of which the king ordered to be buried in the earth or sunk in the building, and the remaining 24 to be above the surface. This pillar was called by the emperor, Minar Zavīn, i.e. the Golden Minar. The second pillar which the emperor set up within his hunting-place, called Shikārgāh Fīroz Shāh, was brought from Mirath, and was somewhat smaller than the one just mentioned. This pillar is now called the Lāgh of Fīroz Shāh. These two pillars were, even at that period, as they are still, believed by the Hindūs to have been the walking sticks of a famous hero of antiquity named Bhiṃ Sen. The characters engraved round these two pillars the most intelligent and learned men of all religions were not able to decipher. They have now been shown to have been made by Asoka. The author was living at the time of Timurlane's invasion of India in A.D. 1398, A.H. 801, whom he has mentioned in his work.

Shams-uddīn 'Alī Khan (شمس الدین علی خان), author of the Muntahab-ul-Hamādi, which contains the history of the eighth Imām, &c. 'Alī Razā bin-Mūsā, also called 'Alī Muṣṭafā Razā, who died A.D. 818, and whose tomb is at Mashhad (formerly called Tus) in Khurāsān, and is still an object of pilgrimage to the Persians; also mentions of his descendants. This work was translated from the Arabic of Abū Ja'far.

Shams-uddin-al-Shafa'ī (شمس الدين), author of the Arabic work called Ayūn-ul-Aṣar, containing the wars and conquests of Muhammad, his successors and companions, interspersed with various anecdotes of his generals

Shams-uddin Altimsh, Sultan (شمس الدين الممش سلطان), a king of Delhi, whose original name was Altimsh. In his childhood he was bought from a merchant by Sultan Qutb-uddin Aibak, king of Delhi, who afterwards gave him his daughter in marriage. He expelled Aram Shah the son of Qutb-uddin, from the throne of Delhi, A.D. 1210, A.H. 607, and declared him his king, with the title of Shams-uddin. He defeated and imprisoned Iqbal-uddin Iltutmish king of Ghazni who came to Lahore with a large army in A.D. 1217. He besieged for a whole year the fortress of Fawahar, and took it in A.D. 1233 and after a reign of 26 years, died on the 30th April, A.D. 1236, A.H. 638. His son Sultan Itutm-uddin Iltutmish succeeded him. It is supposed that the Qutb Minar in old Delhi which is now commonly called the Lash of Qutb Shah, because it stands close to the dargah of the celebrated saint Khwaja Qutb-uddin Bakhtiyar Kaki was built or completed by Sultan Shams-uddin Altimsh some time before the year A.D. 1236. A part of it was injured by lightning and was repaired and completed on the 26th October, A.D. 1601, 13th Rabi II A.H. 917, by Fakhru Muḥammad 'Alī in the reign of Sultan Sikandar Shah Lodhi.

Shams-uddin Bahmani, Sultan (شمس الدين بهمنی سلطان), the son of Sultan Mahmud Bahmani. He was placed on the throne of the Deccan on the 11th June, A.D. 1397, 17th Rabi'az in A.H. 799, after the dethronement of his brother Ghayas-uddin by Lachin who was now honoured with the title of Malik Nāib, or regent. Shams-uddin had reigned only five months and seven days when Iltutm Khan the son of Sultan Daud Shah, having deposed him, sent him, together with Iltutm, to confinement and ascended the throne, with the title of Firoz Shāh Rūzafsan, on Thursday the 15th November, A.D. 1397, 23rd Šafar, A.H. 800.

Shams-uddin bin-Mubarik (شمس الدين بن مبارک), author of the Sharah Hikmat-ul-Asn.

Shams-uddin Faqir, Mīr (شمس الدين فقير مير), a native of Delhi, and author of the work called Hadiq-ul-Baidghat, or Garden of Eloquence, a treatise on the rhazms, poetry and rhyme of the Persians.

Shams-uddin Kart I. Malik (شمس الدين كرت ملك), also called Malik

Shams-uddin Muhammad Kart, the son of Aha Bakar Kart, was the founder of the dynasty of Kart or Kard, a tribe of Turks. He commenced his reign in the year A.D. 1268, A.H. 666, over Herat, Ghazni, and Kabul. His mother was the daughter of Malik Rukn-uddin Ghori, who, before his death in A.D. 1245, A.H. 643, had named him to be his successor, and which was subsequently confirmed by Mangū Khan and Ilakū Khan kings of Persia. His descendants continued to reign over those countries for 119 lunar years and two months, till they were extinguished by Amir Taimur (Lamerlan) in A.D. 1381. He was a contemporary of Abūqā Khan, king of Persia, and died at Tibriz in January, A.D. 1278, Šahin, A.H. 676, after a reign of ten years, and was succeeded by his son Malik Shams-uddin II.

Shams-uddin Kart II Malik (شمس الدين كرت ملك), second king of the dynasty of Kart, was the son of Shams-uddin Kart I whom he succeeded in January, A.D. 1278, A.H. 676. He was a contemporary of Abūqā Khan, the Tartar king of Persia, and reigned about 26 years over Herat, Ghazni, Balkh, etc. He died on Thursday the 2nd September, A.D. 1300, 12th Šafar, A.H. 706 and was succeeded by his son Malik Fakhr-uddin Bahman.

Shams-uddin Kart III Malik (شمس الدين كرت ملك), the fifth Sultan of the dynasty of Kart, who reigned over Herat, Balkh, Ghazni and Kabul. He succeeded his father, Ghayas-uddin Kart, in A.D. 1329, A.H. 729, reigned ten months and died in A.D. 1330, A.H. 730. He was succeeded by his brother Malik Hadr, who was slain in 1332. After him Mo'izz-uddin Husam, his brother, ascended the throne.

Shams-uddin Khan (شمس الدين خان), the nawāb of Ferozpur, was the son of Nawāb Ahmad Baksh Khan, a jagirdār of Pargana Ferozpur and Ludhiana, in was at his instigation that Karīm Khan, one of his confidants, murdered Mr. W. Fraser, the British Commissioner of Dehli, on the evening of the 22nd March, A.D. 1835, for which act Karīm Khan was hanged on the 26th August following, and subsequently the nawāb, being found guilty after a full investigation of the case, was executed on the 8th October of the same year at Dehli. Nawāb Shams-uddin was the Jagirdār of Firozpur, the town of a large district of the same name, situated at a distance of sixty miles to the south-west of Dehli. He enjoyed a revenue variously estimated at from three to ten lakhs of rupees a year. The actual cause of his animosity towards Mr. Fraser, and the reason which induced him to instigate this murder, will, perhaps, ever remain a mystery. The supposition is that Mr. Fraser had, in the faithful discharge of his duty, apportioned to Amin-uddin and Ziya-uddin, the younger brothers of the nawāb, a part or whole of Lohāri, an extensive estate, to which the latter considered himself the most entitled.

Shams-uddin Khawaf, Khwaja (شمس)

(الدين خواني خواجه), the son of an Amīr of Khawaf, in Khurāsān, by name Khwaja 'Alī-uddin. Shams-uddin held a high rank in the service of the emperor Akbar, and was appointed Diwān of the Panjāb in A.D. 1599, A.H. 1008, but died after a few months at Lahore.

Shams-uddin Muhammad-bin-Abdullah-al-Ghazi, Shaikh (شمس)

(الدين محمد بن عبدالله الغزي), author of the Tawqī-ul-Absār, which he composed in A.D. 1586, A.H. 995, and enriched with a variety of questions and decisions. It is considered to be one of the most useful books, according to the Hanafi doctrine, and has been frequently commented upon. The most noted of these commentaries is one written by the author himself, entitled Manh-al-Ghaṣṣar.

Shams-uddin Muhammad bin-Hamza

(شمس الدين محمد بن حمزه), surnamed Fanārī. He was an author, and died in the year A.D. 1431, A.H. 834. He wrote a commentary which is considered one of the best glosses on the Sirāṭis of Sajawandī.

Shams-uddin Muhammad bin-Killai

(شمس الدين محمد), author of the Fardes-ul-Fāriqia, a treatise on the Law of Inheritance, according to Shāfi's doctrine. He died in A.D. 1375, A.H. 777.

Shams-uddin Muhammad ibn-Nasar

(شمس الدين محمد ابن نصر), author of the work called Mujma-ul-Bakryn. He lived in the time of Tāi-uddin Eldūz.

Shams-uddin Muhammad Kuswi,

Khwaja (شمس الدين محمد كوسوي)

(خواجه), a descendant of Shaikh

Ahmad Jām. He died on Saturday the 31st March, A.D. 1459, 26th Jumāda I. A.H. 863, and is buried near the Jama Masjid at Herāt, close to the tomb of Faqīh Abū Yezīd Murghazī.

Shams-uddin Muhammad Sahib Di-

wan (شمس الدين محمد صاحب)

(ديوان) held the office of Diwān and prime minister in the reign of Halākū Khān and his son Abūqā Khān, the Tartar kings of Persia. In the first year of the reign of Arghūn Khān, the son of Abūqā Khān, he was accused by his enemies of causing the death of the king's father by poison, and was executed at Qara Bāgh of Tabrez, on Monday the 16th October, A.D. 1284, 4th Shabān, A.H. 683. He was a good poet, and is the author of the work called Rasāla Shamsia dar 'in Mantaq, a work on the science of Logic. His brother Alā-uddin, surnamed Atā Malik, is the author of a history entitled Jahān Kushā.

Shams-uddin Muhammad Tabrizi,

Maulana (شمس الدين محمد تبریزی)

(مولانا), commonly called Shams Tabrizi, a celebrated Muhammadan of Tabriz. He was the master of Jalāl-uddin Maulwī Rūmī, who wrote a book of odes in his name, entitled the Diwān of Shams Tabrizi. He was murdered by 'Alā-uddin Mahmūd, the son of the Maulwī, and thrown into a well, A.D. 1247, A.H. 646. He is considered by the Sūfis to be one of the most celebrated martyrs of their sect. He was, they say, sentenced to be flayed alive, on account of his having raised a dead person to life. We are told that, after the law had been put into force, he wandered about, carrying his own skin, and solicited some food to appease his hunger, but he had been excommunicated as well as flayed, and no one would give him the slightest help. After four days he found a dead ox, but he could not obtain fire to dress it. Worn out with the unkindness of men, he desired the sun to broil his meat. It descended to perform the office, and the world was on the point of being consumed, when the holy Shaikh commanded the flanging orb to resume its station in the heavens.

Shams-uddin Purbi I. (شمس الدین)

(پوری), surnamed Bhangana. His proper name was Khwaja Husn. He ascended the throne of Bengal after the assassination of Ala-uddin Purbi about the year A.D. 1443, A.H. 741. For 13 years he reigned with success the forces of the king of Delhi, who could never succeed during the whole of that period in making any impression upon him. He died after a reign of 16 years A.D. 1459, A.H. 760 and was succeeded by his son Sikandar Shah Purbi.

Shams-uddin Purbi II (شمس الدین)

(پوری) ascended the throne of Bengal after the death of his father Sultan Sikandar, A.D. 1459 and died after a reign of 10 years of thirty years A.D. 1469, A.H. 769. He was succeeded by Rukn-ud-Din.

Shams-uddin Iabrizi (شمس الدین)

(ابریزی) surnamed Iabrizi. He died about the year A.D. 1473.

Shams-uddin Tibsi, Qazi (شمس الدین)

(طیسی), one of the learned men of the court and an excellent poet who attended the court of Nizam-ul-Mulk, vizir to Sultan Jalal-uddin Mahkshah. He died about the year A.D. 1473.

Shams-ul-'Umrā, Amir Kabir Nawab

(شمس الامرا امر کبر نواب), a nobleman or Amīr-ul-'Umrā of the court of the Nizām of Hyderabad. He was born in A.D. 1780, and survived three successive Nizāms. The first was Nizām 'Alī Khan, by whom the nawab was originally appointed commander of the household troops, during the troubled periods of Tipū Sultān's reign. On Nizām 'Alī's death in A.D. 1803, the nawab lived to see Mir Akbar 'Alī, alias Sikandar Jah, raised to the masnad, and subsequently, on the decease of this prince in 1830, saw him succeeded by Nasir-uddaula, the late Nizām, from whom he received the title of Amir Kabir, in acknowledgment of his services to the State. As a geometrician he stood unrivalled, and the compilation styled after himself, Shams-ul-Handasa, besides other works published by him on the Arts and Sciences, distinguish him as an author. He died on the 10th April, A.D. 1863, when he had just completed the 83rd year of his age, and was the oldest nobleman then living in Hyderabad. He left two sons, and both worthy of him. The elder of the two has inherited his father's vast estates and his official titles. The younger received most of his father's immense wealth during his lifetime, and many jagirs since his death.

Shams-ul-nisa Begam (شمس النساء)

(سگم), the daughter of Hakīm Kamar-uddin Khan of Benares, but her place of residence was at Lucknow. She is the author of a small Diwan, and was living in the year A.H. 1272.

Shani (شانی), a poet who flourished in the reign of Shah Abbas I. king of Persia, and died in the year A.D. 1614, A.H. 1023. He is sometimes called Maulana Shani Taklu.

Shapur (شاپور), a poet of Tcherān, who died A.D. 1688, A.H. 1098. His tomb is at a place called Sukhbi in Fāriz. He had the title of Malik-nash Shuara, or king of poets.

Shapur or Shahpur I (شاپور) (the Sapores of the Greeks) the second king of Persia of the Sassanid dynasty, was the son of Ardeshir Babakan. He began to reign about the year A.D. 240 and carried his arms into the Roman territories, gaining many important victories over that nation, whose emperor Valerian, he made prisoner at the battle of Edessa and flayed him alive. According to Persian historians Shapur reigned 31 years and died about the year A.D. 273. He was not only a good general but a wise and beneficent ruler of his country. He was succeeded by his son Hormuz I the Hormirades of the Greeks. Shapur conquered Armenia and Georgia, which he added to the empire.

Shapur II (شاپور), surnamed Zū'l

Aktaf, was the son of Hormuz II king of Persia, and was born A.D. 310, a few months after the death of his father, on which account the Persian historians say that his reign was a few months longer than his life. He died A.D. 381, aged 71 years. During his long reign he raised his country to a state of the greatest prosperity, having defeated all his enemies, and extended the limits of his empire in every direction, adding Georgia, Armenia, and other provinces to the empire. He was succeeded by his son, Ardeshir III.

Shapur III. (شاپور), the son of Shāpūr.

II and the uterine brother of Ardeshir II, whom he deposed, and mounted the throne of Persia, A.D. 385. This prince, who is described as virtuous and beneficent, reigned over Persia only five years. He was killed by the fall of his tent, the pole of which struck the monarch as he slept.

Shaqiq Balkhi (شقيق بلخی), a celebrated pious Muslimān. He died on the 20th January, A.D. 791, 9th Rāmān, A.H. 174, in the reign of the Khalif Hārūn-al-Rashid, and was buried at Khattān.

Sharaf-ibn-Shams-uddin (شرف ابن شمس الدين), author of the Sharaf-nāma, a Persian History of the Dynasties which have governed in Kurdistan. It was translated into English by Professor Charnoy.

Sharaf Jahan, Mirza (شرف جهان مرزا), an author whose father, Qāzi Jahān, held a high appointment at the court of Shāh Tahmasp Safwi, but, being suspected of being a Sunni, he was deprived of it. Sharaf Jahān died in A.D. 1561, A.H. 968.

Sharaf Qazwini (شرف قزوینی), a poet who was a native of Qazwin, and is the author of a Persian diwān. He came to the Deccan in the reign of Qutb Shāh, in whose service he died.

Sharaf-uddaula (شرف الدوله), a nobleman of the reign of the emperor Muhammad Shāh. He is the founder of the Masjid situated in the Darība Bāzār at Delhi, which he built in the year A.D. 1723, A.H. 1135.

Sharaf-uddaula, Nawab (شرف الدوله نواب), ex-prime minister of Audh, was a native of Kashmir. His ancestors were "Rafūgars" or shawl-burners. At an early age he travelled to the Deccan, where he obtained employment under the Nizām. He did not, however, remain long at Haidarābād; the reputed splendour of the court of Lucknow brought him to Audh, where he found he had an uncle, the celebrated Maulwī Ahia, the residency Wakil during the reign of Nāsir-uddīn Haidar. On the accession of Muhammad 'Alī Shāh to the throne in A.D. 1839, Maulwī Ahia was advanced to the post of prime minister, vice Hakīm Mahdi, deceased, and Sharaf-uddaula was appointed residency Wakil, vice his uncle promoted. Maulwī Ahia dying soon afterwards, Sharaf-uddaula succeeded him as prime minister. He held the office up to the time of Muhammad 'Alī Shāh's death, which took place in May, A.D. 1842, when Amjad 'Alī Shāh succeeding to the throne, he nominated his favourite, Amin-uddaula, to the premiership, obliging Sharaf-uddaula to retire. By the Resident personally the nawāb was so much esteemed that, after he lost office, he (the Resident) deemed him the fittest man in Lucknow to manage the very responsible and important concerns of the Husanabād Imāmbarah, of which he induced the king to make him, Wasiqdar, or stipendiary. Sharaf-uddaula was known by everyone to be the most sincerely attached friend the British had in Audh. He was, therefore, looked upon with much jealousy and rancour by all the courtiers, but especially by Nawāb 'Alī Naqī Khān, the father-in-law and prime minister of Wajid 'Alī Shāh, the last king. Viewing him always as his rival, 'Alī Naqī often contemplated his ruin, and at one time, in league with Nawāb Wasī 'Alī Khān, one of the famous abominables of the court of Lucknow, he would have compassed his end, as he had succeeded in getting the king to issue an order of banishment against Sharaf-uddaula, with his whole family, but for the timely interference of the Resident, who had the order revoked. During the early part of the rebellion (in 1857) the insurgents surrounded his house, insisting that he should become prime minister of the rebel government. He refused, and tried to excuse himself in every way, but they forcibly installed him in the office, which he knew he only nominally held, since Mammū Khān was the ruling spirit with the Begam. On the arrival of General Havelock's force for the relief of the Lucknow garrison, he was in the Kersar Bāgh and received a bullet in the shoulder. When the final grand attack was made on the city by the Commander-in-Chief, which caused the Begam and her party to remove to the Mūsa Bāgh, Sharaf-uddaula took advantage of the confusion and skulked behind, and endeavoured to steal out of the city, when he was recognized by some Sepoys, who bound him with cords, took him to Maulwī Ahmad-ullah Shāh, who, after starving him for four days, had him put to death.

Sharaf-uddin Ahmad Ahia Maniri,

Shaiikh (شرف الدين احمد احيا)

Shaiikh (منیری شایخ), a celebrated saint of Bihār. He and his eldest brother, Shaiikh Jalāl-uddin, were the disciples of Shaiikh Najm-uddin Firdausi. Sharaf-uddin was a contemporary of Shaiikh Nizām-uddin Auliya. He resided at Bohār, and is the author of the works called Madan-ul-Madani and Mukhatibāt Ahia Maniri; the latter contains the whole duty of a Sūfi in a series of 250 letters addressed to his disciples and friends. He died in the year A.D. 1379, A.H. 781, and his tomb (an exact delineation of which has been given by Mr. Daniel) stands near the junction of the river Sōn with the Ganges, and is still the resort of devout Muhammadans. He is called Maniri, because he resided in a town called Manir, near Patna. The tomb of his father, Shaiikh Ahia or Yehia, is in the town of Masur.

Shatab Rai, Raja (شتاب رای راجہ), was by caste a Kāyeth, and a native of Dehli; in his youth he served 'Aqā Sulaimān, the favourite dependant of Samsām-uddaula, son of Khān Daurān, Amir-ul-'Umra to the emperor Muhammad Shāh. Upon the death of Samsām-uddaula, he obtained the office of imperial Diwān at Patna. Attaching himself to the English in the several revolutions, he became their chief adviser in their connections with the country powers. He was an able statesman, and understood completely the direction of finance: under orders from the Court of Directors Warren Hastings held an enquiry into his official conduct, 1772, when Shatab was completely exonerated. He died about the year A.D. 1777, A.H. 1187.

Sher 'Alī Khan, Amir of Kabul

(شیرعلی خان), the youngest son of Dost Mohammad Khān.

Sherī Maulana (شیری مولانا), a poet who flourished in the reign of the emperor Akbar. When the fortress of Chittor was taken by that monarch in December, A.D. 1567, Jumādā II. A.H. 975, and the fort of Ranthampūr on the 22nd March, A.D. 1569, 3rd Shawwāl, A.H. 976, in which year the fort of Āgra was also completed, Sherī was then living, and wrote the chronogram of all three. He was slain, together with Rāja Birbal and other officers of note, in a battle fought against the Yūsufzai Afghāns of Sawād and Bijūr in February, A.D. 1586, Rabi' I. A.H. 994. The author of the Misir-ul-'Umra says that he was the nephew of Khwāja Jahān Hirwī, a nobleman of the court of Akbar, who died in November, A.D. 1574, Shaban, A.H. 982, and that Sherī died in A.D. 1591, A.H. 999. He is the author of a Diwān.

Sher Khan Lodi (شیرخان لودی), the son of 'Alī Amjād Khān Lodi, who died on the 13th November, A.D. 1673, 14th Shaban, A.H. 1084. Sher Khān is the author of a Tazkira or biography of poets called Mirāt-ul-Khayāb, or the Mirror of Imagination, which he wrote in the year A.D. 1691, A.H. 1102, in the reign of the emperor 'Alamgir. It contains an account of the most celebrated poets and, besides, it treats on almost every science cultivated by the Musalmāns: music, medicine, cosmography, oneiroscopy, talismans, etc.

Sheroya (شیریه), the Siroses of the Greeks, was the son of Khuro Parwez, or Chosroes, king of Persia, whom he threw into a dungeon and subsequently murdered, A.D. 628, A.H. 7. He reigned only eight months, and died A.D. 629, A.H. 8. At the death of Sheroya, an ambitious noble raised Ardisher, the infant son of that prince, to the throne; but another noble of the name of Shahryār, disapproving this measure, marched from the province which he governed, seized Madāin, put Ardisher to death after he had reigned five months, and usurped the crown, which, however, he held only a few days, having been slain by the adherents of the royal family. These not being able to discover any heir male of the house of Sasān, elevated Tūrāndukht, the daughter of Khuro Parwez, to the throne.

Sher Shah (شیرشاه), a native of Hisar. His original name was Farid. His father, Hasan, was an Afghān of the tribe of Sūr, and a native of Roh beyond Peshāwar, who had received from Jamāl Khān, the governor of Jaunpūr, the districts of Sahsārām and Tānda in jāgir for the maintenance of 500 horse. Farid was for some time in the service of Muhammad Lohānī, king of Behār, and on his killing a tiger, received from him the title of Sher Khān. He defeated the emperor Humāyūn once at Behār on the 26th June, A.D. 1539, 9th Šafar, A.H. 946, and the second time on the 17th May, A.D. 1540, 10th Mu-harrām, A.H. 947, at Kānsuj, when he pursued him through Āgra and Lāhore to Khushāb; from whence Humāyūn eventually retreated towards the Indus. Sher Khān by this victory became the sovereign of Dehli, assumed the title of Sher Shāh, and ascended the throne on the 26th January, A.D. 1542, 7th Shawwāl, A.H. 948. In the 5th year of his reign he moved towards Kalingar, one of the strongest forts in Hindūstān. The batteries were advanced close to the walls, a breach was made, and a general assault was ordered, when a shell, which was thrown against the fort, burst in the battery in which the king stood. The explosion communicating to a powder magazine, several gunners were blown up, and the king so much scorched that his recovery was hopeless. In this position he encouraged the prosecution of the attack, and continued to give his orders till in the evening news was brought him of the reduction of the place. He then died on

"Thanks to the Almighty God!" and expired. His death happened on the 24th May, A.D. 1545, 12th Rabi' I A.H. 952. His corpse was conveyed to Sahsaram, the family estate, where it was buried in a magnificent sepulchre, which is still to be seen standing in the centre of a reservoir of water, built during his own life. Tradition adds that, during his reign, such was the public security that travellers rested and slept with their goods by the highways without apprehension of robbery. He was succeeded by his son Salim Shah.

Sher Singh (شر سنگه), ruler of the Punjab, was the second son of Khuram Singh, the son of Ranjit Singh. After the death of his eldest brother, Nau Nihal Singh, which took place on the 17th November, A.D. 1840, his mother, Rani Chand Kaur, managed the affairs of his country for two months, when Sher Singh, her second son, deprived her of that power and became the sole manager. On the 1st September, A.D. 1841, the royal palace was taken by a powerful body of troops, and Sher Singh and his son Jit Singh were murdered by Sardar Ajit Singh. Every child and all of Sher Singh's and Partap Singh's wives were brought out and murdered among the rest, one of Sher Singh's sons only born the previous evening. After Sher Singh's death, Raja Dalip Singh the young son of Maharaja Ranjit Singh, was placed on the Musnad.

Shia or Shia' (شيعه) Those Muhammadans who assert the rights of Ali are called Shias or Shiites or Sectaries, whilst those who consider the first three Khalifas preceding Ali as the rightful successors of Muhammad, are called Sunnis or Sunnites or Traditionists. The animosity which exists between the Shias and Sunnis fully equals that of the Protestants and Papists of former times. It was owing to their dissensions that Baghdad was taken, and the Khalifat overturned. The Turks and Arabs are Sunnis; the Persians and most of the Muhammadans of India are Shias. A complete history of the Shias will be found in a work called Maqalla-ul-Mominin. The Shia doctrines were adopted by the Persians at the foundation of the Safwi dynasty in A.D. 1500, A.H. 906, and from that period until the present time have prevailed as the national religion and law of Persia, notwithstanding the violent efforts to substitute the Sunnism made by the Afghan usurper Ashraf and the great Nader Shah.

Shirin (شيرين). This word, which signifies in Persian sweet charming or agreeable is the name of a lady well known throughout the East. Some call her Mary, and others Irene. The Greeks only describe her as a Roman by birth a Christian by religion, but she is represented as the daughter of the emperor Maurice in the Persian and Turkish romances which celebrated the love of Khusrō for Shirin, and of Shuim for Farhad, the most beautiful youth of the East. This celebrated beauty has been accused of giving those afflictions which a monarch so anxiously sought to the lowly Farhad, in whose breast her beauties kindled a flame, which deprived him of reason and life. We are told that the son of Khusrō, after putting his father to death, sought the favours of his father's mistress, who appeared to consent, but desired to take one look at the remains of his father. The murdered body of her former lover was shown to her, and she immediately put an end to her existence by stabbing herself.

Sidi' or Sayyad Maula (سدی مولا), a venerable sage, in a mendicant dress, who travelled from Turjan towards the east ind, arriving at Delhi, set up a great academy and house of entertainment for travellers and the poor of all denominations. Though he was very religious, and brought up in the Muhammadan faith, yet he followed some particular tenets of his own, so that he never attracted public worship. He kept no women nor slaves for himself, and lived upon rice only; yet his expenses in charity were so great that, as he never accepted any present men were astonished when his finances were supplied, and actually believed that he possessed the art of transmuting other metals into gold. He made nothing of bestowing two or three thousand pieces of gold to relieve the wants of any noble family in distress. In short, he displayed more magnificence in his tests than the princes themselves. He expended daily upon the poor 1000 maunds of flour, 500 maunds of meat, 80 maunds of sugar, besides rice, oil, butter and other necessaries in proportion. He latterly began to bestow titles and offices upon his disciples and to assume a tone and manner sufficiently indicative of his design on the throne. One of his followers, dissatisfied with the part assigned to him, went privately to the king (Jalal-uddin Firoz Khilji) and disclosed the plot. The king caused him to be apprehended and trodden to death by an elephant. This event happened in the year A D 1291, A H 690 and is accounted one of the most deplorable events that took place in the reign of that monarch, for many believed Sidi entirely innocent of the charge

He is the author of the work called Mirat-ul-Mumāhik, or Mirror of Countries, containing a description of his journey overland from the Indian shores to Constantinople, and of the Alukhr, that is the Ocean, a Turkish work on Navigation in the Indian Seas. This work the author finished at Ahmadabad, the capital of Gujrat, in December, A D 1554, Muharram, A H. 962. It was translated by the Baron Joseph von Hammer, Professor, Oriental Languages, at Vienna, and communicated through the Jour As Soc of Bengal, in 1837

Sihl or Sehl bin-Sa'd (سہل بن سعد),

one of the companions of Muhammad

Sijaz (سیحاج), a false prophetess contemporary with Musylma, another impostor. She was a Christian of extraordinary talents and eloquence, and, being prompted by an aspiring ambition, she announced herself a prophetess and, uttering her string of rhapsodies in rhyme, declared that they came inspired from above. Struck by her success, Musylma thought it advisable to temporize with her, and accordingly, having sent agents, invited her to a private conference, sijaz consented and came to an interview, she was deceived, and having forfeited all pretensions to that purity which is the highest attribute of her sex, she fell from her proud pre-eminence and became a mere debased and contaminated woman. She subsequently enrolled herself amongst the proselytes of the Quran

Sikandar, Alexander the Great (سکندر)

(ذوالقرسن), called by Muhammad in the Quran, Zu'l-qarnayn the Two Horned Man, probably by reason of his head being figured as Ammon with the Ram's Horns on coins and medals. Eastern commentators have been at a loss to decide who is intended, but generally agree that he was a being favoured of, and who believed in the true God, that, guided by the prophet Khizr, he reached the End of Darkness, near the Mountain of Life, but he could not obtain permission to take a draught of the Eternal Spring. He died B C 327 at the age of 33 years. He conquered Darius, king of Persia, in B C 331, and in 327 he proceeded to invade India. He crossed the Indus without opposition. This circumstance took place in A.D. 1414, A.H. 817.

Sikandar Begam (سکندر بیگم), the ruler of Bhopāl. She was born in A.D. 1816. Her father was one of the Pathān or Afghān soldiers of fortune, who, after the death of the emperor Aurangzeb, declared himself independent in Bhopāl. On his death his wife was declared Regent by his troops, and his daughter Sikandar Begam heir. She married her cousin Jahāngir, in spite of her mother, upon condition that her husband swore to leave her the direct and visible control of all affairs. Her husband, Jahāngir, died in A.D. 1845. She was publicly presented with the Grand Cross of the Star of India at the Durbar at Agra. She died on the 30th October, A.D. 1868. Her Highness had conducted the administration of her principality since the year 1847, when she was first appointed Regent, with ability and success until the day of her decease. Her eldest daughter, Shāhjahān Begam, succeeded her.

Sikandar Jah (سکندر جاه نواب), nawāb or Nizām of Haidarabād, succeeded his father, Nawāb Nizām 'Ali Khān, to the Masnad of the Deccan on the 16th August, A.D. 1802, 16th Rabi' II. A.H. 1217, and died on the 23rd May, A.D. 1829, 19th Zi-Qa'da, A.H. 1244, after a reign of 28 lunar years and some months. He was succeeded by his son Mir Farkhunda 'Ali Khān, who took the title of Nasir-uddaula.

Sikandar Khan Uzbek (سکندر خان),

(ازبک), a descendant of the royal house of that tribe, also called Sikandar Khān of Kashghar. He accompanied the emperor Humāyūn to India, and was created a nobleman by that monarch. He accompanied Mirza Haidar, who took possession of Kashmir in A.D. 1543, and died at Lucknow in the reign of the emperor Akbar on the 16th September, A.D. 1572, 10th Jumādā I. A.H. 980.

Sikandar Munshi (سکندر منشی),

Secretary to Shāh Abbās I. king of Persia. He is the author of the Tārīkh 'Alam Arde Abbāsi, a history of that monarch, in three books, which he dedicated to him in A.D. 1616, A.H. 1025.

Sikandar Shah (سکندر شاه), king of Gujrāt, succeeded his father, Muzaḥfar Shāh II. in February, A.D. 1526, 19th Shabān, A.H. 932, and after a reign of only three months and seventeen days was assassinated on the 30th May the same year. After his death his younger brother, Nasir Khān, was raised to the throne under the title of Muhammad Shāh II.

Sikandar Shah Lodi, Sultan (سکندر شاه لودی), whose original name was

Nizām Khān, was the son of Sultān Bahlūl Lōdī, whom he succeeded in July, A.D. 1489, Shabān, A.H. 895. He was the first Musalmān king who made Agra his capital. In his time a violent earthquake took place, when many houses were thrown down and several thousands of inhabitants lost their lives. This happened on Sunday the 6th July, A.D. 1508, 3rd Safar, A.H. 911. It was in his reign that the Hindūs first commenced reading Persian. He reigned 21 lunar years and some months, and died at Agra on Sunday the 17th February, A.D. 1510, 7th Zi-Qa'da, A.H. 915. Colonel Dow and General Briggs, in their translation of Firishta, say that Sikandar Shāh died in the year of the Hijrī 923, corresponding with A.D. 1517, and that he reigned 28 years and some months; this is evidently a mistake, for the words "Tārī Shud" show the year of his death to be A.H. 915; consequently the period of his reign was only 21 years. He was succeeded by his son Ibrāhīm Husain Lōdī. Sikandar Lōdī in his time had built a small fort at Agra on the right bank of the Jamna, and called it Badalgah. The emperor Akbar, in the 10th year of his reign, viz. in A.H. 972, having demolished this fort laid the foundations of another fort of red stone, which was completed in the course of eight years, superintended by Qasim Khān Mir Bahar. This fort had three gates and two windows, and cost 38 lakhs of rupees. It was accidentally burned down in the time of Shāh 'Alam and Madho Rao Scindia.

Sikander Shah Purbī (سکندر شاه)

(پوری). He was raised to the throne of Bengal after the death of his father, Shams-uddin Bhangelra, about the year A.D. 1358, A.H. 760. He had not long entered on his rule before his country was invaded by Firoz Shāh Tughlāq, king of Delhi, who was, however, induced to retreat on Sikandar Shāh promising to pay an annual tribute. He reigned in peace for a period of nine years and died in A.D. 1367, A.H. 769, when he was succeeded by his son Ghayās-uddin Purbī.

Sikandar Shah Sur (سکندر شاه سور).

His original name was Ahmad Khān Sūr, a nephew of Sher Shāh. He ascended the throne of Dohli after defeating Sultān Ibrāhīm Sūr in a battle fought in May, A.D. 1555, Jumāda II, A.H. 962. He had not long enjoyed his good fortune, however, when he was obliged to repair to the Panjāb to oppose the emperor Humāyūn, who, having returned from a long exile, was now advancing to recover his dominions. He engaged Bairām Khān, the general of the army near Sarhind, was defeated on the 22nd June, A.D. 1556, 3rd Shabān, A.H. 962, and fled to the Sewālik Mountains, from whence he was afterwards expelled by the emperor Akbar, A.D. 1557, 27th Ramazān, A.H. 964. He sought refuge in Bengal, where he died after two years.

Sikandar Shikoh Mirza (سکندر شکوه), a cousin of Bahādur Shāh II, king of Dohli. He was executed for the murder of his wife in July, A.D. 1838.

Sikandar, Sultan (سکندر سلطان), king of Kashmere, surnamed But Shikan, or Destroyer of Idols, was the grandson of Shah Mir Darwish, who introduced the Muhammadan religion into Kashmere. Sikandar, with the assistance of his mother, succeeded his father, Sultān Qutb-uddin, A.D. 1393, A.H. 796, his authority being acknowledged by all the nobles and other officers, and became one of the most powerful kings that ever reigned in Kashmere. Various magnificent temples and images of the Hindūs did this Sultān lay in ruins; which conduct obtained him the glorious title of But Saikam, or Iconoclast. He reigned 22 years and 9 months, and died in A.D. 1416, A.H. 819. In his time Tamerlane invaded India, and presents passed between him and Sikandar. He was succeeded by his son Sultān 'Alī Shāh.

Silhaddi (سلمدی), a Rāja of Raisin, who was made prisoner by Bahādur Shāh of Gujrat, and was forced to become a Muhammadan in the year A.D. 1631, A.H.

938, after which, when the fort of Raisin was surrendered by his brother Lachhman to the king, Rāni Durgawati, the daughter of Rana Sanka, Rana of Chittor and wife of Rāja Silhaddi, with a heroic fortitude, invoking curses on the heads of those who should not revenge her cause, set fire to a pile with which she had caused the female apartments to be surrounded; containing seven hundred beautiful women. She then plunged into the flames, and they were all consumed. Silhaddi and Lachhman (his brother), with one hundred of their blood-relations, now putting on their armour, rushed impetuously on the Gujrat troops, and bravely met their fate the same year.

Simi Naishapuri (سیمى نیشاپورى), a very learned Musalmān of Naishāpūr. It is said that in one night and day he composed 3,000 verses. He flourished in the time of Prince 'Alāuddaula (the son of Baisanghar Mirza), who reigned at Herāt A.D. 1447.

Sipahdar Khan (سپہدار خان), whose proper name is Mirzā Muhammad Sālāh, was a native of Tabriz, and his ancestors were reckoned among the nobles of that country. In the year A.D. 1592, A.H. 1000, he left Persia for Hindūstān in company with Khwāja Beg Mirzā, son of Masūm Beg Sālwi. On his arrival in India he obtained the honour of an interview with the emperor Akbar. Mansabs suitable to his dignity, as well as the government of Gujrat, were conferred on him time after time. When, after the death of prince Murād in A.D. 1599, A.H. 1007, prince Daulat went to the Deccan and captured the fort of Ahmadnagar, the capital of Nizām Shāh, the government of that country was conferred upon Khwāja Beg Mirzā and Sipahdar Khān.

Sipahdar Khan (سپہدار خان) was the second son of Khān Jahan Bahādur, the foster-brother of the emperor 'Alamgir. He was raised to the rank of 3000 by that monarch, A.D. 1691, A.H. 1103, with the government of the province of Allahābād, which he held for several years. His brother Himmat Khān was killed by an arrow in an action with the Marhattas about the year A.D. 1698, A.H. 1110, and soon afterwards their father, Khān Jahān Bahādūr, died in the imperial camp.

c. Sipehr Shikoh (سپهر شیکوه), third son of Dara Shikoh. He was confined in the fort of Gwāliar by 'Alamgir who, in his 16th year, A.H. 1085, sent for him from Gwāliar, and married him to his daughter Badr-un-Nisa, of whom was born prince 'Alī Tabar.

Siraj (سراج), takhallus of Sirāj-uddin

Husain of Aurangābād, who is the author of the Diwān Muntakhab, containing extracts from no less than 680 poets, and which he completed in A.D. 1756, A.H. 1169.

Siraj Qummi (سراج قمی), a poet who was a native of Qum, in Persia, and contemporary with Salīm Sāwajī.

Siraj-uddaula Muhammad Ghaus

Khan (سراج الدوله محمد غوث خان), titular Nawāb of Arkot, whose poetical name was 'Azim, the author of the work called Tadhkirah Subh Natan, being a biography of the poets of the Karnatik, compiled in A.D. 1842, A.D. 1258. It is an abstract of the Tadhkirah of Rāq, also called Guldasta Karnatik.

Siraj-uddaula (سراج الدوله نواب),

Nawāb of Bengal, formerly named Mirzā Mahmūd, was the eldest son of Zain-uddin Ahmad, styled Haibat Jang, the nephew and son-in-law of Alahwardī Khān Mahābat Jang, governor of Bengal. On the death of his grandfather Mahābat Jang, which happened on the 10th April, A.D. 1756, 9th Rajab, A.H. 1169, he succeeded him in the government of that province, and immediately taking offense at the English, for their protection to a native officer said to have escaped from Dacca with treasure, he attacked Calcutta, carried it on the 20th June the same year, and allowed his officers to shut up 146 European prisoners in a small military prison room called the "Black Hole," of which number 123 perished during the night. Mr. Drake, the governor of Calcutta, escaped on board a ship with a few Englishmen and retired to Madras. At that time Colonel Olive commanded the Company's forces in the province of Arkot. It was agreed by the government of Madras that he should repair with a force to Bengal and endeavour to regain the factory of Calcutta. Colonel Olive and Admiral Watson left Madras with 900 Europeans and 1500 Sepoys. They reached Patna on the 20th December, re-took Calcutta on the 3rd January, A.D. 1757, A.H. 1170, and forced Sirāj-uddaula into a treaty, offensive and defensive, on the 6th February following. Olive subsequently made a secret treaty with Mir Ja'far, an officer of the nawāb, and advanced in June towards Murshidābād, the nawāb's capital. On the 23rd June, A.D. 1757, Olive fought the battle of Plassey against 18,000 horse and 50,000 infantry, and, aided by the treachery of Mir Ja'far, routed the nawāb's troops. Sirāj-uddaula fled, but in a few days was seized and cruelly assassinated on the 4th July, A.D. 1757, 15th Shawwāl A.H. 1170, by order of Miran, the son of Mir Ja'far. Thus perished Sirāj-uddaula in the 20th year of his age and the 15th month of his reign. On the 29th June Mir Ja'far was raised to the masnad, and from that date the influence of the British may be said to have become paramount in Bengal. His tomb is not far from that of Mahābat Jang.

Siraj-uddin (سراج الدین), son of Nūruddin, author of the Sharah Bughdādi and Sharah 'Umda. He died in A.D. 1401, A.H. 804. [vide Bilqini.]

Siraj-uddin 'Alī Khan (سراج الدین)

'Alī Khan (علی خان عرزو), whose poetical title is 'Arzū, was a native of Akbarābād (Agra), and a descendant of Shaikh Muhammad (Ghaus) of Gwāliar. He was an excellent poet and an officer of rank in the time of the emperor Farrukh-siyar. He is the author of several works, among which is a Diwān and a biography entitled Majmū'ah-ul-Nafīsah, which is also called Tadhkirah 'Arzū, containing the memoirs of the Indian poets who have written Persian, Hindustāni and Deccani poems. 'Arzū, in A.D. 1734, A.H. 1147, met at Delhi the poet Hazīn, who had just come from Persia. The jealousy between the two poets induced 'Arzū to write a treatise entitled Tambih-ul-Qhāfilin, in which he points out the errors in Hazīn's poems. He died at Lucknow on the 27th January, A.D. 1756, 23rd Rabi' II. A.H. 1169, and was buried there for some time, but afterwards his remains were removed to Delhi by his nephew Muhammad Husain Khān. Beside the above-mentioned works he is the author of the following:

Siraj-uddin Husain (سراج الدين حسين). Vide Sirāj.

Siraj-uddin Muhammad bin-'Abdur Rashid-al-Sajawandi (سراج الدين محمد بن عبدالرشيد آل شيزاوندی), author of the Sirājia, which is sometimes called Farḍes-as-Sajawandi. This book is of the highest authority on the law of inheritance amongst the Sunnis of India. It has been commented upon by a vast number of writers, upwards of forty being enumerated in the Kashf-us-Zunūn. The most celebrated of these Commentaries, and the one most generally employed to explain the text, is the Sharīfīa, by Sayyad Sharif 'Alī bin-Muhammad-al-Jurjānī. The original text of the Sirājia, together with that of the Sharīfīa, was published in Calcutta in A.D. 1829. A Persian translation of the Sirājia and Sharīfīa was made by Maulwi Muhammad Rāshid, by order of Warren Hastings, and published in Calcutta in A.D. 1812. The most celebrated Commentaries on the Sirājia, next after the Sharīfīa, are: that by Shahāb-uddin Ahmad bin-Mahmūd-as-Siwāsī; one by Burhān-uddin Haidar bin-Muhammad-al-Hirwī; another by Shams-uddin bin-Hamza-al-Fanārī; and lastly, a Persian Commentary entitled Al-Farḍes-at-Tajīfī Sharh Farḍes-us-Sirājī, by 'Abdul Karīm bin-Muhammad-al-Hamdanī.

Siraj-uddin Muhammad bin-'Umar Halabi (سراج الدين محمد), an author who died in A.D. 1446, A.H. 850.

Siraj-uddin Sawai, Maulana (سراج الدين ساوي مولانا), one of the celebrated poets of Sāmāna, a city in the province of Dehli. He is the author of the work called Khiljī-nāma. When Sultān Jalāl-uddin Fīroz Khiljī, before his accession to the throne, was governor of Sāmāna, the poet was ill-treated by some of his people, and, as the Sultān took no notice of it then, he wrote the above-mentioned book, in which he satirized the governor and the Khiljīs. However, the Sultān, after his accession to the throne of Dehli in A.D. 1289, sent for the poet, and he, having tied a rope round his own neck, presented himself like a criminal before the king, who embraced him and made him one of his principal confidants. The poet afterwards wrote several panegyrics in praise of the Sultān.

Siraj-uddin, Shaikh (سراج الدين شيخ), a celebrated Muhammadan saint whose relics are deposited on an island in the river Krishna, near the town of Kural, in the district of Rāchāgh Bijāpūr, in southern Hindustān.

Siraj-uddin 'Umar (سراج الدين عمر), who, after the death of his brother Zaim-ul-'Abidin Nujaim, completed the work called Bahr-ar-Rāeq about the year A.D. 1562, A.H. 970, and wrote, another but inferior commentary on the Kanz-ul-Dagdag, entitled the Nahr-ul-Fāeq.

Sirati (سيرتی), a poet who wrote

Kasidas, of which some are panegyrics on Sadiq Khān and his son Jafar Khān Bāzi, kings of Iṣraia, the latter of whom was murdered in A.D. 1785, A.H. 1199.

Soz (سوز), the poetical name of Sayyad

Muhammad, who flourished in the reign of the emperor Shāh 'Alam, and is the author of a small Diwān in Urdū. He became a Dervish or religious mendicant, and lived to the age of 80. He died in A.D. 1797, A.H. 1212. Another Soz is mentioned in the Mutāt-ul-Khayāl, who lived in the time of 'Alamgir. He was a native of Bukhārā and was brought up in India.

Sozan (سوزان), poetical appellation of Nawāb Ahmad 'Alī Khān Shoukat Jang, son of Nawāb Itikhār-uddaula Mirzā 'Alī Khān, and nephew of Nawāb Salār Jang. He lived in the time of Nawāb Asaf-uddaula of Lucknow, and is said to have been a good Urdū poet.

Sozani, Hakim (سوزنی حکیم), surnamed Shams-uddin Muhammad of Samarqand, a Persian poet who derived his origin from Salmān Fārsī, one of the first companions of Muhammad. Some authors say he was a native of the city of Nakhshab, and others pretend of Samarqand. It is said that when he was a student at Bukhārā, he conceived so great a friendship for the apprentice of a needle-maker that he himself learned that profession, and he therefore assumed the takhallus of Sozani (Sozan means a needle). He is considered the best humorous poet of his time, and is the author of a poem called Qasīdē Sāzani, or elegies, written in a very devout style, containing nearly 8000 verses. During his youth he was a great debauchee; but when advanced in years he became very devout, made the pilgrimage of Mecca, and died in A.D. 1173, A.H. 569, at Samarqand, aged 80 years. One of his friends declared that he had appeared to him after his death (in a dream) and said that God had forgiven all his sins for the sake of one of his verses, in which, expressing his humility and contrition, he says, "O Lord, I offer unto Thee an oblation, not to be found in Thy treasury. Accept thou my sins, my poverty, my repentance and my nothingness."

Subaktagin (سبکتگین ناصر الدین), surnamed Nāsir-uddīn, a man of Turkish descent (according to the Tābakāt-i-Nasiri descended from Yuzdujird, the last Persian king of the Sasanian dynasty), who, according to some historians, was purchased as a slave by Alaptagin Sultān of Ghazni. The latter, perceiving in him the promise of future greatness; raised him by degrees to posts of confidence and distinction; and his character obtained him the support of all the adherents and officers of that prince. He was raised to the throne of Ghazni after the death of Abū Is-hāk, the son of Alaptagin, A.D. 977, A.H. 367. He enlarged its dominions, and became the first of a family, called Ghaznawi, and by us Ghaznavides, which outshone, at one period, the glory of the proudest dynasties of Asiatic monarchs. He conquered a part of India, which, when connected with his former possessions of Ghazni and Kābul, gave him a kingdom that extended from Khurāsān to the Panjāb. Subaktagin reigned 20 lunar years, and died in August, A.D. 997, Shāban, A.H. 387, aged 56, near Balkh, from which place his remains were conveyed to Ghazni for interment. He was succeeded by his son, the celebrated Sultān Mahmūd. Including Subaktagin sixteen kings of his race reigned at Ghazni and Lāhore. Their names are as follows:—

List of the Ghaznavide dynasty of Persia and India, including Khurāsān, Mavar-un-nahr, Bukhārā, etc. Capital, Ghazni.

Subhan Bakhsh, Maulwi (سبحان), (بخش مولوی), author of a modern history of jurisprudence, or rather of jurists, in Urdū, compiled from the works of Ibn-Khallikān and Sayūti, entitled Tarjuma Tūrikh-al-Hukmā wa Tashīrat-al-Mufasssirin. It was published at Delhi in A.D. 1848.

Sub-hani Maulana (سبحانی مولانا), a poet whose native country was Najaf Ashraf, commonly called Kūfa, from which place he never stirred all the time of his life. He lived at the same period in which Shaikh Faizi and Zahūri flourished, and wrote nothing but Rubāis in the Persian language on different subjects, of which 12,000 were collected after his death.

Sub-hi (صبحی), a poet who served under Sultān Shujāa, the son of Shāh Jahān.Suchet Singh (سچیت سنگه), a Sikh

chief, who joined the rebels after the murder of Māhārāja Sheir Singh, was attacked by Hira Singh, near Lāhore, his force dispersed and himself killed about the 6th April, 1844. On hearing of the death of this chief, no less than 95 females of his family sacrificed themselves at Lamba.

Suda (سوده), daughter of Zamaa, the second wife of Muhammad. He married her after the death of his first wife, Khudyja, and before his marriage with Ayesha, the daughter of Abū Bakr. She died in A.D. 674, A.H. 54, forty-three years after the death of Muhammad.

Sudi (سودی), a Turkish poet who wrote a commentary on the Divān-i-Hāfiz in the Turkish language. The names of Shori, Sayyad 'Alī, Lamāi, Surūrī and Shamāi occur also as commentators on Hāfiz; but Sudi excels all as an enlightened and accurate critic, not only on account of his eminent success in correcting the exuberances of this fanciful and extravagant mode of interpretation, but of the singular happiness with which he has illustrated the ambiguous and more obsolete allusions of the poet.

Sufi (سوفی), a sect among the Muhammadans. Kāzi Nūr-ullah of Shustar, a Persian author of very high reputation for his piety and judgment, has given an excellent account of the Sūfis and their doctrine in the Majālis-ul-Mominin, a treatise on the Shia faith. "The Sūfis" (he there says) "are of two classes: those who desire human knowledge and pursue it in the accustomed way, observing the common ordinances of religion, are called Mutakallam (advocates or observers); those who practice austerities and strive to purify their souls, are called Sūfia." This word literally means pure, clean. The celebrated Moulwi Rāmi has the following play upon it in one of his lines: Sūfi na Shawad Sūfi tā dar narasad jamī. "The Sūfi will not be pure till he takes one cup." This is said, to have a mystical meaning.

Sufi, Mullā Muḥammad Sufi of Amol, (صوفی ملا محمد), author of a Sāqī-nāma, which he composed in the year A.D. 1592, A.H. 1000.

Sufian Suri (صفیان ثوری), whose proper name was Abū 'Abdullah, was born at Kūfa in A.D. 713, A.H. 95. He was a master of the highest authority in the Traditions and other Sciences. He died in the time of the Khalifa Al-Mahdī, about the A.D. 777, A.H. 160, and is buried at Basra, where he had concealed himself in order to avoid accepting the office of Qāzī.

Suhyli Khurasani (سہیلی خراسانی), whose full name is Amīr Shaikh Ahmad Suhyli, also called Nizām-uddīn Ahmad Shykhām, was seal-bearer to Sulṭān Husain Mirzā of Herāt. The work called Anwār Suhyli was dedicated to him by Husain Wāez. He is the author of a Diwān. His death took place in A.D. 1591, A.H. 907.

Sulaiman (سليمان), a Khalīf of the house of Umayya, and son of 'Abdulmalik. He succeeded his brother Walid I. in Syria, A.D. 714, A.H. 96, and died, after a reign of three years, in A.D. 717, A.H. 99.

Sulaiman (سليمان), the son of Bāiazīd I. (Bajazet) was proclaimed emperor of the Turks in A.D. 1402, A.H. 805, at the time when his father was taken captive by Amīr Taimūr. He displayed great valour, but his glory was tarnished by his excessive love of pleasure. He was dethroned and murdered in A.D. 1410 by his brother Mūsa, who in his turn was defeated and assassinated by another brother, Muḥammad I. who ascended the throne in A.D. 1413. This Sulaimān is not reckoned among the Turkish Sulṭāns.

Sulaiman II. Sultan (سليمان سلطان), emperor of Turkey, who succeeded his brother Muḥammad IV. in A.D. 1687, A.H. 1098, was a very indolent prince. He died in the year A.D. 1691, A.H. 1102, and was succeeded by his brother Ahmad II.

Sulaiman Badakhshi, Mirza (سليمان بدخشی مرزا), ruler of Badakhshān, was the son of Khān Mirzā, the son of Sulṭān Abū Sa'īd Mirzā, a descendant of Amīr Taimūr. When his father, Khān Mirzā, died in the year A.D. 1521, A.H. 927, he was then only seven years old, consequently that province fell into the hands of the emperor Bābar, who was then in Kābul; he appointed his son Humāyūn to take charge of that country; but when Bābar conquered Dehli in A.D. 1526, A.H. 932, he, after four years, restored that kingdom to Mirzā Sulaimān, in whose possession it remained till the year A.D. 1575, A.H. 983, when it was usurped by his grandson Shāhrukh Mirzā, the son of Ibrāhīm Mirzā, who intended to assassinate him. Mirzā Sulaimān was obliged to fly to India, where, on his arrival, he was received by the emperor Akbar with the greatest affection and kindness. Consequently when Shāh Jahān was born to Jahāngir, his grandfather Akbar made him over to her to be brought up by her. She was also the patroness of Nūr Jahān; and died at Āgra in January, A.D. 1626, Jumādā I. A.H. 1035, aged 84 lunar years.

Sunna (سنة). This word is used generally to signify all the traditions, both of the sayings and doings of the Prophet, and the term Hadis is employed in the same comprehensive sense. The distinction between the Hadis (sayings) and the Sunan (doings) is not attended to by doctors of the Muslim law; both are generally authoritative.

Sunni (سني). Those Musalmāns who assume to themselves the appellation of orthodox, and uphold the succession of the Khalifas Abū Bakr, Umar, and Usman, and deny the right of supremacy, either spiritual or temporal, to the posterity of 'Alī, are called Sunnis. They are divided into an infinity of sects, but of these there are only four principal ones, which are called after their founders.

[Vide Imām and Shia.]

Sunqar or Sanqar. (سنقر), son of Maudūd, one of the Atabaks of Fars, who is better known by his title of Atabak Muza'far-uddin, was the great-grandson of Saljuq, the founder of this dynasty. He succeeded Bāzaba, the last governor of Fars of this family, and threw off all dependence upon the Saljuq Sultans about the year A.D. 1148, A.H. 543. He made his residence in the city of Shiraz, which afterwards became the capital of his family. He died in A.D. 1161, A.H. 556, and was succeeded by his brother.

Muza'fir-uddin Zangi, who, after a peaceful reign of 14 years, left the government to his son Ikiā in A.D. 1175, A.H. 571.

Takla, who acquired fame by employing, as his wazir the victorious Khwaja Amin-uddin of Gazarun, reigned 20 years and at his death, which happened in A.D. 1195, A.H. 591, the government of Fars fell to his brother.

Atabak Sa'd bin-Za'fir, who made a successful attack upon Isfahan. The memory of Atabak Sa'd is to this day held in great respect at Shiraz. He surrounded the city by a wall and built the Jamā Masjid, or great mosque, which still remains a monument of his piety and munificence. He reigned more than 30 years and died about the year A.D. 1226, A.H. 623. He was succeeded by his son.

Atabak Abū Bakī, also called Abū Nasr, a son every way worthy of his father. He gave an extraordinary proof of his fore-sight in his early conclusion of Chāngiz Khan to whom he sent a mission and some valuable presents. The conqueror received the advance with favour, conferred the lukish title of Kutluq Khan upon him, and the province of Fars through the wisdom of its prince was exempted from that destruction which fell on all these in its vicinity. In his time lived the celebrated Sa'di of Shiraz who wrote the Gulistan in his name. Abū Bakī died at Shiraz in A.D. 1260 of the Jumadā II A.H. 668, after a long and prosperous reign of 34 years and left his government to his son. Dīlāt Shāh says he died in A.H. 667.

Atabak Sa'd II, who, at the time of his father's death, was with the army of Halakū Khān, the grandson of Chāngiz Khān, hastened to take possession of his inheritance, but was seized with an illness, which terminated his existence before he could reach his capital. His infant son.

Atabak Muhammad was placed upon the masnad, and the rule devolved upon the child's mother, Khātun Turkan, but her authority received a great shock in the death of her son, who, two years and a half after his advancement, fell from the terrace of his palace, and was killed on the spot, A.D. 1262, A.H. 660. After his death.

Muhammad Shah, a chief of the family of Salghar, was elevated to the dignity of Atabak, but Khātun Turkan, after eight months, being displeased with his conduct, seized him and sent him prisoner to Halakū

Khān, while she elevated his brother Saljuq Shah to the government.

Saljuq Shah, with a view of confirming his power, married Khātun Turkan, but afterwards, in a fit of intoxication, ordered one of his slaves to strike off her head. Some officers of the emperor Halakū Khān, who were present, expressed their feelings at this horrid act and were instantly put to death. When Halakū heard of these proceedings, he immediately ordered the execution of his brother Muhammad Saljuq, dreading the vengeance of the emperor, fled to Kavarun but was seized and put to death, A.D. 1263, A.H. 661.

Īsh, the daughter of Atabak Sa'd, who reigned one year, was married to Mangū Taimū, the son of Halakū, which put an end to this family, which lasted 120 years.

Supkaran or Subhkaran Bundela

(سپهرکن بدله), a Rājput, who was an Amir of 2000 in the service of the emperor Alauddin. He died at Bahadurgarh in the Deccan about the year A.D. 1678, A.H. 1089, and was much lamented by all who knew him. Many of his women buried themselves upon the funeral pile with his corpse. He was a soldier unequalled, had in repeated battles won the prize of valour, and was in general successful. After his death his son Dālpit Rāo was exalted to the rank of 600 by the emperor.

caused, or sanctioned, the murder of sixty-two Englishmen, women, and children, during the insurrection of 1857, under circumstances of the most cold-blooded atrocity. After months of unavailing pursuit, Major Barrow, Commissioner of the district of Aundh, to which he had fled, offered him his life, provided he had himself committed no murders. The Nawab surrendered, was tried, found guilty, and sentenced to death. The Governor-General, however, while fully concurring in the verdict, held that the word of a British officer must be maintained, declared the criminal exempt from the punishment of death, on the condition that he should immediately quit the British territory for ever. If, ran the order, he accept this condition, he will be conveyed to the frontier as a convict, under a military guard, and there set at liberty. If he refuse the condition, it was added, or, if having accepted it, he shall break it or attempt to break it, now, or at any future time, the capital sentence pronounced upon him will be carried out. The Nawab elected to be sent to Mecca. Accordingly on the 23rd May, A.D. 1859, he was taken to the Magistrate's office under a European guard, and there fettered. He was allowed to see his children but not his wife. Two hundred men of the Pathagarh Levy were ordered to guard him to Bombay, on his way to Mecca.

Tāhir I. or Tāhir ibn-Husain-al-Khuzai (طاهر ابن حسین الخذاعي), surnamed Yeminain (Ambidexter). He was one of Al-Māmūn's ablest supporters and one of the greatest generals of his age. He defeated and slew 'Alī ibn-Isā in battle, A.D. 811, A.H. 195, and sent his head as a present to the Khalīf Al-Māmūn, his employer, who amply rewarded Tāhir for his services. And when that prince was residing at Marv, the capital of Khurāsān, he revolted against his brother Al-Amin, the Khalīf of Baghdād, and despatched Tāhir with an army to attack him at Baghdād, which place he took in A.D. 813, Ṣafar, A.H. 198, and, having slain Al-Amin, sent his head to Khurāsān, that it might be presented to Al-Māmūn, his brother, who conferred the government of Khurāsān upon Tāhir and his descendants with almost absolute and unlimited power. Tāhir died on Saturday the 15th November, A.D. 822, 24th Jumāda II. A.H. 207, at Marv, and his son Talha was appointed wazīr in his room. The following is a list of his descendants:

Tāhī I. died A.D. 823, A.H. 207.

Talha his son.

'Abdullāh, son of Tāhir, died A.D. 845, A.H. 230.

Tāhir II. son of 'Abdullāh.

Muḥammad, son of Tāhir II. and last prince of this race.

Tāhir II. (طاهر ابن عبدالله), great-grandson of Tāhir I. and son of 'Abdullāh, whom he succeeded in the government of Khurāsān in the reign of Al-Mustāin Billāh, and died a natural death. He was succeeded by his son Muḥammad, the last prince of this race.

Tāhir Abiwardi (طاهر ابیوردی), a poet who flourished in the time of Sulṭān Bālsanghar.

Tāhir-al-Azaz dīn Allāh (طاهر الازن), son of Ḥākim Abū Mansūr, succeeded his father, A.D. 1020, on the throne of Egypt. He reigned 15 years, and left his crown to a son under seven years of age, named al-Mustanasar Billāh. Tāhir died in A.D. 1036, A.H. 427.

He died in A.D. 1696, A.H. 1103.

Tahmasp I. Shah Safavi (طهماسب)

(شاه صفوی), king of Persia, was born on Wednesday the 22nd February, A D 1514, 26th Zil-hijja, A H 919, and succeeded his father, Shāh Ismā'il I to the throne of Persia, on the 24th May, A D 1524, 19th Rajah, A H 930, when he was ten years of age. The reign of this prince owes much of its celebrity to the truly royal and hospitable reception he gave to the emperor Humayun (q v), A D 1543, when that monarch was forced to fly from India, and to take shelter in his dominions. All the means of the kingdom were called forth to do honour to the royal guest, and they were as liberally furnished to replace him upon his throne. Shah Tahmasp died at the age of 64 after a reign of more than 53 lunar years, on Tuesday the 15th May, A D 1576, 15th Safar, A H 984. His fourth son, Ismā'il Mirza, succeeded him. According to his own request he was buried at Mashhad.

Tahmasp II Shah Safavi (طهماسب)

(شاه صفوی), king of Persia, was the son of Sultan Husain. He assumed the title of king, of Persia after the confinement of his father by Mahmud the Afghan chief and struggled a few years with his fate but a weak, effeminate, and debilitated youth was unequal for such times and he only merits a place in history as his name furnished a pretext for the celebrated Nadir, or Tahmasp, Quli Khan to lay the foundations of his great power. He was confined at Shirvan in Khurasan, and put to death by Riza Quli Khan, the son of Nadir Shah, who was then absent on his expedition to India in A D 1739, A H 1161.

Taj-uddin Abu Ja'far bin-Sukman (تاج الدين ابو جعفر بن صقمان), an author who died in A.D. 1118, A.H. 512.

Taj-uddin Abu'l Fazl (تاج الدين ابوالفضل بن طاهر), son of Tāhir, ruler of Sistān, also called Nīmroz, which country he received from Sultān Sanjar Saljūqī, some time about the year A.D. 1150, A.H. 545. The following is a list of his descendants, who reigned in Sistān till the invasion of Changēz Khān:

1. Taj-uddin 'Abū Ja'far.
2. Shams-uddin Muhammad, son of Taj-uddin, who, along with his sister, was slain by his own subjects.
3. Taj-uddin Harb, son of 'Izzul Mulk, who is said to have reigned 60 years.
4. Bahrām Shāh, son of Taj-uddin, in whose time lived Abū Nasr Farāhī, the author of the Nisab-us-Sulūk.
5. Namat-uddin, son of Bahrām, who was killed in battle against his brother Rukn-uddin.
6. Rukn-uddin, son of Bahrām, who was slain at the time of the invasion of Changēz Khān.
7. Shahāb-uddin, son of Taj-uddin, slain in battle.
8. Taj-uddin, who defended himself for two years in the fort of Sistān, which was at last taken and every soul put to the sword by the troops of Changēz Khān.

Taj-uddin Yaldūz (تاج الدين يالدوز), king of Ghazni. It is related that Shahāb-uddin Muhammad Ghūrī, who had no children excepting a daughter, took pleasure in educating Turkish slaves, whom he afterwards adopted. Four of these slaves, besides Qutb-uddin Aibak, became great princes, of whom Taj-uddin Yaldūz was one. On the death of Shahāb-uddin, in A.D. 1206, A.H. 602, the Turki officers espoused the cause of his nephew, prince Mahmūd, the son of Ghayās-uddin Ghūrī; but Mahmūd, being unambitious and naturally indolent, felt satisfied with the throne of his ancestors at Ghūr, and proclaimed Yaldūz king of Ghazni, content to receive homage from that chief. Yaldūz had several battles with Qutb-uddin Aibak, king of Dehli, and some time after that king's death recruited his army and marched towards India with a view to conquer that country, but was defeated near Dehli by Shams-uddin Altīmsh in A.D. 1216, A.H. 611, and, being taken prisoner, was imprisoned in Badkōn, where, according to some accounts, he died a natural death, but, according to others, he was poisoned. The whole length of his reign was nine years. A list of the Sultāns of the Slave Dynasty of Ghūr, who reigned in India, is given under Qutb-uddin Aibak.

Taj-uddin Gazruni (تاج الدين گازرونی), author of the Bahr-i-Sa'adat, original name was Malik Tajūb, was appointed wazīr by Khiljī Khān, king of Dehli, in the first year of his reign, A.D. 1414, A.H. 817, with the above title. He died on the 13th January, A.D. 1421, 8th Muharram, A.H. 824, and his eldest son, Sikandar, succeeded him in the office of wazīr under the title of Malik-ul-Sharq.

Takash or Taksh (تكش), surnamed

'Alā-uddin Sultān of Khwāizm, the son of Alp Arsalan, the son of Atsiz, a descendant of the prince of that country, who had been cupbearer to the celebrated Sultān Sanjar, king of Persia. He defeated and slew Tughral III. Saljūqī in a battle, A.D. 1194, A.H. 590. At his death, which happened 4th July, A.D. 1200, 19th Ramazān, A.H. 596, he left his kingdom to his son Sultān Muhammad, surnamed Qutb-uddin, whose reign was, at its commencement, splendid and successful; but his fortune fell before that great destroyer of the human race, Changēz Khān, by whom he was defeated, his countries pillaged, and almost all his family made prisoners. He died of a broken heart, A.D. 1220, A.H. 617. His son Jalāl-uddin, who was the last of this dynasty of kings, long bore up against the torrent that had overwhelmed his father, but was at last subdued. He was slain A.D. 1220.

Takash or Turtash (تكش), which see.

Takhallus (مجلس), the poetically-assumed title, or pen-name, of a Persian writer; of which many instances appear in this work. It was originally, perhaps, adopted from motives of caution, to conceal identity; but it became a fashion, adopted even by royal authors.

Tantia Topi (تانتيا توبي), a famous rebel chief of 1857. He was captured in the jungles of Perone on the 7th April, 1859, and hanged on the 18th. It is said that before his death he solemnly affirmed that he was the instigator of the Cawnpore massacre, and that the Nānā, who had sworn to protect the Europeans, was angry with him for his conduct and never saw him afterwards. If this confession was made, it was evidently with the view of saving the Nānā, when it could no longer injure himself. In his confession Tāntiā described himself as a Brāhman of high caste, a native of Pāna, which place he had left about 30 years before for Central India, where he became an Artillery soldier (Tōpi). He next obtained employment in the Nānā's establishment at Bithūr in connection with the Treasury, and was so employed in 1857, when the Mutiny broke out. He also said that he commanded the rebel army of 8000 men which attacked Colonel Greathed's column on the parade ground at Agra, on the 10th October, 1857. He declared he was aware of the arrival of the column from Delhi before he opened fire on the encampment that morning, and did not suppose he had only the Agra brigade to deal with, as we imagined. He was deceived, however, after the action had commenced, by seeing a reinforcement of European redcoats coming up (Greadth's men being dressed in Khaki), for whose appearance and apparent numbers (for they were reported to be 2500 men) he could not account; but supposing them to be new arrivals from down-country, he immediately retreated; otherwise he would have held his ground, and not have allowed Colonel Greadth to win so easy a victory. Tāntiā also mentioned that the largest force he ever commanded was at the battle of the Betwa, when he had under him 22,000 fighting men, and 130 pieces of ordnance of various calibre. [Vide the Appendix to Malletop's 3rd vol.]

Taurandukht (توران دخت), daughter of Khusrō Parwiz. She was elevated to the throne of Persia some time after the death of her brother Sheroyā, A D 681. We are told by Persian historians that this queen restored the sacred cross, which had been borne away from Jerusalem by Khusrō Parwiz, and by that act, acquired great power with the Roman emperor. But this is evidently erroneous, for there is no doubt that the emperor Heraclius, when he returned from Persia, carried that precious relic to Constantinople, which was deemed a more splendid trophy of victory than all his spoils and conquests. Taurandukht ruled Persia only one year and four months. She was succeeded by her cousin and lover, Shah Shahadad. He had reigned only one month when he was deposed, and 'Azarm or Arzandukht, another daughter of Khusrō Parwiz, was raised to the throne, A.D. 632. This princess, who was alike distinguished by her sense and beauty, resolved to take the whole management of the affairs of the kingdom into her hands. She would not even appoint a wazir. But the fatal passion of a Persian noble defeated all her designs. Farukh Humayz, the governor of Khurasan, fell violently in love with her, or perhaps, with her dominions. He proceeded to court and made his love known to his royal mistress, she refused her hand, and he was soon afterwards murdered through her instigation. As soon as his melancholy fate was known to his son Rustam, he collected a large army, and marched from Khurasan to Madam. The queen was unable to oppose him, and the young chief avenged his father by putting her to a cruel death. After her demise, Farrukhzad, the son of Khusrō Parwiz by a female singer of Isfahan, was raised to the throne, but before he had reigned a month his days were terminated by poison. Such were the events which immediately preceded the reign of Yazdgerd III and the fall of the Persian monarchy.

His Mausoleum still continues a favourite resort of the pious and Haidar Ali Khan the fifth of Tipu Sultan, had a particular veneration for him. Tipu or Tippu, in the Chinese language signifies a tiger.

Tipu or Tippu Sultan (تپو سلطان)

the son of Hindu 'Alī Khan of Mysore. He was born in the year A.D. 1741 and succeeded his father in December A.D. 1762, as ruler of Mysore. During the American war he joined the French against the English but after the breaking out of the French Revolution he was exposed alone to the fortunes of the war. In A.D. 1790 he was defeated in Mysore and, yielding to the British arms, he consented, in A.D. 1792, to make peace with Lord Cornwallis by delivering up his two sons as hostages and paying, besides, out of his dominion, above three millions sterling. His intrigues with the French and his machinations to destroy the English power, renewed the war in A.D. 1799. He was attacked by the British in his very capital, and was killed whilst bravely defending himself on the ramparts on the 4th May, A.D. 1799, 26th Zil-Qa'ida, A.H. 1213, aged 52 years. He was buried in the mausoleum of his father in the garden named Lal Bagh Tipū, though oppressive and capricious, patronized the arts, and his fondness for literature was displayed in the collection of books found in his palace, consisting of various works in the Sanskrit language of the 10th century, translations of the Quran, MSS. of the history of the Moghal victories, and historical memoirs of Hindūstān, all of which were deposited in the Library of Calcutta, and a catalogue of them was written by Captain Stewart, and published. Tipū Sultan is the author of two books, or collections of letters, one entitled Fa'mān-Sa-nam 'Alī Rāya, and the other Fath-ul-Majahidin. A part of the latter has been translated and published by Mr. B. Cisp, of Bengal.

Tughrai, Mulla (طغرائی ملا), an author who lived in the middle of the 11th century of the Hijri.Tughral Beg (طغرل بگ) (the Tan- grolphix of the Greeks) was the son of Mikail, the son of Saljuq, and the first Sultān of the Saljuqides. Tughral Beg and his brother Jā'ier Beg Dāūd were in the service of Sultān Mahmūd of Ghazni. After defeating Sultān Mas'ūd I son of Sultān Mahmūd, in a battle fought in A.D. 1038, A.H. 429, he assumed the title and state of a sovereign at Nishapur. He subdued 'Irāq, took Baghdad, and by its reduction became master of the person of the Khalifa al-Qāem Billah, whom he styled him as Sultān of Khurasān, appointed him vicegerent or vicar of the holy prophet, and the lord of all Muhammadians. He gave his sister in marriage to the Khalif, and his nephew Alp Arslan afterwards married the daughter of the Khalif al-Muqtadir. The Saljuq family divided into three branches and settled in Hamdān, Kirman and Isfahān, or Anatolia. Tughral Beg died after a reign of 20 lunar years A.D. 1063, A.H. 465, aged 70 lunar years and as he had no issue he was succeeded by his nephew Sultān Alp Arslan, the son of Abū Jā'ier Dāūd. The following are the names of the Sultāns of the Saljuq dynasty of Iran or Persia.

- 1 Tughral Beg the son of Mikail, the son of Saljuq.
- 2 Alp Arslan nephew of Tughral Beg.
- 3 Mikhshah the son of Alp Arslan.
- 4 Bukhārīq the son of Mikhshah. In his reign the empire was divided by partitioning Persia, Muhammad his brother, Syria and Azarbaijan and Saman Sultān, Khurasan and Mawarannahr.

Tughral II (طغرل), also called Tughral

Sultān of the race of Saljuq was the son of Sultān Muhammad the son of Alp Arslan. He was raised to the dignity of Sultān by his uncle Sultān Sanjar A.D. 1132 A.H. 522, after the death of his brother Sultān Mahmūd, and after a reign of three years died in October A.D. 1134, Muharrim, A.H. 523, aged 22 years. His brother Mas'ūd succeeded him.

Tughral III (طغرل), a Sultān of the Saljuqian family, was the son of Arslan Shah, the son of Sultān Muhammad the brother of Sultān Sanjar. After the death of Sultān Sanjar, A.D. 1157 A.H. 552, Persia continued, for a period of forty years, to be distracted with the wars of different branches of the Saljuqian dynasty. The last who exercised power was Tughral III who succeeded his father Arslan Shah, in January, A.D. 1176, Jumādī II A.H. 571, and, after a reign of ten years, was seized and imprisoned by his uncle and wasir, Qizal Arslan, who resolved to usurp the throne, but fell by the hand of an assassin in A.D. 1191, A.H. 587, and the kingdom was restored to Tughral. He was, however, after some years, defeated in a battle, taken prisoner and executed by Takhsh, ruler of Khwārizm, A.D. 1194, A.H. 590, and his head sent to Nāsr, the Khalif of Baghdad. With this prince terminated the Saljuqian monarchs of Persia, who had governed that country from the commencement of the reign of Tughral I to the death of Tughral III—158 years.

'UBID

'Ubid (عبيد), a poet who lived in the time of Sulṭān Ghayās-uddin Tughlaq Shāh, and was buried alive on account of his having raised a false report that the king was dead, and that a great revolution had taken place at Dehli. This event took place in the second year of the king's reign, A.D. 1322, A.H. 722.

'Ubid Khan (عبيد خان), ruler of the Uzbaks, was contemporary with Shāh Tahmāsp I. Safwī, king of Persia, who in a battle defeated his troops, and gave them a signal overthrow in A.D. 1527, A.H. 935.

'Ubid-ullah (عبيد الله), sovereign of the Uzbaks. This monarch was the nephew of the celebrated Shāhī Beg Khān, the conqueror. He commenced his reign about the year A.D. 1542, A.H. 949.

'Ubid-ullah Ahrar Naqshband (عبيد الله احرار نقشبندي), a celebrated learned Musalmān and saint of Khurāsān, among the number of whose disciples Maulwī Jānūī was one. He died in the month of February, A.D. 1491, Rabī' II. A.H. 896, and is buried at Samarqand. Amīr Alīshēr, the celebrated wazīr of Sulṭān Husain Mirzā, who much respected him, found the chronogram of the year of his death in the words "Khuld Barin."

'Ubid-ullah-al-Mahdī (عبيد الله المهدي), a chief of Barbary, in Africa, who, in A.D. 910, A.H. 298, rebelled against the king of that country, of the race of Aghlab, and assumed the title of Khalīf of Qairwān (the ancient Cyrene, and residence of the Aghlabite princes). To give the greater weight to his pretensions, he also took the surname of al-Mahdī, the director. According to some, also, he pretended to be descended in a right line from 'Alī, the son of 'Abū Tālib, and Fātima, the daughter of Muḥammad; for which reason the Arabs called him and his descendants Fātimites. He likewise encouraged himself and his followers by a traditional prophecy of Muḥammad, that at the end of 300 years the sun should rise out of the West. Having at length driven the Aghlabites into Egypt, where they became known by the name of Maghrabians, he extended his dominions in Africa and Sicily, making Qairwān the place of his residence.

'UBID

He sent several of his generals at different times to conquer Egypt, but they were always defeated and obliged to fly to Qairwān. Al-Mahdī reigned in Barbary 24 years, and was succeeded by his son Abul Qāsim, who then took the surname of al-Qayem Mahdī.

'Ubid-ullah bin-Masa'ud (عبيد الله بن مسعود), author of a Commentary on the Wiqāya, a work on jurisprudence, entitled Sharḥ Wiqāya. He is also the author of the Nikāya, which is sometimes called Mukhtasir-al-Wiqāya, being in fact an abridgment of that work. 'Ubid-ullah died A.D. 1349, A.H. 750.

[Vide Mahmūd, surnamed Rurhān-ash-Shari'at.]

'Ubid-ullah ibn-Qais (عبيد الله ابن قيس), a distinguished Arabian poet, who commemorated the death of Misna'b, the son of Zubair, who was on terms of friendship with him, and had fought in his cause in the year A.D. 690, A.H. 71.

'Ubid-ullah ibn-Zayad (عبيد الله ابن زياد), was appointed governor of Kūfa by the khalīf Yazīd in the room of al-Namān, A.D. 679, A.H. 60. He beheld Muslim, Husain's cousin, and his troops surrounded Husain at Karbala, who, having desperately engaged his troops, was after long resistance cut to pieces with all his men in October, A.D. 680, Muharram, A.H. 61. In the reign of 'Abdulmalik, 'Ubid-ullah was sent to Kūfa with leave to plunder it for three days; but, before he reached that city, al-Mukhtār, then ruler of that place, sent his forces against him under the command of Ibrāhīm, the son of Alashtar, when, after a sharp engagement, 'Ubid-ullah's forces were beaten, and himself killed in the camp. Ibrāhīm, having cut off his head, sent it to al-Makhtār, and burned his body. This circumstance took place in August, A.D. 686, Muharram, A.H. 67.

'Ubid Zakani (عبيد زكاني), a celebrated jester and poet, was contemporary with the poet Salīmān Sawājī. He composed several ludicrous verses on Jahān Khātūn, the wife of Khawāja Amīn-uddin, wazīr of Shāh Abū Is-hāq, ruler of Shīrās. He is the author of the work called Risāla dar ilm Bayān, which he dedicated to the king, and also of a Diwān. He died in A.D. 1370, A.H. 772.

Udaipuri Begam (اودپوری بگم), the favourite wife of the emperor 'Alamgir, and the mother of the prince Kambakhsh whom his father cherished with the utmost tenderness as the son of his old age. She was living in A.D. 1686. She is believed to have been a Sisodia from Jodhpur.

Udai Singh (اودی سنگه رانا), Rānā of Chittor, was the son of Rana Sanka, the emperor Bahar's competitor but a man of feeble character. In his time the fort of Chittor was taken by the emperor Akbar in March, A.D. 1568, Shabān A.H. 975. His son, Rana Partap, founded the new capital called Udaipur which is still occupied by his descendants. Rana Partap Singh died A.D. 1595, A.H. 1004, and Amir Singh his son succeeded him and died in the 11th year of Jahangir, A.D. 1620, A.H. 1029.

Udai Singh Rathouri (اودی سنگه رانهوری), commonly called Mota Raja, was the son of Rāi Maldeo of Jodhpur Mughu. He served under the emperor Akbar, and in the year A.D. 1591, A.H. 994, gave his daughter named Bahmat in marriage to Sultan Sulim (afterwards Jahangir), by whom he had Shah Jahan. He was raised to high rank, and Jodhpur his native country, given him in jagir. He died A.D. 1594, A.H. 1002, and four of his wives burned themselves with his corpse. After his death his son Suraj Singh succeeded him.

Ugarsen (اوگرسن راجه), a Rājā who is said to have reigned at Agra several centuries before the time of Sultan Sikandar Lodi. After him Agra became a village of Bayana, the name of the Raja of which place was Bin.

Ulagh Beg Mirza or Ulagh Beg (الغ بگ مرزا), a prince celebrated for his knowledge in Astronomy, was the son of Mirzā Shihrukh, the son of Amīr Taimūr. He reigned at Samarcand for 40 years during the lifetime of his father, whom he succeeded in March, A.D. 1447, A.H. 851. He was a prince who made peaceful studies the chief object of his life, and had entirely neglected the art of war. He assembled all the astronomers of his kingdom, and the celebrated Tables which are known by his name, viz. Ulagh Beg, were the result of his labours. He is said to have had very large instruments for making his observations, particularly a quadrant as high as the church of Santa Sophia at Constantinople, which is 180 Roman feet. His fate was cruel: he was defeated, taken prisoner, and put to death by his son Mirzā 'Abdul Latif, on the 27th October, A.D. 1449, Rāmāzan, A.H. 853. It is a consolation to know that this unnatural prince enjoyed the power he had attained by so monstrous a crime only for the short space of six months: he was slain by his own soldiers. *Ulagh Beg's Catalogue of fixed stars, rectified for A.D. 1434, was published by Hyde, at Oxford, in A.D. 1665, in 4to with learned notes.

Ulfatī (الفي), poetical name of Qulich Khan of Andjan, which see.

'Umar-al-Maksus (عمر المكسوس), the favourite master of the Khalīf Mu'awīn II who, after his father's death, consulted him whether he ought, or not, to accept the khalifat. His master told him that if he thought himself able to administer justice duly to the Mussalmāns, he ought to accept it, but otherwise he ought not to charge himself with it. This Khalīf had scarcely reigned six weeks when he found himself too weak to sustain the weight of the government, and resolved to lay it down. This he did, and had no sooner renounced the khalifat but he shut himself up in a chamber from whence he never stirred till he died, not long after his abdication, of the plague, according to some and according to others of poison. The family at Medina was so greatly irritated at his proceedings that they vented their resentment upon the person of Umar-ul-Maksus, whom they buried alive because they supposed that it was by his advice that Mu'awīn deposed himself. This circumstance took place in the year A.D. 683, A.H. 64.

'Umar bin-'Abdul Aziz (عمر بن عبد العزيز), grandson of Marwān I. was the ninth Khalīf of the house of Umayyā. He succeeded Sulaiman at Damascus in September or October, A.D. 717, A.H. 99, and died after a reign of two years and some months in February, A.D. 720, A.H. 101, at Dyr Saman. He was succeeded by Yazid II. This Khalīf ('Umar 'Abdul Aziz) was eminent above all others for temperance and self-denial, inasmuch that, according to the Muhammadan faith, he was raised to Muhammad's bosom, as a reward for his abstinence in an age of corruption.

'Umar bin-'Abdul Aziz (عمر بن عبد العزيز) was an eminent Mussalmān, who died in the year A.D. 743, A.H. 134.

‘Umar bin-‘Abdul Aziz bin-Maja (عمر بن عبد العزيز بن ماجه)

(بن عبد العزيز بن ماجه), commonly called Husam-ush-Shahid, author of a most esteemed Commentary. He was killed A.D. 1141, A.H. 336.

‘Umar bin-‘Abdullah (عمر بن عبد الله), a famous Arabian poet, who flourished in the time of the khalif ‘Abdulmalik.

[Vide Jamil.]

‘Umar bin-Khattab (عمر بن خطاب),

one of the favourite companions and father-in-law of Muhammad. He succeeded Abū Bakr Sadiq as second khalifa after Muhammad in August, A.D. 634, Jumāda II. A.H. 13. He spread his conquests over Syria and Phœnicia, and took Jerusalem after an obstinate siege in A.D. 637, A.H. 16. His generals extended his conquests over Persia and Egypt, and increased the worshippers of Muhammad. The fall of Alexandria under his power was marked by the destruction of its celebrated library, but he restored the canal between the Nile and the Red Sea. During his reign the Muhammadans conquered 36,000 towns, destroyed 4,000 Christian temples, and built 1,400 mosques. He was the first who was called “Amir-ul-Momīnīn,” or the Lord of the Believers, and this title was ever afterwards used by all succeeding khalifs. He was married seven times, and one of his wives was Umm Kulsum, the daughter of ‘Alī. He was stabbed on Wednesday the 3rd November, A.D. 644, 25th Zil-hijja, A.H. 23, by a Persian slave named Fīrōz, whilst saying his morning prayers in a mosque, and died three days afterwards, aged 63 lunar years. He reigned 10 years 3 months and 8 days, and was succeeded in the khalīfat by ‘Usmān, the son of ‘Affān. Waring, in his Tour to Shirāz, mentions that while he was at Shirāz (A.H. 1802), the Persians (who are Shias) celebrated the death of the khalif ‘Umar. “They erected a large platform, on which they fixed an image, disfigured and deformed as much as possible. Addressing themselves to the image, they began to revile it for having supplanted ‘Alī, the lawful successor of Muhammad; at length, having exhausted all their expressions of abuse, they suddenly attacked the image with stones and sticks, until they had shattered it into pieces. The inside was hollow, and full of sweetmeats, which were greedily devoured by the mob who attended the ceremony.”

‘Umār-ibn-‘Ubed (عمر ابن عبيد), the son of Bāb; disciple of Wāsil-ibn-‘Alā, and, with him, joint founder of the Muṭtazila sect or school in the eighth century A.D. He lived at Basra.

[Vide Muṭtazila.]

‘Umar Khan Khilji (عمر خان خلجي),

the youngest son of Sultan ‘Alā-uddin Khilji, a boy of seven years of age, was raised to the throne of Dehli, after the death of his father, by Malik Kāfir the eunuch, in December, A.D. 1316, Shawwāl, A.H. 716. Malik Kāfir was assassinated after 35 days, and soon afterwards ‘Umar Khān was deposed by his brother Mubarak Khān, who ascended the throne in January, A.D. 1317, A.H. 716.

‘Umar Khayām (عمر خیام). He was originally a tent-maker, and hence his takhallus of Khayām. He is held to be one of the most remarkable of Persian poets, unprecedented in regard to the freedom of his religious opinion. The Voltaire of Persia, his works gave great offence to the priests, but are, nevertheless, highly esteemed by general readers, apparently with justice, as the animation and brilliancy of his style are unquestionable. His hatred of hypocrisy and the tricks of false devotees appears his crime in the eyes of the supposed pious; his tolerance of other creeds was looked upon with equal suspicion and dislike. He was born at Naishapūr, and devoted much of his time to the study of astronomy, of which science he was a distinguished professor; but it is said that, instead of his studies leading him to the acknowledgment of the Supreme Being, it prompted his disbelief. The result of his reflections on this important subject is given in a poem of his, much celebrated under the title of Rubāyat-i-‘Umar Khayām. He was the friend of Hasan Sabbāh, the founder of the sect of the Assassins, and, it has been stated on unwarranted conjecture, assisted him in the establishment of his diabolical doctrine and fellowship. Great allowance must, evidently, be made for the prejudices of Muslim historians, who would, of course, neglect nothing calculated to cast odium on one so inimical to their superstitions. ‘Umar Khayām seems particularly to direct his satire against the mysticisms of Mawāsi, the most exalted poet of his time, though inferior in this extraordinary and incomprehensible style to the later followers of the same school, Attār and the great Mulla. However reprehensible his mockery would be if really directed against religion in general, it scarcely deserves the severity it met when we consider that it was the abuses he attacked and the absurdities he ridiculed; and as for the incongruities introduced into his poems, and his professed love of pleasure, he is only following, or rather pointing out as absurd, the contradictions of the mystic poets which are difficult enough to reconcile to the understanding, whether allegorical or not. The following will give an idea of the true spirit of ‘Umar Khayām:

“Ah! ye who long that, in time’s coming night,
Your names should shine in characters of light,

Let not this duty ever be forgot—Love well your neighbour; do him no despite.”

"Ah" strive your best no human heart to wring,
Let no one feel your anger burn or sting;
Would you be wrapped in everlasting joy,
Learn how to suffer, and cause no suffering."

A famous paraphrase of the Quatrains by Mr Edward Fitzgerald has been published by Quaritch of London. Though most charming as poetry, this version fails to give a correct idea of the original, which is a mere collection of disjointed and inconsistent epigrams, and by no means the continuous meditations of the English poet. A more faithful, though less artistic, version has appeared in Trubner's Oriental Series, made by Mr J. H. W. Whistler. 'Umar Khayyam was contemporaneous with Hasan Sabbah, Nizam ul-Mulk, wasir of Malikshah, and Mawani the poet Khushu in his Tazkira has recorded the year of 'Umar Khayyam's death A.D. 1123, A.H. 517, and this appears to be correct. Wajid Ali, in his Matla-ul-Ulum, says that he died in A.D. 1121, A.H. 515.

'Umar Mahrami (عمر مهرامي), author of a work called Huyat-ul-Hind, written in A.D. 1613.

'Umar Mirza (عمر میرزا) one of the sons of Miran Shah the son of Amir Timur. He was defeated and wounded in a battle fought against Shahrugh Mirza and died after a few days in May, A.D. 1407, A.H. 809.

'Umar Sahlan (Qazi Mir) Sawar (عمر سهل قاضي ساوحي), author of a work on the Science of Logic and Philosophy called Ma'adib-Nasir, which he dedicated to Nasir-uddin Mahmud, the wazir of Sultan Sanjar.

'Umar Shaikh Mirza (عمر شيخ میرزا), second son of Amir Timur. He was governor of Persia during the lifetime of his father, and was killed in battle in A.D. 1314, A.H. 799, aged 40 years. Baqir Mirza who succeeded him was one of his sons.

'Umar Shaikh Mirza (عمر شيخ میرزا), one of the eleven sons of Sultan Abu Sa'id Mirza, the son of Sultan Muhammad, the son of Miran Shah, the son of Amir Timur. He was the father of Babar Shah, king of Delhi, born at Samarkand in the year A.D. 1456, A.H. 860, and held the government of Andijan during the lifetime of his father, which, with the united principality of Farghana, he continued to govern after his death, which took place in A.D. 1460, A.H. 873. He died after a reign of 26 lunar years and 2 months, on Monday the 9th June, A.D. 1494, 4th Ramazan, A.H. 899, by the fall of a scaffold upon which he stood to see his pigeons fly, aged 39 lunar years. His son Babar, then in his eleventh year, was advanced to the throne by his nobles, and assumed the title of Zahir-uddin.

'Umdat-ul-Mulk (عمدة الملك), a title of Nawab Amir Khan.

'Umdat-ul-Umra (عمدة الامرا), the eldest son of Muhammad 'Ali Khan, the Nawab of the Karnatik. He succeeded his father in October, A.D. 1796, and died on the 15th July, A.D. 1801. On his death the English resolved to take the functions of government into their own hands. 'Ali Husani, the next heir, refused to comply. The English, in consequence, raised Asim-uddaula, the nephew of the deceased nawab, to the nominal throne, on condition that he renounced the power of government in their favour.

Umid (امید), the poetical name of Mirza Muhammad Riza, whose title was Kizilbash Khan, which see.

Umidi Maulana (امیدی مولانا), one of the best poets of his time, born at Tihra, a province of Rei. Najm Sanj, Mir 'Abdul Baqi and Khwaja Habib-ullah, who were nobles in the service of Shah Isma'il Sultani, were his intimate friends, but Shah Kawān-mulud Nuri Bakhtiari, who was also one of the courtiers, and was his enemy, murdered him one night in the year A.D. 1510, A.H. 925.

Umm Habiba (ام حمدة), one of the wives of Muhammad. She was the daughter of Abu Sufyan, the father of Mu'awiya and died in A.D. 661, A.H. 41.

Umm Habiba (ام حمدة), daughter of Ribat, and fourth wife of 'Ali, by whom she had one son, named 'Imar.

Umm Hanna (ام حنن), a daughter of Abu Talib and sister of 'Ali, the son-in-law of Muhammad.

Umm Jamil (ام جميل), daughter of Huth sister of Abu Sufyan, and wife of Abu Ishaq. Because she tolerated the hatred which her husband bore to Muhammad, a passage in the Quran, chap. lxi was revealed against her.

Umm Maqri (ام مقری), one of the principal Muhammadan saints, born at Ghazni, who acquired such great reputation by her sanctity that Sultan Mahmud often went to consult him, and refused to sit down in his presence out of respect for his virtues. He lived about the year A.D. 1000.

Umm Salma (ام سلمة), daughter of 'Abu 'Umayya and wife of Muhammad. She outlived all the wives of that prophet, and died in A.D. 679, A.H. 59.

Uns (اُس), poetical name of Munshi
Lālchānd l'ide Lālchānd

'Unsari (عُصْرِي), commonly called

Abū'l Qāsim 'Unsari, a native of Balkh, and one of the learned men who lived at the court of Sulṭān Mahmūd of Ghazni. He was a pupil of Abū'l Jānah Sanjari and master of the poets Asjadi and Farrukhi. He is esteemed to hold the first rank, as to genius, in that age, for besides being one of the best poets he was a great philosopher, versed in all the known sciences and all the learned languages of those times. Four hundred poets and learned men besides all the students of the university of Ghazni, acknowledged him for their master. Among the works of 'Unsi there is an heroic poem upon the actions of Sulṭān Mahmūd. The king one night in a dream having cut off the long tresses of his favourite slave, Ayaz, was much concerned in the morning for what he had done. 'Unsi accosted him with some extempore lines on the occasion which so pleased the king, that he ordered his mouth to be thrice filled with jewels. He wrote a Diwan consisting of 30,000 couplets, and died according to Daulat Shah, in the reign of Sulṭān Muṣṭafā I the son of Sulṭān Mahmūd, A.D. 1010, A.H. 431. Dr Sprenger, in his Catalogue of Persian Books says page 13 "that 'Unsari died in A.D. 1049, A.H. 441."

Unsi (اُئسي), a poet, whose proper name was Muḥammad Shah. He died in A.D. 1565, A.H. 973.

'Uqail (عُقَيْل), the brother of 'Alī, the son of 'Abū Tālib who not being entertained by his brother according to his quality, joined Muḥarrir, A.D. 660, A.H. 40 who received him with open arms and assigned him large revenues. His son Muḥsin, who espoused the cause of his uncle Husayn was beheaded by 'Ubayd-ullāh ibn-Zayad in the reign of Yazid.

'Urā, Maulana (عُرفى مولانا), a native of Shirāz and an excellent poet. His proper name is Jamāl-uddin but he is better known by his poetical title, 'Urā. He first came to the Deccan, and thence to Agra, where he passed a few years in the service of Ḥakīm Abū'l Fathā Gilāni, after whose death, in A.D. 1599, A.H. 997, 'Abdul Rahīm Khan, Khan Khānān introduced him to the emperor Akbar, who, finding him to be a well learned man, and a good poet, employed him among his own officers. Not long afterwards he died, in the year A.D. 1591, A.H. 999, aged 36 years, at Lāhore, where he was buried, but as he had expressed his wish in one of his odes that his remains should be transported to Najaf Ashraf, where 'Alī is buried, his bones were accordingly, after some years, sent to that place by Mir Šābir Isfahāni and re-interred there. He is the author of several works, of which his Diwān and Qasā'id are most esteemed, and were, even during his lifetime very popular, and sold in every street.

'Urian (عُريَان), poetical name of Mirzā Asad

'Usman, Osman or Othman (عُثْمَان), the first Sulṭān of the Turks, was the son of Amīr Inghirak, who died in A.D. 1288, A.H. 687. His grandfather Sulaimān was a native of Bilḥ, which country he left on the invasion of Chāngiz Khan in A.D. 1414, A.H. 611, and went to Rome, where he was drowned. 'Usman served under Sulṭān 'Alā-uddin Kākubād, one of the Sājuqian Sulṭāns of Iconium in Karamān. He had received a grant of land in the direction of ancient Phrygia, where he took Brusa from the Greek emperor, and laid the foundation of that power called after him Ottoman or 'Usmāni, and on the destruction of the Sultanate of Iconium in A.D. 1299 by the Mongols succeeded in obtaining possession of a portion of Bithynia. According to the work Ḥaṭṭ al-Ikhlāṣ, the first year of his reign is fixed A.D. 1289, A.H. 688, and that he reigned 38 lunar years and died in A.D. 1327, A.H. 727, and was buried at Brusa. His son Orkhan succeeded him.

• Usman, Osman or Othman I. (عثمان),

son of Ahmad I (Achmet), succeeded his uncle, Mustafa I. (who was deposed in 1618), on the Turkish throne, and, being unsuccessful in his wars against Poland in 1621, was by the Janissaries slain in an uproar, A D 1622, and Mustafa was again restored but not for long, for the same hands that raised him to the throne again plucked him down, in A D 1623, and raised Murad IV to be their king

• Usman II (عثمان), brother of Mahmūd I (or, as some call him, Muhammad V), whom he succeeded to the throne as emperor of Constantinople in A D 1704, A H 1168. He renewed, under severe penalties, the Muhammadan law that his subjects should drink no wine. He died after a short reign in A D 1707 A H 1171, aged 59 years, and was succeeded by Mustafa III his nephew

• Usman (عثمان بن عفان), the son of

'Affan, the son of 'Abū 'Alī, the son of 'Umayyā, was one of the favourite companions of Muhammad. He succeeded Umar as third khalīf after Muhammad, in November A D 634, Muharram, A H 24 and was murdered, after a reign of only twelve years, in his own house at Medina by 'Al Ghadhakī and several others on the 30th June A D 661 18th Zil-hijja A H 35 aged 82 years. His corpse lay unburied for three days at last it was removed bloody as it was and buried in the same clothes as he was killed in without so much as being washed, and without the least funeral solemnity. The dissensions which arose on the death of the Prophet, with regard to the succession to the Khalīfāt were revived with renewed fury when, on the murder of 'Usman the noble and unfortunate 'Alī succeeded to the dignity of Amir ul-Momminin and they eventually caused the division of Islam into two great parties or sects, called respectively the Sunnis and the Shi'as, who differ materially in the interpretation of the Qur'an and in admitting or rejecting various portions of the 'oral law. The hatred entertained between these rival sects has been the cause of constant religious wars and persecutions scarcely to be surpassed in the history of any nation or creed, and still separates the followers of Muhammad into two classes by a barrier more insurmountable than that which divides the Roman Catholic from the Protestant

• Usman bin-Isa bin-Ibrahim Sadiq

(عثمان بن عسوي), author of a collection of traditions in Arabic called Ghāṣṣat-ul-Fouṣṣāṭ

• Usman Mukhtari (عثمان محساري),

a poet who flourished in the reign of Sulṭān Ibrahim of Ghazni, and was a contemporary of Shaikh Sanai, the poet

• Usqalani (عسقلاني), an author. Vide

Shahab-uddin Abū 'l Fazi Ahmad

• Utba (عنته), the son of Abū Lahab.

He was married to Rukyya, third daughter of Muhammad, but repudiated her afterwards. It is said that he was torn to pieces by a lion, in the presence of a whole caravan, when on a journey to Syria

• Uzaeri Razi (عصاري رازي), one of the learned men, and poet of the court, of Sultan Mahmud of Ghazni, whose poetical performance as a panegyrist are esteemed very good, for one of which he received a present of 4000 dinahms from the Sultan. He is called Asasbiri Razi in the Dictionary of the Religious Ceremonies of the Eastern Nations. He was a native of Rāz, consequently the word Razi is fixed to his name

• Uzbak (ادبك), a tribe of Turks.

• Uzlat (عدلب), the poetical name of Sayyad 'Abdul Wali the son of a very learned and pious man named S adullah, in whom Aurangzeb had very great confidence. After the death of his father he went down to Murshidabad and was supported by Alah-wardi Khan. After the demise of his patron, in A D 1706, he went to the Deccan, where he died, and left a Diwan

• Uzzan Hasan (أذن حسن) (or Hasan

the Lion,) who is also called Husain Beg, was the founder of the tribe of Lurkman called Aggmukes, or the White Sheep. After he had extirpated his rival, Julian Shah the son of Qura Usut in A D 1467, and put all his relations to death he engaged in a war with Sultan Abu Sa'ud Mirza king of Persia, who fell into his hands and was slain, A D 1449. Uzzan Hasan from this event became sovereign of a great part of the dominions of the house of Isma'ur. After he had made himself master of Persia he turned his arms in the direction of Turkey, but his career of greatness was arrested by the superior genius of the Turkish emperor, Muhammad II from whom he suffered a signal defeat which terminated his schemes of ambition. He died, after a reign of eleven years, at the age of seventy, on the 7th December, A D 1477, A H 882. Catherine Commenens, who is called by the Persians, Carum Commenash, was married to him. She had a daughter named Martha, married to Shaikh Haider, father of Shāh Ismā'il Safwi, first monarch of the Safiawan dynasty of Persia. Uzzan Hasan was succeeded by his son F'aqūb Bag

Victoria Gaurāma, Princess (وکتوریا گاوراما)

The Princess Victoria Gaurāma, the daughter of his Highness Prince Bir Rājindar Wader, ex-Rāja of Kurg (Coorg), a small principality of Hindustān, situated near the Mysore country; its greatest length is about seventy miles, and the mean breadth about twenty-two miles. Haider 'Ali contrived, in the middle of the last century, to get possession of Kurg by treachery; but in 1787 the young Rāja Bir Rājindar, his prisoner, escaped from confinement, through the aid of several of his subjects, and succeeded in establishing himself in his dominions. At his death, in 1808, he left the succession to an infant daughter, to the exclusion of his brother, to whom of right it belonged, according to ancient usages; but the young princess soon afterwards abdicated in favour of her uncle, with the sanction of the British Government.

The Princess Victoria Gaurāma was born in February, A.D. 1841. The melancholy circumstance of the death of the mother, two days after the birth of the child, seems to have led to increased affection for his offspring on the part of the father, who, from his own previous convictions in favour of Christianity, determined that his favourite daughter should be brought up in the principles of the Christian faith. From this period the Rāja entertained an anxious desire to visit Europe, in order that, when she had arrived at a suitable age, she might be introduced into European society; and thereby receive such impressions as would promote a feeling favourable to Christianity. Accordingly, in the early part of A.D. 1852, the prince quitted India for England, leaving at the city of Benares the rest of his family, consisting of eleven children, with their mothers. On his arrival in England the object of his visit was made known to the Queen, who at once most kindly and graciously consented to become sponsor to the young princess. The baptismal ceremony was performed by the Archbishop of Canterbury in the private chapel of Buckingham Palace on the 30th June, A.D. 1852, in the presence of Her Majesty, the Prince Consort, and numerous other members of the Royal Family: the princess received the prefix of "Victoria" to her Indian name of "Gaurāma," by which she had been called after one of the pagan divinities of her country. She married a British officer named Campbell.

The princess is said to have become a good scholar under the care of those charged with her education. Her personal appearance was exceedingly interesting and intelligent, and the complexion of her skin but little darker than that which Europeans call a deep brunette. Her portrait, which Winterhalter painted by command of Her Majesty, is at Buckingham Palace.

Wazir 'Alī Khān (وزیر علی خان), for a short time Nawāb of Lucknow, was the adopted son of Nawāb 'Asaf-ud-daula, on whose death, in September, A.D. 1797, he was raised to the masnad of Awadh at Lucknow, but after a short interval, grounds for disputing the authenticity of his pretensions having been established, he was deposed on the 21st January, A.D. 1798, by Sir John Shore, and Saādāt 'Alī Khān, the brother of the late Nawāb, was placed on the masnad. Wazir 'Alī was sent to Benares, where he murdered Mr. Cherry, the Political Agent, on Monday the 14th January, A.D. 1799, 8th Shāban, A.H. 1213. He at first fled to Butwal, and afterwards took refuge with the Rājā of Jaugir, a powerful independent chief, who refused to give him up unless under a stipulation of his life being spared. To this it was thought prudent to accede, and, being accordingly given up to the British in December following, he was brought down to Calcutta and confined at Fort William in a bomb-proof, divided by iron-gratings in three parts, the longest, in the centre, was occupied by Wazir 'Alī, and the other two by sentries, one English and one native. After many years captivity, he was transported to a more suitable prison, in the palace built for Tipu Sulṭān's family in the fort of Vellore, where the females of his family subsequently joined him, and there he died. Lord Teignmouth, in the late of his father, states that Wazir 'Alī died in rigorous confinement in Fort William, but this appears to be a mistake. His death took place in the month of May, A.D. 1817, Rabi'ul Awwal, 1232, after 17 years 3 months and 2 days' confinement, and was buried at Kasī Bighun, close to a tomb of one of the sons of Tipu Sulṭān. He was then in his 36th year. His mother was the wife of a Farsi. The expenses of his marriage in A.D. 1795 amounted to 30 lakhs of rupees, where 70 rupees were sufficient to defray all the cost of his funeral in A.D. 1817, a strange reverse of fortune.

Wazir Khan (وزیر خان), surname of Muhammad Tahir, an officer of the rank of 5000, who served under the emperor 'Alamgir. In the latter years of his life he was appointed governor of Malwa, where he died in A.D. 1672. His nephew, Rāfi Khān, is the author of the Hamul-e-Hindavi.

Yazdi (يزدى), author of a treatise concerning divine love, called Risālat fi bayān Muhabbat.

Yazdijard I. (يزدجرد), surnamed Al-

'Athim or Al-'Asim, the Smiler (the Isdigerdes of the Greeks), whom some authors term the brother, and others the son, of his predecessor, Bahām IV. whom he succeeded to the throne of Persia, A.D. 401. His monarch is represented by Persian historians to have been a cruel prince, and, we are told, the nation rejoiced when he was killed by the kick of a horse. He died after a reign of 16 years, and was succeeded by his son Bahām V.

Yazdijard II. (يزدجرد), (the second Isdigerdes of the Greeks), succeeded his father, Bahām V. to the throne of Persia, A.D. 438. He was a wise and brave prince, and reigned 18 years.

Yazdijard III. (يزدجرد), the son of Shahryār and grandson of Khuro Parvez, was raised to the throne of Persia after the dethronement of the queen Arzami Dakht, A.D. 632. He is the Isdigerdes III. of the Greeks, and a contemporary of 'Umar, the Khalif of Arabia. This prince, who appears to have been as weak as he was unfortunate, sat upon the throne only nine years; that being the period from his elevation to the battle of Nahawand, which decided the fate of Persia, and which, from its date, A.D. 641, fell under the dominion of the Arabian Khalifs. For a period of ten years afterwards this monarch was a fugitive, and possessed no power whatever. He first fled to Sīstān, then to Khurāsān, and lastly to Marv, where he was murdered A.D. 651, A.H. 31. He was the last sovereign of the house of Sāsān, a dynasty which ruled Persia for 415 years. It is from the commencement of his reign that the Persian Era, which is in use to this day in Persia, is called after him the Era of Yazdijard. It began on Tuesday the 16th Juno, A.D. 632, 20th Rabi' I. A.H. 11, being only eight days after Muhammad's death.

Yazid (يزيد بن ابو سفيان), the son of Abū Sufiān. He died by the plague that raged in Syria in the year A.D. 639. The mortality both among men and beasts was so terrible that the Arabs call that year "Am-ul-ramada," or the year of destruction. By this pestilence the Saracens lost 25,000 men, among whom were Abū 'Obeida, general of the Saracen army at Syria, Sarjabil, ibn-Husana, formerly Muhammad's secretary, and Yazid ibn-Sufiān.

Yazid I. (يزيد بن معاوية), the son of

Mu'āwīa and the second Khalif of the house of Umayya. His inauguration was performed at Damascus on the same day that his father died, viz. on the new moon of the month of Rajab, corresponding with the 7th April, A.D. 660, 1st Rajab, A.H. 60. He was a man of considerable taste and refinement, an eloquent orator, and an admired poet. Some specimens of his composition, which are still extant, display no ordinary powers of mind. The first and the last lines of the ode with which the bard of Persia, the celebrated Hāfiz, opens his magnificent Diwan, are borrowed from Yazid. It was once sarcastically asked of Hāfiz, "How could a distinguished poet like yourself stoop to borrow from Yazid, who was not only an usurper but also the murderer of Imānī Husain?" He answered, "Which of you, seeing a dog running away with a diamond, would not stop the brute, and rescue the jewel from its unclean mouth?" By Persian authors Yazid is never mentioned without abomination, and ordinarily this imprecation is added to his name, "La'nat-ullāh," that is "the curse of God be upon him," in reference not to his vices, but to the death of Husain, the son of 'Alī, whom he first of all attempted to destroy by poison, and afterwards caused to be killed, with all his family, on the plains of Karbala. Under his khilāfat the Musalmāns conquered all Khurāsān and Khwārizm, and put the territories of the princes of Samarkand under contribution. The motto of his seal was "God is our Lord." Yazid died on the 31st October, A.D. 683, 4th Rabi' I. A.H. 64, in the 39th year of his age, after he had reigned 3 years and 8 months, and was succeeded by his son Mu'āwīa II. His mother's name was Mai-sana, a Bedouin of the tribe of Kalabi. Yazid was a debauchee, and is represented by some Moslem writers as an atheist.

Yazid II (يزيد بن عبد الملك), the ninth Khalif of the race of Umayyad, was the son of the Khalif Abdulmalik. He succeeded Umar, the son of 'Abdul Aziz, in A.D. 720, A.H. 101, in Syria, and died after a reign of four years, A.D. 724 A.H. 105. His brother Hashim succeeded him.

Yazid III (يزيد بن ولد), the twelfth Khalif of the house of Umayyad, succeeded his father, Walid II in Syria A.D. 744, A.H. 126, and died the same year after he had reigned six months. He was succeeded by his brother Ibrahim.

Yunas bin - Abdur Rahman - al-Yuktaini (يونس بن عبد الرحمن), a celebrated Shi'ite traditionalist. Amongst other works he wrote: al-Hal al-Hal, the Ikhtiyar al-Hal, and the Tarikh al-Hal. He is said to have made forty-five pilgrimages to Mecca and fifty-four Umras when he merely visited the sacred city and to have written the surprising number of 1,000 vols., containing the opinions of the Shi'ite Imams. He died at Medina A.D. 823 A.H. 205.

Yusaf of Ahmadabad (يوسف احمد), author of an Arabic work on Theology, called Al-Furud Yusuf.

Yusaf (يوسف), author of a collection of letters called Bat'ni al-Isha or wonders of letter-writing. It is also called Isha Yusuf.

Yusaf Abu'l Hajj (يوسف ابوالحاجي), one of the Moorish Kings of Granada and the founder of the celebrated palace of the Alhambra. He ascended the throne of Granada in the year A.D. 1333 and his personal appearance and mental qualities were such as to win all hearts. He established schools in all the villages, with simple and uniform systems of education. He obliged every hamlet of more than twelve houses to have a mosque, and prohibited various abuses and indecencies that had been introduced into the ceremonies of religion and the festivals and public amusements of the people. His attention was also directed towards improving the great architectural works commenced by his predecessors, and erecting others on his own plans. The Alhambra, which had been founded by the good Muhammad ibn-Alfahm, was now completed. He constructed the beautiful gate of Justice, forming the grand entrance to the fortress, which he finished in A.D. 1348. He likewise adorned many of the courts and halls of the palace, as may be seen by the inscriptions on the walls, in which his name repeatedly occurs.

In the year A.D. 1354, as he was one day praying in the royal mosque of the Alhambra, a fanatic rushed suddenly from behind, and plunged a dagger in his side. He was borne to the royal apartments, but expired almost immediately. The murderer was cut to pieces and his limbs hung in public, to gratify the fury of the populace.

Yusaf Adil Shah (يوسف عادل شاه), whose original name was Yusaf 'Adil Khan, was the founder of the 'Adil Shahi dynasty of Bijapur. He was a nobleman in the service of Muhammad Shah II Buhmani, king of the Deccan. When the Sultan left this world and dissensions began to prevail in the kingdom, most of the foreign officers and soldiers attached themselves to Yusaf 'Adil Khan, who seeing the ministers of Sultan Muhammad II the successor of the late king, bent on his destruction, withdrew himself from Ahmadabad, with his family and followers, to his government of Bijapur, and resolving to become the founder of a kingdom, he began to add to his territories by conquest. In the year A.D. 1589, A.H. 89, he, with the assent of Malik Ahmad Bahi, assumed the title of Shah, and read the Khutba of Bijapur in his own name. Yusaf 'Adil Shah died at Bijapur in A.D. 1610, A.H. 1016 of a dropsical disorder, after he had reigned with great prosperity 21 years, in the 75th year of his age, and was succeeded by his son Isma'il 'Adil Shah.

Yusaf Hamadani (يوسف همدانی), a celebrated learned Muslim of Hamadan, who died in the year A.D. 1111, A.H. 506.

Yusaf Khan (يوسف خان), governor of Sindh, who lived in the time of the emperor Shah Jahan. In his time (says Munshi Juttullah) he built in Idrah in Tatta, a splendid mosque, where all true believers gather together twice a year and perform the daily service. Its inscription is in beautiful large Nastahk characters, as follows —

“Yusuf Khan the powerful lord erected this place of worship as high as his fortune. The view of its minaret is found by cherubim — the temple of Mikal for the virtuous.”
A.D. 1633, A.H. 1043.

There are upwards of 400 mosques in the city of Idrah (says Juttullah), but almost all of them are now in decay. There is also a Grand Mosque (Jami Masjid) begun by Shah Jahan in A.D. 1647 A.H. 1057 and finished by Amirzadeh in A.H. 1072. The edifice is a magnificent one about 200 yards long by 30 broad, built of baked bricks and mortar. The whole set is roofed with 100 domes, every one of them painted in a different style from another. The inscriptions carved round the great arch of stone and those upon the two Iata stones, are excellently done in large letters. In short, the whole scene presents a picture of beauty and solemnity to the spectator.

Yusaf Khan, Mirza (يوسف خان), a Mansabdar of 2000 in the 30th year of Akbar, and subsequently governor of Kashmir. Later still served with distinction under Abul Fazi in the Deccan. Died Jam II A.H. 1010, was a native of Mashhad, of the Sayyid tribe.

Yusaf, Mir (يوسف میر اسرارآدی), of Astrabad, who was living in A.D. 1580, A.H. 988, and wrote a chirologram on the death of the poet Kasim Kahi, who died that year.

Yusaf, Maulana of Nishapur (يوسف مولانا نیشاپور), is the first person who wrote a book on the art of writing poetry in Persian. He flourished about two hundred years after Khwāh lmi-Ahmad of Bihār who had also written on the same subject in Arabic.

Yusaf Shah Purbī (يوسف شاه پوری), the son of Bihak Shah whom he succeeded to the throne of Benāul in A.D. 1473 A.H. 887. He reigned eight years and died in A.D. 1482. His son Isha Shah succeeded him.

Yusaf, Shaikh (يوسف شيخ), first king of Multan. The introduction of the Muhammadism into Multan says Ishahta, first took place in the latter part of the first century of the Hijra about the year A.D. 700, by the conquest of that country by Muhammad Kasma, after whom until the reign of Sultan Mahmud of Ghazni, no account is to be traced of its history. Mahmud conquered Multan from the infidels, but on the decline of the Ghazni power, the inhabitants succeeded in expelling the Muhammadans and establishing a separate government. From the period of its subjugation by Muhammad Ghori it remained tributary to Delhi until the year A.D. 1443, A.H. 847, when the governor of that province, like most others of the kingdom at the same period, declared independence, after which time several princes reigned in succession. The first of these was one Shaikh Yusaf, a man of learning, wisdom, and high character, of the tribe of Quraysh, whom the inhabitants of Multan selected to be ruler over the people of Multan and Uchihar, when the public prayers were read and money coined in his name. Shaikh Yusaf had reigned but two years when his father-in-law, Rāe Sāhra, of the tribe of Langa, having seized him, sent him under a guard to Delhi, and mounted the throne under the title of Qutb-uddin Mahmūd Langa. Abū'l Fuzl in the Ayīn-i Akbarī, assigns seventeen years for the reign of Shaikh Yusaf.

He died about the year A.D. 665, A.H. 40, some say that he died in A.D. 673, A.H. 51. He is the earliest authority on the Ilm-ul-Turayk and may be called the father of the law of inheritance. Muhammad is reported to have said to his followers—'The most learned among you in the laws of inheritance is Zaid,' and the Khalifs 'Umar and 'Uthman considered him without an equal as a judge, a juriconsult, a calculator in the division of inheritances, and a reader of the Quran.

Za'ifa Khatun (زعيفه خانون), sister to Sultān Sunjar, married to Malik Tāj-uddin Abū'l Fuzl, a descendant of the royal family of Amīr bin-Laus Zainab (زینب بنت جحش), the daughter of Jihash and the wife of Muhammad. She was formerly married to Zaid, the emancipated slave of the prophet. Towards the end of the fifth year of the Hijra, A.D. 626 Muhammad, going into the house of Zaid, did not find him at home, but happening to spy his wife, he could not conceal the impression made upon him, but cried out, "Praise be to God, who turneth men's hearts as he pleaseth." Zainab heard him and told it to her husband when he came home. Zaid, who had been greatly obliged to Muhammad, was very desirous to gratify him, and offered to divorce his wife. Muhammad pretended to dissuade him from it, but Zaid easily perceiving how little he was in earnest, actually divorced her. Muhammad thereupon took her to wife and celebrated the nuptials with extraordinary magnificence, keeping open house upon the occasion. She died nine years after the death of Muhammad, in the year A.D. 641, A.H. 20.

Zainab (زینب بنت خزیمه), the daughter of Khuzaymah was also one of the wives of Muhammad and died two months after the preceding one, in the year A.D. 641, A.H. 20.

Zainab (زینب), a daughter of Muhammad married to Abū'l As. This man, who was an unbeliever, was taken prisoner in the battle of Badr and the prophet would not have given his son-in-law to him and enrolled him among his disciples, but Abū'l As remained stubborn in unbelief. Muhammad then offered to set him at liberty on condition of his turning to him his daughter. To this he agreed and Zaid, the faithful freedman of the prophet, was sent with several companions to Mecca to bring Zainab to Medina, where after her arrival, Abū'l As was released.

son of Imām Husain, and the fourth Imām of the race of Ali. His mother's name was Salata or Shahr Bano, said to be the daughter of Yazdijard III. king of Persia. She was one of the captives when Persia was conquered, and sold to 'Ali, who gave her to his son Husain. It is said that the Khalif Walid I. suspecting him of a design upon the Khalifat, said to him, alluding to his mother having been exposed for sale as a slave, "You are unworthy to reign, as being the son of a slave." The Imām answered, "Hagar, the mother of Ishmael, the son of Abraham, was a slave, yet Muhammad was descended from her." The Khalif blushed and was silent. He was born in A.D. 657, A.H. 37, and died in the reign of the Khalif Walid I. in the month of October, A.D. 713, Muharram, A.H. 95. He was buried in the cemetery called Baqir in Medina, close to his uncle Imām Hasan's tomb.

Zain-ul-'Abidin, Sultan (زين العابدين), son of Sultan Sikandar, ascended the throne of Kashmere, after taking prisoner his brother 'Ali Shāh in a battle, in 1423. This prince improved the country more than any of his predecessors. He built bridges, towns and forts, and erected at Nanshabra a noble palace, twelve stories high, each story of fifty rooms. He also enlarged and beautified the city of Srinagar, his capital. He died in A.D. 1474, after a reign of 52 lunar years, and was succeeded by his son Haidar Shāh, who, after reigning little more than a year, was killed by a fall from his terrace, A.D. 1475, and was succeeded by his son Sulṭān Hasan.

Zuhak or Zohak (ضحاک), or Azdahāk, a tyrant of Persian mythology, who overcame Jamshid, king of Persia, in a battle, and became the king of that country. There are various accounts of the descent of Zuhak. Some say he was an Arabian but descended from Quomars (q +), others trace his descent to Shaddad, and term him a Syrian and it has even been conjectured that he was the Astvages of the Greeks. All agree in one fact that he was of a cruel and sanguinary temper. He is described as having had two dreadful cancers on his shoulders which the Persian fabulists have changed into snakes, whose hunger nothing could appease but the brains of human beings: two of his subjects were slain daily to furnish the horrid meal till the angry indignation of Kavi or Gava a blacksmith of Isfahan whose two sons were on the point of being sacrificed relieved the empire from this tyrant and raised Faridun a prince of the Pishadian dynasty to the throne. The fable perhaps indicates in ancient subjugation of Persia by a Median or Arab tribe who used the serpent a disguise for their standard. There is a ruin near Bamun called by the people 'The Castle of Zohak'.

ذوالفقار خان امیر الامرا (نصرت)

(حک), styled Nasrat Jang, whose former title was Yathid Khan, was the son of Asad Khan, a nobleman, of the reign of 'Alamgir. He was born in A.D. 1637, A.H. 1047, and held several appointments under that emperor. On the accession of Bahadur Shah in the year A.D. 1707, A.H. 1119, the title of Amir-ul-Umra was conferred on him with the government of the Deccan. It was by his aid and intrigues that Jihanda Shah, after the death of his father Bahadur Shah, overcame all his brothers and ascended the throne of Delhi, when he was appointed to be chief wazir but after the defeat of that emperor in the battle against Irukha-savar, he was taken up and strangled by order of the latter as a punishment for his conduct. His head, with that of the late emperor Jihanda Shah, who had also been put to death in prison, was carried on poles and their bodies hanging feet upwards across an elephant were exposed in the new emperor's train when he made his triumphant entry to the palace at Delhi. This event took place in January A.D. 1713, Zul-hijja A.H. 1124. The said minister, Asad Khan, Zulfiqar Khan's father was compelled to attend the procession, accompanied by the ladies of his family as spectators of their own disgrace. Asad Khan, who, in hopes of making peace with the new emperor, had provided his son to visit him and had thus put him in his power, with tears in his eyes wrote the following chronogram on his death: نمود ابراهیم المل را مران (Abrahim sacrificed Ishmael). It is related in the Nafahat that at his death, when they were carrying him for burial, a large flock of birds, of a kind that was never seen before, overshadowed his coffin to the grave. He died in February, A. H. 800, Zī-Qāda, A. H. 240, and a chapel was built over his tomb in Egypt, where a number of other holy men are buried. His work called Tatarrūt al-Ikkbār contains the Memoirs of this famous saint.

NOTE

In the article on Alauddin I. (Alauddin), at page 49 the statement of Mr. Beale that the emperor's children were all the issue of one mother seems to demand correction. According to the latest investigations the two old Muzis — Muhammad who predeceased his father and Mu'izzam, who succeeded to the throne — were the offspring of a Hindu mother while Kambukhash was the son of a Georgian from the Zenari of the eldest brother of the emperor the ill-fated Dauri. The Persian lady named by Beale was the mother of three, or at most of four of the emperor's offspring. Beale himself partially neutralises his error at page 46 article Akbar Prince. (Vide Alauddin, by Stanley Lane-Poole. "Ruler of India" series, 1893.)
